Here's another slant on the same picture in the form of a ballyhoo. The driver of the car, announced the production's highlights through horns, placed where the holes are. The car was parked at the busiest sections of the city and whenever a crowd gathered the announcer would begin his talk. While the auto cruised about the streets, music was played through the horns and this did a lot to attract attention to the picture. On the announcement gag, Dave had a good bet since there is nothing more valuable than a personal contact of this sort.

With show merchandising such as this being turned out daily by Dave, it is small wonder that he keeps his house up among the leaders of our up-to-the-minute Canadian showmen and we know he will continue the good work.

Stan MacNeill Has A Gag That Perhaps You've A Spot For

Did you ever wonder what use you could make of certain exit doors in your house? Or perhaps you're not in a position to make much use of them. At any rate, we have a stunt so good, that we are passing it along to the rest of the Club in the event that it may help somebody else.

The display of photos we are showing will give you an idea of the angle, hit upon, and used by S. H. "Stan" MacNeill, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Smith Falls, Ont., Can., and which he is finding very profitable. To create a display like this, all you need is a paint brush and a lot of paint.

On the inside of his exit doors, Stan painted his coming attractions and since he seems to be one swell brush wielder there's no use remarking about the beauty of the work. Here's an angle that anyone with a little ingenuity can use and we're more than glad to pass it on. Another advantage of this thing, we want to state, before the question comes up, is that it can be washed off with a wet cloth and thus you have a perfect "canvas" for your next attraction.

From the other photo you can glean that Stan must take a great deal of pride in his theatre, as he has taken the trouble to paint an institutional plug on the windows of his car, which, since he travels a great deal during the course of business, benefits the theatre mightily. It is too bad that the photo we have on hand showing his window display on "Sally" was not suitable for reproduction due to the darkness of the print but we would like you to know that it was a very nice tie-up and was engineered with a local pharmacist.

Many thanks, Stan for passing this one along to us and we want to state that with the kind of work you're displaying up there in Smith Falls, business has got to be above par.

Jos. Borenstein Is Still Very Active In Pawtucket, R. I.

One of the many fine things accomplished by Manager Joseph S. Borenstein on his campaign for "Anna Christie" playing at the Public-Imperial Theatre, Pawtucket, R. I., was a cut-out of Garbo in the lobby that was hooked up to receive and give information about the picture.

In the head of the Garbo cut-out was an ordinary telephone mouthpiece and just above was a sign inviting people to ask questions about Greta in her first all-talking picture "Anna Christie."

Concealed behind the cut-out was a loud speaker from a radio set. All this was set compactly on an easel. On the other end, the apparatus consisted of a head set connected with a mouthpiece in the lobby. Another mouthpiece connected with the loud speaker in the lobby giving a simple telephone system amplified on one end by the chassis of a radio set.

The entire apparatus cost $1 for wire and another dollar for a battery; the radio set and incidentals being borrowed from a radio dealer. Of course, the cost of a girl to answer questions and ballyhoo the picture was extra but this was quite small in comparison to the publicity derived from the stunt.

Good work, Joe, we had been wondering what had happened to you since your name did not seem to appear so frequently on the Club pages.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

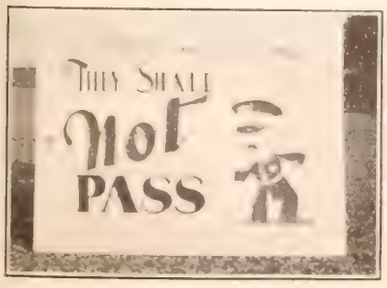
Billy Stillman Is Selling Shows By Using Good Stunts

From the way Billy Stillman has started off it looks as though the Ritz Theatre on Central Avenue, Jersey City is going to be on the map plenty. As most of his friends and fellow club members are aware, Billy has just been transferred to the managerial post at the Ritz.

As a starter for his activities he made up these door hangers on "Officer O'Brien," which let the people know that there was a theatre in the town offering the best in entertainment in addition to featuring a showman de luxe. The heralds were made up in red and black and presented a striking effect when hung on the cars.

From the copy you will be able to get the idea as to their being read. We know if we saw a summons hanging on our auto door we'd more than look. Another angle Billy has worked into his copy is the starting times of the feature, which, believe us is certainly appreciated, as it saves people the trouble of calling up and if they happen to be in the mood for a picture and are looking at the heralds, well "there's no time like the present."

Oke, Billy, you know we have a hunch that you're going to more than bring that house up among the leaders in the Jersey division since in the past you have been displaying some mighty fine examples of showmanship. So in order that our prediction will pan out right it is going to be necessary that you keep us posted frequently, then the Club too can see what you are doing.



Here's the Reason Why No "Crashers" Hit the Imperial

Are you ever pestered by persons requesting passes? Or perhaps the guy who "knows the manager, I'll get you a pass" bothers you. Well, it remained for Albert J. Siner, assistant manager of the Imperial Theatre in Pawtucket, R. I., to discover a solution to this problem.

When people used to bother him and Joseph S. Borenstein for passes they had to do some tall talking. And by doing so much talking they were wasting valuable time. Then came the great idea. A card was made up to be used for cases of this sort, and when you take a look at it below, you will have to agree that it sure takes the cake.

Where this laugh riot was hung, we don't know. Perhaps it was used as a calling card by one of those six foot nine inch doormen we see in front of the New York Paramount (if that size standard is observed in Pawtucket) and handed to persons who say "'Sall right, I know the manager." So if there is a spot anywhere that you can use it (no doubt about it, there's a pass "kibitzer" in every town) make up a small one and hang it in back of the doorman for a day or two, so that when your regular crashers come along, all that will be necessary is to point to the new sign.

Okay, Albert, we believe that this is going to be welcomed by a good many showmen around the country and we want to thank you for passing it along to us. Give our regards to Mr. Borenstein and tell him we want to hear from him again mighty soon, since his activities in the past have been very interesting.

J. V. Ward Uses a Capital Catchline For His Capitol

Just as a sort of memorandum or something we'd like to announce that we are in receipt of the monthly program made up by John V. Ward, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Niagara Falls, Ont., Canada.

The program, in the form of a calendar, measures 5½ by 9 inches and carries the attractions for the entire month and, in addition, a small "straight" calendar on the bottom of the page, as well as a plug for the sound.

An announcement along with the attraction carries a notice to the effect that any one desiring the program mailed to their home might procure it by calling up the theatre. We like the nice catch line Ward uses as head, working in the Capitol name in this manner: "Capitol Entertainment—for the Month of April." His entire layout is very readable and no doubt is well received by his patrons, since, if we recall arightly, he has an unusually good mailing list.

Thanks, John, for letting us see this one and, incidentally, with summer rushing right along, every time we look at that folder of Niagara Falls, we sort of long to go there, but, then, you never can tell—we might get there yet and if we do, you can bet we're going to drop in and see you.

Grant Pemberton Sold This Picture By Novel Angles

With Spring on the way it seemed time for Grant Pemberton, manager of the Orpheum Theatre in Salt Lake City, Utah, to stage a wedding in his theatre.

By working the wedding in with his showing of "Their Own Desire," he was enabled to let his house in for a load of publicity and put the picture across with a bang. About the time his campaign started, one of the local department stores was running a fashion revue. He secured the services of the mannequins, through the courtesy of the department store, and featured them with the wedding.

In order to put the contest over successfully he plugged it in the manner which the first photo on the upper left shows. This gag created a lot of comment and was good for many laughs. The rest of the photos will give you an idea of how he plugged the picture and the wedding in his lobby and window displays. Some very valuable newspaper space was secured by him, through running, in co-operation with the local merchants, a double truck ad. The merchants represented in the ad were the sponsors for the stage wedding and supplied the outfits for the bride and groom.

All of the stores distributed heralds and the department store announced the wedding and the picture attraction over the air during their radio period. The newspapers also gave the house a big play. A contest of this sort, when handled the way it was, had to click, and though we don't know the final results it seems reasonable to believe that Pemberton rolled up a new record for house attendance.

William B. Shugars Tells You How He Ties Up Newspaper

Here's an idea that was used to good advantage by William B. Shugars, manager of the Hollywood Theatre in Pottsville, Pa., which we think will be of great interest to certain of the Club members to whose cases it may apply.

The ad we are reproducing was run in one of the local papers. By furnishing the free tickets to the paper, they agreed to run this co-operative ad, which, as you note, plugs the theatre and the paper. Four sentences were carried in the copy. The sentences, according to instructions, were to be inserted in whatever want ads they were left out of, and in this manner the paper was assured of having all the want ads read.

This stunt has been worked with great success by many of our members and it is our opinion that it is an aid to building business. If you are located in a small town, you are in an ideal position to run an ad of this sort as it is a "natural" for your locality, since the rates for local papers, as a rule are not very high, and they won't mind co-operating with you on this stunt.

We believe that if you try the idea once you will be more than satisfied with the results, and the paper will, too. If you do not wish to use first and second prizes, you can offer free tickets to all correctly completing the ads. We want to thank Shugars for giving us the low-down on the way he sells his shows and we want him to know that this angle will more than be appreciated by his fellow members because, as we stated in the first paragraph, it's bound to fit in some place.

Hold Everything—We're Batting In The 500 Class Now

We can't help this one either. If you remember a little while back we ran a story on Paul Binstock, in which, if you'll pardon our bowing, we treated ourself to a slap on the back, by reason of the fact that our prediction regarding a promotion for Paul came true.

Just a couple of weeks ago we made the same statement concerning Walter Leach, assistant manager to Charley Brennan at the Rialto Theatre in Newark, N. J. "Working with a showman like Charlie," quoted we, "if Walter doesn't blossom forth as a manager before many moons pass, it will be a mystery to us."

Well, the big news is just this: As a direct result of Charlie's teachings, Walter is now ensconced in the position of relief manager and we want to state that since that's the nearest step to managing a house of his own "it won't be long now." Congratulations, Walter for the fine showing you are making for yourself over there in Jersey. Keep that sort of work up and you know what the reward will be. Oak?

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Press Secures a Lot of Publicity From Local Clubs

Matt Press, manager of the Saenger Theatre, Hope, Kansas, staged a very successful "Song Festival" in connection with the Junior Parent Theachers Association of Hope, Arkansas. Not only was he successful in having the schools cooporate with him, but they also declared a half holiday and the students personally sold $100 worth of tickets.

Small town operators must, of necessity, take full advantage of all opportunities. That Press does so is further emphasized by a recent Theatre Bridge Party which he promoted in connection with the Professional Women's Clubs of Hope, Arkansas, and which attracted approximately 500 women from Hope and adjoining townships to attend.

The ladies provided their own card tables and playing cards, and prizes were secured to the amount of $250.00 from the local merchants, free of all costs to the theatre. Press supplied score pads and talley cards which he took advantage of to advertise coming attractions to his theatre. To make positive that his plans would not miscarry, due to inclement weather, he had each member of the Professional Women's Clubs pledged to guarantee at least one table for four people to attend this event, which assured him of success in advance and the affair was carried through to a very successful conclusion.

When a man can tie-up with the Women's Clubs, he is an "ace" showman. Right? So let's know what you are doing, Press, and send us a photograph of yourself with your next contribution.

Sullivan Used a Novel Ballyhoo To Plug Attraction

A real live ballyhoo proved a big help to the business hung up by H. C. Sullivan, manager of the State Theatre in South Bend, Ind., on "Three Live Ghosts."

Though we are rather late in presenting this account we feel, as we have stated many times before, that this angle can be found useful in many other pictures of the "mystery" type, so it is for that reason we are passing it along to the rest of the Club.

The photo shows three men completely covered by white sheets with copy on the back making up the words: 3 Live Ghosts, State—Now. The men wandered all around the town, stopping as frequently as possible in the busy centers and in front of the local schools, attracting plenty of attention wherever they went. This stunt proved very effective and since it does not appear to involve any great expenditure, we are sure that its value was proven in a box office jump.

We want to thank Sullivan for letting us see this one for as we stated before, when we get an idea that will be of mutual benefit to all showmen nothing pleases us more than to pass it along. We hope that "we will hear more from this active showman in the very near future. So what do you say "H. C."? Keep us posted as to what you are doing to sell your shows down there in South Bend.

Are You All Set?

Columbia Prosperity Month Contest will come to a close at the end of April. It's only a short time off and you should be preparing to send in your material. Make sure that everything is plainly marked with your name and the name of your theatre, in this way mistakes will be practically eliminated.

Wherever photos are included, make sure that they won't be creased or folded over while in transit. Make up all of your contributions in a compact bundle and address it as follows: Columbia Contest Judges, c/o Managers' Round Table Club, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

As soon as all the material received has been carefully gone over the decisions of the judges will be announced, and at the same time a complete resume of each winners material will be published or noted on these pages.

Here's hoping YOU win some of the prize money. "Chick"

Hoy Simons Showed A Local Merchant How To Boost Biz.

More and more each season, showmen seem to be forging ahead and applying the show principle to other businesses. It remained for Hoy O. Simons, manager of the Fayette Theatre in Washintgon Court House, Ohio, to show a local merchant how to almost double his business on a Saturday and also get in a lot of good-will for both.

The merchant under discussion, a local barber, had three or four more competitors in the town, who offer haircuts for children at a reduced price. The mothers would give the kiddies forty cents to go to the highest priced barber and the kids would go to one of the others, making fifteen cents on the deal, which they would spend for candy or something else.

Simons worked on the situation with the barber and came to the conclusion that by offering a ten-cent rebate ticket to the theatre with every child's haircut, the kiddies would sense the value of the offer and patronize the barber shop. This plan was tried out and it went over very successfully. Whereas in the past, the barber had been patronized by about six or seven children, business shot up on the first Saturday the plan was put into effect, to twenty-seven cuttings. For every rebate ticket given away the theatre received a dime from the barber.

To ballyhoo this new angle, window cards were placed in the barber shop and on the theatre's billboards, as well as about the town. Heralds were also distributed. Incidentally, while we are discussing a few of Hoy's activities, we would like to say a couple of words about his house organ. This program is made up in the form of cards, printed in black on rose, measuring nine and one-half by seven inches, and carrying the attractions for the entire month on one side. The other side bears a little "personal" column written by Hoy and five columns of very interesting news concerning the hobbys and other things of movie stars. This program is no doubt well liked by the patrons of the theatre and we feel that its every issue is looked forward to by them.

Fine work, Hoy, it is certainly a source of pleasure to us to see the good things you showmen are accomplishing out there around Ohio and we want you to know that your activities will always find a welcome on the Club pages

E. E. Bair Gives His Shorts Plenty Of Hot Publicity

Since we made our recent statement concerning the importance of plugging short subjects, showmen all over the country have been rallying to our cause, offering us examples of the way they agree with our declarations.

When Educational released "He Trumped Her Ace," a comedy with a "bridge" background, Bair decided that here was a picture that merited plugging, due to the interest his patrons take in the bridge game. As a result he broke in the papers with the ad we are reproducing. Need we say that he is a showman de luxe? By taking advantage of an item that appeared in a Cleveland newspaper, he created an ad that knocked them silly. And if it didn't sell, Columbus landed in Pittsburgh.

From March 20th Issue
Cleveland News

Trumped Her Ace; Ousted, Gets Divorce!

SEATTLE, Wash., March 20.—(By A. P.)—Because he trumped his wife's ace in a bridge game, William Ellis was a single man today.

"In spite of the presence of two of our friends who were playing against us," Ellis told the court yesterday, "my wife completely lost her temper when I spoiled her play. She threw an alarm clock at me and knocked out one of my teeth. Then she packed my clothes and ordered me out of the house."

Judge Robert M. Jones granted him a divorce.

THE COMEDY
"He Trumped Her Ace"
Appears in conjunction with the feature "STREET OF CHANCE" which starts at the American Wednesday

The other illustration is a bridge tally card which he gave away to all women attending the theatre. The card was made up in very attractive colors and most certainly was put to use by the recipients. So when a showman like Bair goes to work and makes a splurge on his short subjects, they must have merit. When you get an interesting short, do you go to sleep on it? Why? Let your patrons know you have something out of the ordinary for them. We won't declare that every short you book is a knock-out. Far from it. But it is a cinch that you are going to run across some dandy ones.

Get your patrons in the habit of knowing that when you advertise a short subject they are going to receive a little more "show" than usual and they'll go out satisfied, feeling that they received their money's worth. Not only plug shorts in your ads. Plug them on your screen. Plug them in your house organ, your lobby, your foyer, your heralds, your marquee. We have had the pleasure in the past of showing you what a Southern showman, Colonel J. Barbour Russell, thought of his shorts. He decided they were so good that he presented an entire program of them to the exclusion of the feature picture. The stunt went over like nobody's business and every once in a while after that he would present a program consisting solely of shorts.

Don't forget that your one and two reelers will also lend themselves to color wheels and other novel effects of the sort you often use on your feature pictures. Many a short has helped to sell a pretty weak feature and we feel that a little showmanship, displayed on this angle is never going amiss and before you know it you will find that your patrons will be asking what comedy or acts you are showing in addition to the feature picture. The value of the short, for example, is to be seen in the popularity that followed the Mickey Mouse cartoons. Plugging sold them and plugging will also sell any short you have.

Since we neglected to tell you in the opening paragraphs that Mr. Bair, the showman who started us off on all this discussion, is the manager of the State and American Theatres in East Liverpool, Ohio, we'll do it now. Thanks, "E. E." for showing us what you are doing with your shorts.

Eugene W. Street Profited By Tie-Up With Auto Dealers

Eugene W. Street tied up with the local Essex dealer on a stunt that nedded lots of publicity for "Burning Up" playing at the Carolina Theatre, Greensboro, N. C.

The dealer took and paid for 72 inches during the week and the theatre got a good showing in all the ads. The dealer also paid for the passes used in the tie-up.

In return for the newspaper advertising the car was put on display in the foyer of the theatre three days in advance and three days during the showing of the picture.

The Essex paper ads were usually headed, "Richard Arlen sets new record for thrills and action in "Burning Up" at the Carolina Theatre Thurs.-Fri.-Sat."

The tie-up proved of mutual benefit to both parties and especially to the theatre in publicizing the picture.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

William A. Whyte Is Now Managing New House In Conn.

It is with pleasure that we announce the new whereabouts and "field of operation" of William A. Whyte, one of our veteran Club members who formerly managed the Rialto Theatre in Hartford, Conn., and a great showman, too.

He is now managing the Franklin Theatre in Thompsonville, Conn., and from what we know about his work to date, he is doing a good job of it. We have on hand a clipping from one of the local newspapers, setting forth in detail a speech he made at the local Rotary meeting on the making of sound pictures. When you figure that he has been in town only a short while, you'll agree with us that he deserves to be complimented for making so fine a start.

One of his first moves in exploiting the house was to promote a double truck newspaper ad with the local merchants. This was the first time the stunt had ever been pulled in the town. And when it broke it sure had them talking. Another angle that is causing a great deal of comment is the displays he arranges for the front of the theatre, which are always in keeping with the atmosphere of the picture and not just a lot of paper, pictures and cardboard. Fortunately, his two-page spread and display "broke" in time for the Anniversary Week and the theatre was packed for the entire celebration.

Well, "W.H." we'll repeat again that you're certainly starting off on the right foot and so long as you continue the way you started there's absolutely very little reason why you shouldn't knock the box office records for a loop. Keep up the good work and when you come into the city don't forget there's always a welcome waiting at Club headquarters for you and the rest of the boys who visit New York.

Korach Created A Flashy Front That Had Them Looking

Here's a front that would do credit to any house in any important city. The display is the creation of Milton W. Korach, manager of the Elmwood Theatre in Buffalo, N. Y.

Korach has been represented on our pages quite often in the past and has supplied his fellow members with some excellent examples of the way he merchandises his attractions. If you will look closely at the cut you will notice that he is using the beaver board letter idea for a sign. The electric lights are worked into the cut-out beaver board and when lit furnish a very effective "flash" as well as dressing up the front of the house like a million dollars.

You can also note the novel effect he has arranged by plugging in the lights over the doors and using, in addition, a piece of awning over each for picture "atmosphere." The entire display shows evidence of considerable care in make-up and we are sure that it delighted the patrons of the house, besides selling them the picture.

We want to thank Korach for keeping us posted on what he is doing up there in Buffalo and we would like him to know that his activities are always a source of great interest to us as they are sure to contain some angle of interest.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Foster Has Found Something Novel By Using This One

At some time in the life of a theatre manager the distressing problem comes up of how to dispose of lost articles which the owners have failed to redeem. The Salvation Army or the local charities were generally the recipients when the manager decided to get rid of them, and it usually happened that after they had been given away someone turned up and exclaimed, "I just remembered that I lost my gloves here about a month ago." You know the rest.

To prevent anything like the above from happening to him, J. H. Foster, manager of the Kenton Theatre in Kenton, Ohio, decided to let his patrons have one more chance to remember where they lost an article. So to that end, he procured a window in a vacant store and displayed all of the articles found at the Kenton which he had on hand, together with a notice announcing the fact. The picture will give you an idea of how it was done.

In the display were gloves, scarfs, pocketbooks, baby's rattles, bottles, and wonder of wonders, A PAIR OF FALSE TEETH. The papers thought so much of Foster's gag they gave it considerable space, and in that manner he let the house in for free publicity as well as a lot of good-will. You will notice in the cut that he was also wide awake enough to make sure that his coming pictures got a plug by posting up a couple of one sheets.

So you see, Foster used some mighty fine judgment in the disposition of his lost articles, and if you have been wondering what to do with yours it would be a good idea for you to scout around town and see whether you can't also land a window.

Thanks, Foster, for passing this along to us. We'd like to hear more of your work out there in Kenton, so don't forget to keep us posted from time to time, so that we can pass on these dandy ideas to the rest of the CLUB.

Sid. Finkelstein Gave Away Radio To Capacity House

One of the many showmen in Brooklyn, N. Y., who always appears to be active, is Sidney Finkelstein, manager of the Oasis Theatre in the Ridgewood district.

The latest account of his work has to do with the radio he promoted from a local dealer and gave away free at the theatre. As is usually the case in the "free radio" stunt, coupons were given to every patron entering the house. The ticket entitled them to participate in the drawing and was stretched along for a period of two weeks.

Since the dealer from whom the radio was procured had three stores, cards plugging the contest and the theatre were placed in the windows. In this manner Finkelstein secured a little more publicity. The radio gag being a winner, it is almost needless for us to say that the house was jammed on the night it was given away. We will state, though, that Sidney handled the crowds nicely and also found time to do a little work on the stage. He received a nice follow-up on the stunt the next day when the local newspapers carried stories announcing the winner and mentioning, of course, the theatre.

We are glad to see that you are keeping in step with the rest of the showmen in Brooklyn, and that your work is appreciated.

Vincent Worked A Local Stunt That You Can Use Too

A. H. Vincent used a lobby stunt that helped to sell Ruth Chatterton's Paramount Picture "Sarah and Son" playing at the Sterling Theatre, Greeley, Colo.

One week in advance, two large frames in the lobby were filled with photos; one frame containing photos of the more prominent Greeley mothers and the other frame—the sons.

A card alongside the photo display announced that two passes would be given to each person recognizing themselves. About 30 photos were used in the two frames and about 15 people claimed the award of a pair of tickets.

Thanks a lot, Vincent, and let's hear from you again real soon.

Beautiful Display Work Does A Lot For Brock's House

There is not only individuality, but extreme beauty in this group of lobby displays, which were designed and executed by W. M. Brock, manager of the Tennessee Theatre, Knoxville, Tenn., for the Publix Circuit.

You will notice that Brock uses a certain distinctive method in laying out his lobby displays, so that they create a favorable impression the moment a patron enters the lobby. A close inspection of the type of work he is doing should offer many ideas to progressive showmen anxious to capitalize on this fine phase of showmanship.

In addition to the three inside and one outside displays, shown with this story, we also want to call attention to the beautiful miniature stage setting arranged on "Son of the Gods" and which apparently from the shadows cast from the lighting was an unusually attractive affair and one we heartily recommend to our many members and readers regardless of what country, town or theatre they are operating.

We hope we are not going into too many adjectives, in raving about this fine work of Mr. Brock's, but really, folks, if you were sitting here at our desk looking at this original group of Mr. Brock's showmanship, you would unquestionably do as much raving as we. However, to get back to our story, just inspect quite closely this fine easel display on "Anna Christie" and if you can pick out the many good points in its construction as well as art work, then perhaps it will suggest to you an idea along similar lines. At any rate inspect each and every one of these displays closely, and see if they don't suggest something for your own.

We would certainly like to hear a whole lot more from W. M. and trust this will be the start-off of a real active batch of contributions from this live-wire showman, whose activities will make mighty fine reading for the pages of the Round Table Club.

National Music Week

May 4th to 10th

This annual event offers tremendous possibilities to live-wire showmen who know how to take advantage of it.

Tie-ups with your various musical organizations, churches, choral unions and societies, special musical attractions in the theatre, over your organ, or through the use of special musical sound pictures, are but a few quick guesses aimed at this one.

The time is short. But not too short for you to be able to work something out to the advantage of everybody concerned, especially your theatre. If your local high school boasts of a good orchestra, give them a night at your theatre. Ditto for any other orchestras in the city (keep away from jazz bands).

One thing you must keep in mind is that National Music Week was created, not for the boosting of interest in popular ditties, but for the better and more classical type of music. Don't spoil it by confusing the idea with some sort of a band contest on the stage of your theatre. Keep to the small local or symphony orchestra idea and aim your appeal to that class of patronage with a love for good music.

Don't let your screen be idle on this one. Make sure that you book special musical sound reels that fit into the spirit of the occasion.

"Chick"

Thank you, kindly, Mr. Brock, and convey our regards to our many boosters and friends down your way, and be sure to tell them that we would like to hear from all of them the first opportunity that presents itself.

Delays Are Dangerous!

(Thanks to P. G.)

NOW is the time to start selling your cooling plant. If you delay too long it will make it all the harder to get the idea over that YOUR theatre is a real summer resort in comfort and fresh air.

Smart showmen sell the idea gradually and subtly to their patrons. They camouflage it by coupling it up with advertisements for big coming attractions within the next month or two. But, every week or so, they get over the fact to patrons that their theatre is the finest summer resort in the world.

When one live-wire was asked why he started so early, his reply was: "What the devil do you want me to do, wait until the hot weather comes; then it is too late and there are no people left to tell, whereas if I start now, when I am packing them in, by June 1st I have every one of them convinced and sold that they cannot afford to stay away from my theatre in the summer time and the only time I do lose them is when they have a two weeks' vacation and go out of town."

There's lots of good horse-sense in what the gentleman has to say. Maybe you never looked at it in just that light. So here's hoping we have created more interest through this little story.

Clay And Fritz Are Two More Of The Reading Live-Wires

While not a new angle, we want to go on record as stating that this truck ballyhoo, as used by George Clay and Walter "Whitey" Fritz to sell "The Lost Zeppelin" is certainly an effective one.

Not only has it pulling power by virtue of the "flash" it creates while being driven about the town but also by knowing how to put it to good use. In this instance the truck was parked in front of the Reading High School fifteen minutes before classes were dismissed for the day. When school "broke" over two thousand pupils were informed of the picture playing at the Arcadia.

Clay and Fritz, the hustling managers of the Arcadia Theatre in Reading, Pa., certainly made good use of the truck. Each week, we believe, it is used to plug the various attractions playing the Warner-Equity Theatres in Reading, so you can see that competition is keen when it comes to thinking up new slants with which to sell the picture. We are glad of the opportunity to show an angle of this sort, as we feel sure that in the future some of our members will probably be playing pictures with an educational appeal and the stunt will come in very handy.

There is, of course, little need of our stating that this reacted very good towards the box office, because when a couple of live-wire showmen set out to do something with a picture it's bound to sell. We want to hear more of the exploits of Clay and Fritz and hope, in the near future to pass them along.

While we are at it, since he was so kind as to favor us with these photos, we mustn't neglect to hand Paul E. Glase a well-deserved compliment for the excellent house organ he makes up in keeping wtih the first run policy of the Astor Theatre, which he manages. The h. o. would do credit to any Broadway house. As a matter of fact, it's a lot better than some we've seen right here in New York.

"Tod" Browning Is Still Putting "Met" Across In Boston

Lots of showmen throughout the country have often expressed the opinion that it must be a "racket" to handle publicity for an established theatre featuring a deluxe policy in a big city. And to show you just how the publicity man has got to keep on the jump every minute of the day we will record some more of Harry "Tod" Browning's work.

"Tod" is the publicity man for the Metropolitan Theatre in Boston, Mass., and as most of our readers are aware, he is one of the most active contributors the ROUND TABLE CLUB lists on its rolls.

Handling the stage as well as the screen end of the Metropolitan he is kept very busy. Recently Paul Ash was booked into the house and the campaign that "Tod" put on would have done credit to two men. Everything in sight was tied-up. Ash was introduced to the Governor of the State and the newspapers played it up big. He was "sold" over the air to the radio audiences. The music stores and wearing apparel stores were all used to feature displays and Ash was worked into almost every possible angle. And when "Tod" saw a record week roll up, he knew that his work had clicked.

We are showing a bunch of photos in order that you may see what else he is doing in Boston. The pictures show an art exhibit, a golf exhibit, one of Harry's coming attraction displays and a coffee serving stunt in the Grand Foyer. All of these have been proven to be tried and true good-will and business getters and are indeed a tribute to his showmanship.

It always affords us a great deal of pleasure to pass along all news of "Tod's" work because we know that the rest of the CLUB members as well as ourselves find it mighty interesting reading and also presents a couple of angles that will be of benefit in selling shows. Thanks, "Tod," for keeping us up on your work and don't forget to keep us informed on all of your future activities.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

METROPOLITAN ACTIVITIES!

"PROMOTION MONTH" is still being observed in the Fox Metropolitan Playhouses. Continuing until April 20th, at which time the awards for the most activity will be given. We hope to publish the winners in our next page of this circuit's activities.

THE NEXT gag month will be named "Sell The Picture" month, and will center, as the title implies, on exploitation angles. And we want to say that if the standard which President Joe Leo proclaims in "Progress" is heeded, the success of the campaign is assured.

IN LOU BRANDT'S Brooklyn paragraphs we find that:

MANAGER SACKS of the Embassy Theatre has loads of fun with his gift nights. The patrons are first presented with a dummy "gag" package which is opened in full view of the audience. After the laughter subsides the patron is then presented with the real package.

MANAGER CLARK of the National, promoted a bunch of rotogravure heralds on "Welcome Danger" by selling his local druggist on the idea of taking a half page on the back.

MANAGER SUCHMAN, of the Highway, has rustled up a load of window space from one of the local merchants and features a regular cut-out display weekly.

AS AN EXAMPLE of what those Brooklyn showmen are doing in the line of promoting valuable merchandise for free distribution, just look at these few paragraphs:

MONTY MacLEVY, just before leaving the Ozone Park for the Lefferts, grabbed up seven hundred dollars' worth of goods, which included millinery, cake, candy, groceries, ladies' wearing apparel, toys, canary birds, gold fish, hardware, vacuum cleaners, men's wearing apparel, drugs, flowers, radio and cash. Just a few items, but enough to start a business establishment tabbed "MacLevy's Dept. Store."

THE LEADER of the group Manager Friedman, of the Colonial, promoted furniture, chinaware, bridge lamps and other articles, valued at $1,003. Oh, what a business this is.

MANAGER GOLD of the Lefferts, Kaufman of the Roebling, Perry at the Marcy, Berham at the State, Abrams at the Starr, LaVia of the Carroll and Champlin at the Leader are up among the leaders and with nearly two weeks to go yet, surprises should be many.

UPSTATE the live-wires of Tom Olsen's exploitation grounds, Lampe of the Avon, MacFarlane of the Playhouse, Beckwith of the Strand, Rose of the Oneonta, are making competition pretty hot, cleaning up everything in sight.

THE COLUMNS devoted to the Bronx, Manhattan and Port Chester, bearing the signature of Jules Fields, let's the world know that:

THE MANAGER of the U. S. Theatre gave away a police puppy in conjunction with the showing of a Rin-Tin-Tin picture and the stunt went across one hundred per with the patrons.

ACCORDING TO WHAT WE GLEAN FROM THE OFFICIAL HOUSE ORGAN

AND AT THE Valentine Theatre an exploitation gag that met with a lot of favor was the giving away of ten thousand samples of face powder, arranged through a tie-up with a local beauty shop. Distribution was made at the subway station between five and six o'clock. Good work say we.

PATRONS of the Kingsbridge Theatre had the opportunity recently to secure an electric refrigerator at no cost to themselves and not a cold shoulder was turned to the proposition. (We know the gag's tough, but it is a natural.)

THE BELMONT had twenty-five merchants co-operating with them to effect a gift night, to be held every Thursday. And every sort of thing was given away. In part we find jewelry, toys, household goods, perfume, silk stockings, beauty parlor service, restaurant meal tickets.

YALE GREENHOUSE, manager of the Mosholu promoted a radio and gave it away free to his patrons. And as usual, the house was jammed on the night of the award.

BARNETT LAZARUS at the Manhattan is also up to his old stunt. He wanted heralds for "Happy Days," but being unwilling to pay for them, he persuaded a merchant to run his ad on the back of the herald. P. S. Heralds free. Barnett in dough.

TOM OLSEN'S scroll gives us a little dope concerning the Upstate Division:

"SYRACUSE," Tom shouts, "is going to have a campaign on "High Society Blues," "Tom," we shout right back, "if anyone can do it, you can." Go to it and let's make the air blue."

FIVE THOUSAND copies of a recent issue of a motion picture magazine will be used as novel [illegible]

AS NO theatre names grace the billboards of Syracuse, tradition is to be shattered and a precedent set by Tom Olsen, for every available board is going to bear a Fox name.

AT THIS stage we haven't the entire dope on the campaign, so we'll just have to bide our time until Tom gets set to shoot. Watch this page for the final results. And the regular Round Table pages, too.

OVER IN Jersey, where Jack Hobby's exploitation has set them to talking, we glean from Hobby's paragraphs:

ONE HUNDRED Per Cent Month has been designated as the Jersey title during the promotion campaign, and so far nothing has dropped below that high standard, for right in front of its eyes the public secs:

BANNERS, strung about the main streets of the towns. An auto truck, used as a street ballyhoo, carrying six sheets and banners and cruising about the entire circuit. CARDS, placed on front of the street cars. The cards were secured free, too. Balloons, peanuts, bunting, cut-outs, front page stories, heralrds and every other means, are being used to keep the month before the patrons. We compliment Hobby and his live-wire managers.

AND JUST before we sign off for a little while may we remark that the latest piece of showmanship on display in "Progress" the "How to Exploit" idea, should prove of great benefit to the managers of the circuit, and no doubt will be found very useful in assisting them in their campaign planning. Oscar Davis Uses Some Novelty Art To Sell His Shows

This novel display is the creation of Oscar Davis, manager of the United Artists Theatre in Detroit, Mich., and was used to sell "Puttin' On the Ritz."

A cut-out of the star occupied a prominent place atop the ticket booth, while behind it the under marquee letters carried a sign reading, "Meet Harry Richman." The art work shows evidence of considerable care and no doubt helped a lot towards attracting all passersby into the theatre.

We don't know whether Davis has a horn concealed about the cut-out plugging the theme songs, but it seems to us that if it would have helped draw more attention to the attraction he'd have made use of it. We are bringing this angle in, should any of the Club put it to work on this or some other picture, since the stunt may be used for almost anything. As we are not informed concerning the likes and dislikes of the house's patrons, we cannot say whether the horn gag, if used, clicked there.

After all a manager knows his own field and with us parked way back here in New York, we know practically nothing about those little "local" things that help to put a picture across in Detroit. We want to thank Davis for letting us see this one, as we feel that it is an excellent gag to pass on in the event it will just hit the spot for some of our other showmen, since no stunt is married to any picture and a good idea like this will not go to waste.

Let's hear more from you, Davis, concerning the live-wire way you are putting your shows across.

McKoy's Ability Is Seen Again In This Novel Display

We don't know how many houses in this country can boast of so "natural" a lobby for display work out of the ordinary, as the Olympia Theatre in Miami, Fla.

The Olympia, as a good many of his brother members in the CLUB know, is managed by James E. McKoy, and you can bet that he makes good use of the spacious lobby to plug his shows. In the photo we are reproducing you will get an idea of what we mean when we declare the lobby is a "natural."

In keeping with the atmosphere of the picture, the lobby features the race angle and all of the copy is made up in a "flash" manner, denoting speed and pep. The art work is hand-painted and by using a combination of striking colors, McKoy achieved an effect that was bound to bring people over to the box-office. Though the photo does not show the marquee we would like you to know that he hung cambric pennants all around it, which helped give the front more life.

While we are telling you how he sold this picture ("Burning Up"), we'd like to give you the low-down on the rest of the campaign. By securing three racing cars he was enabled to park them in front of the theatre during the day and early evening and they too tended to enhance the atmospheric effect. He added a little novelty to the mileage gag he worked in conjunction with one of the local automobile agencies by having a theatre employee arrive at the spot where the car was running and supervise the putting in of gas and oil. As you all know the mileage contest consists of offering tickets to the theatre for the nearest correct estimate of miles the car would cover in a certain number of hours.

McKoy had several other good angles which he used to sell the picture but as space will not let us set them forth we have taken only those we believe our members will be able to use. It is always a great pleasure to us to pass on "J. H.'s" work because we can generally find mighty good showman angles in it and we guess that any of our members who remember his "Pet Parade" not so long ago will agree with us.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

George A. Nevin Is Now Handling Two Houses In Pa.

We had been wondering about the whereabouts of George A. Nevin when he left Ilion, N. Y., and it gave us much pleasure to learn that he is now managing two houses out in Danville, Pa., for the Comerford Circuit.

With the Victoria and the Luna on his hands it appears to us as though he is very busy. But it's the kind of activity that means more dough at the box-office. It was on his recent campaign with "Flight" that his showmanship came in evidence again. Through a tie-up with the local paper, he persuaded them to print a number of heralds for him announcing the showing of the picture at the Victoria. The paper was worked into the heralds in an excellent manner.

Nevin then went out and chartered an airplane. The plane cruised over the town and thousands of the heralds were released. Part of the copy on them read: "Good morning folks! We are now in the special plane chartered by the Morning News and the Victoria Theatre, etc." The rest of the herald carried the title, playdate and theatre. Two types of heralds were used. A pink one with the regular copy on and a green one, which was used as a "lucky herald," entitling the holder to free tickets upon presentation at the newspaper office.

This stunt, since it was the first time the town had seen it, clicked to big box-office receipts and was a credit to Nevin's showmanship. He used many more angles on the campaign in the form of window tie-ups, special trailers, ballyhoos, etc., and they all helped towards the success of the picture. So, with work like this being turned out by him, we know that George is going to make a fine record for himself out there in Danville.

Maxey Knows How To Sell The Town On Any Attraction

In order to show you that F. S. Maxey is going to be a very active member, we intend at this time to tell you a bit about his work as manager of the Arcadia and Rex Theatres in Maud, Oklahoma.

The cut shows you a display he arranged on "Rio Rita" and which was placed on top of his marquee. The cut-outs as you note are well executed and show evidence of considerable care. The other photo on the top line is a model of an old-fashioned schooner which evidently served as the basis for a corking window display during the run of "Isle of Lost Ships."

The bottom photographs show you an exploitation angle Maxey used on "Cock-Eyed World," by having four boys dressed as soldiers (or maybe they are real soldiers) parade about town advertising the film. On the lower right you see another attractive cut-out on "The Four Feathers" which occupied a prominent place atop the marquee and was the means of attracting more than passing interest in the picture.

We want to thank Maxey for being so prompt in letting us see what he is doing to sell his shows out there in Maud and we feel that again we have acquired a showman-member who is going to be very active and whose contributions will no doubt be represented frequently on the CLUB pages. Keep up your good work, Maxey, and let's have anything you think the rest of your fellow members in the CLUB might be able to use too.

MORE ACTION—LESS WORDS

When we look back now it seems strange . . . strange that we should have followed the careers of those two boys so closely . . . eight years have passed by . . . but it seems like yesterday . . . we were handling a couple of houses in an up and coming community . . . our service staff was composed of boys . . . boys recruited from the town . . . and strange to relate . . . all twelve of the boys we had on the payroll of the two houses . . . wanted to be showmen . . . two out of the twelve struck us as having possibilities . . . there was Joe . . . a quiet kid . . . didn't say much but did a whole lot . . . and Jim . . . he was the other possibility . . . said too darn much but always managed to accomplish something despite this handicap . . . the boys remained on the staff for about a year . . . and the other ten who would be showmen, had long since given up hope . . . finally a break came . . . in a nearby town . . . a deluxe house . . . we were asked to send some one as an assistant . . . wonderful opportunity for advancement . . . well, it was up to us to select Joe or Jim . . . we watched them very carefully for a week . . . both had been with us for a year . . . Joe . . . still the same quiet, unassuming kid . . . lending a hand here and there whenever needed . . . always ready when you wanted him . . . you knew just where he would be . . . a fellow you could place a lot of confidence in and it wouldn't be violated . . . Jim . . . not the same . . . he had grown more arrogant . . . more cock-sure of himself . . . walked around as though he owned the place . . . but still he was dependable . . . did you do this, Jim? . . . we'd ask . . . yep . . . would come back the reply . . . his work seemed always to be done . . . we had to choose between the two . . . we sent Jim out on the new job . . . when we told him he was selected he went around with a swelled sense of his own importance . . . but he didn't overact . . . a day after he had gone we called Joe into our office . . . Joe . . . we said . . . you've been with us a long time . . . answer something frankly . . . you know, of course, that the choice lay between you two fellows for that job in the de luxe house . . . how did you feel because we selected Jim? . . . he looked at us a moment . . . we thought we detected a lump rise in his throat . . . then he answered . . . simply . . . I feel that I've plenty to learn yet . . . I've relied on your judgment for a year now . . . and I'm still relying on it . . . I know when the time comes . . . you'll help me . . . after all, we never get through learning and I feel that you know best . . . that was all he said . . . but it was enough for us . . . we knew that when we sent Jim out we had done the right thing . . . because the reason we sent him to the new job was just to see how this boy would take it . . . he had the makings of a real showman . . . so we played our ace . . . Joe . . . we said . . . fifty miles away from here there's a house just waiting for a man like you . . . would you like to go and manage it . . . well, to make a long story short . . . he went . . . went quietly and didn't tell anyone where he was going . . . a year went by . . . two . . . five . . . seven . . . eight . . . then just yesterday we learned . . . Joe stayed in the show business . . . worked hard . . . didn't talk out of turn . . . and after eight years . . . he received his reward . . . an appointment as general manager on one of the most prosperous independent circuits in the country . . . and at a salary that would make you gasp . . . what a thrill . . . to learn that the boy we broke in had found success . . . opportunity knocked and he opened the door . . . and Jim . . . oh, yes . . . why, that's funny . . . Jim is a manager on the circuit that operates under the general managership of his former aisle mate . . . not so good . . . we feel sorry for Jim . . . we heard quite a bit about him . . . drifting from here to there and wherever he went . . . talk . . . talk . . . and once in a while action . . . Jim turned drifter . . . but then . . . Joe is a square shooter . . . he can see things . . . perhaps he will see beneath the blustering gab Jim uses . . . and make something out of him . . . yes . . . the more we think of it . . . the more we know he will . . . he'll tell Joe not to talk . . . talk . . . talk . . . that's why Jim drifted from one manager's job to another . . . he'd talk . . . then talk some more . . . the persons he had dealings with were too busy to listen to talk . . . they wanted action . . . well . . . Joe will teach it to Jim . . . and patiently, too...That's all...

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Class Is The Keynote In Herman's Fine Art Displays

Another showman who always takes a great deal of pride in the selling of his shows is Harry Herman, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Cedar Rapids, Ia.

In a recent issue we set forth a detailed account of the way he kept his theatre front alive and selling, by using some darn fine display work and copy. To-day we want to show you how he sells his coming attractions by means of beautiful cut-outs placed in advantageous spots about the theatre.

The first cut-out was used in conjunction with "Son of the Gods." The body proper of the display was worked up from black modernistic flares carried out in tones of magenta, red violets and oranges, with all colors and tones being separated with tinsel metallics. Within the oval cut-out, the heads of the stars, painted in natural tones, was so constructed to allow the filtering through of light, so that when the regular lamps, coupled with special baby spots would hit it, the effect would be most striking. Another very valuable angle on this cut-out is its copy. When an author like Rex Beach supplies the theme for a picture it always pays to plug him as well as the stars.

The second photo, more simple in tone, was used to plug "General Crack." Don't be deceived by thinking it is too simple because there's a very good reason for just using the head of Barrymore. This head was done in natural colors. The colors around the circle were done in vermillion and orange. The head was mounted four inches out from this circle and 25 watt lamps, concealed from view brought out the famous "Barrymore profile." When illuminated it was certain to catch the eye and it is our guess that anyone looking at it was immediately sold.

Okay, Harry, we are glad you take an active interest in us. When we get examples of creative work, such as these, we are more than pleased to pass them along. And now that we've recorded how you sell them on the inside and outside of the house, we hope soon to tell the rest of the Club what else you are doing in the way of exploitation and advertising.

Chris Georgas Is Another Canadian Showman to Enroll

Step up and meet another of our Canadian showmen. This one is Chris Georgas, manager of the Classic Theatre in Owen Sound, Ont., Canada, up around Jack Allan's district.

Georgas has been in the show game for about ten years now, coming into the industry from the confectionery business, where he made quite a name for himself by establishing a chain of stores around the towns nearby the theatre.

As his first venture into show business he built the Classic Theatre and operated it until 1923, when he went into partnership with the Paramount Theatres, Ltd., under whose supervision he now operates the house, and as he says "we're enjoying wonderful success and I'm more than proud to be with this company."

Well, Chris, we're very glad to welcome you into the Managers' Round Table Club and we know that your association with this great organization will be both pleasant and profitable, and we feel that since you went into the show game "cold" and came out a winner, that we can look forward to learning some good things from you in the very near future. So keep us up on your doings in order that the rest of your fellow members might learn what the Canadian crowd does to sell their shows.

Itinerary Contest Boosted Business For Witte's House

The highlight of a highly successful campaign for "Seven Days Leave" at the Empress Theatre, Decatur, Illinois, was an "itinerary" contest staged in cooperation with the classified advertising department of one of the Decatur newspapers.

Manager Witte arranged the contest which ran three days in advance so that patrons could, through following the classified ad page of the paper, learn what sort of itinerary Gary Cooper would have if he visited Decatur on "seven days leave." The person who found the correct itinerary and submitted it to the newspaper contest editor won guest admission to the Empress theatre.

Decatur is a city with a great deal of municipal pride and takes much interest in its parks, public buildings, municipal recreation playgrounds and other points of interest, so naturally there was much interest in the contest as it concerned these places a celebrity might visit. Manager Witte was aware of this so it is needless to say that the contest had a valuable meaning as concerning the excellent business the picture enjoyed during its run at the Empress. Witte reports that the newspaper was highly pleased with the results too, a factor that is not to be overlooked in planning cooperaive activities.

We are all familiar with Witte's fine campaigns, and it is always a pleasure to print them on our pages, so keep on sending them in and we'll let the rest of the boys know what you are doing.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Here's The Way A Live-Wire Member Handles News Ads

Here is that account we promised you of Jack Albertson's work on putting across "Her Unborn Child" at the Indiana Theatre in Indiana Harbor, East Chicago, Ill.

Most persons are of the opinion that this picture is decidedly sexy (we are not going to sit in judgment on this angle because we don't know the picture well enough), but quoting from a few opinions gathered from here and there, there's nothing salacious in it.

We are reproducing two of the finest examples of copy that can ever be used on a picture with a doubtful name. No matter what the title may imply, there is nothing objectionable in the ad's copy. Jack has shown great judgment in the make-up and the further plays up interest by heading it off with an endorsement from many prominent business and professional people of the town.

To secure this endorsement Jack sent out a circular letter to fifty doctors, nurses, clergymen, welfare workers, educators and club women. The letters invited them to be present at a pre-view showing given four days before the opening. In this manner he was able to start his campaign with a "flash" ad that sold the moment it was looked at. In addition to the ads, eight thousand special heralds were distributed around town. Which besides plugging the picture, carried a note that children under sixteen years would be denied admission during the run.

When reading the ad you will probably wonder why he starts his show on Midnight Saturday and then puts in another picture for Sunday. Though we ourselves are not aware of his censorship rulings, we believe there is an ordinance which will not permit the picture being shown straight through. If we are in error, we would like Jack to clear up this matter for us, as we are sure it will be interesting.

Using A Wrecked Plane On Marquee Was Good Ballyhoo

Eugene Karlin had a plane display to help advertise "The Aviator" playing at the Publix-Victory Theatre, Salt Lake City, Utah.

A wrecked plane was placed on top of the marquee with the nose pointing toward the theatre and the tail hanging out over the street. The title of the picture was painted on the fusilage in bold letters.

The wrecked plane was easily seen from every approach to the theatre and proved an excellent attention-getter.

Carrying out the plane display, Karlin had a display of miniature planes in the lobby, which included a special small landing field with a small hangar and five models of planes.

These planes were regular models and one was a model of the first plane flown by the Wright Brothers. This display drew quite a bit of attention from everybody.

To make the display more interesting, a card was placed by each plane model telling the number of the ship, what kind of motors were used in the particular type, what it was modeled from and what kind of plane it was.

That's the stuff, Karlin, don't you think you could find a photograph of yourself around and send it in to us so that the rest of the crowd may know what you look like?

MORE "COOL" ADVICE!

Just as a reminder, we would like to call your attention once more to your cooling plant. Have you oiled it thoroughly and gone over every part of it? If not, do it now, for if those gears aren't carrying enough oil you're certainly going to get a surprise when the squeaks impair the reproduction of your sound, OR BURN OUT A BEARING.

We were in a house just a little while ago. The manager wanted to show us what a wonderful cooling plant he had, so he set it in operation. Well, the groans and shrieks that crept into the theatre were enough to awaken the soundest sleeper and it is a good thing that the house hadn't opened for business yet.

They were running off a trailer and when the noise got into that sound—Zowie! 'Nuff Said! Our friend shut off that cooling plant pretty quick and then decided that it needed oil. We will say this much—he called his janitor and instructed him to get busy with the oil and stood supervising it until it was finished.

Don't let the above happen to you. A little thoughtfulness will prevent it. If you take so much pride in your house that you feel you want to oil it yourself, then hop to it. Don't wait until it's too late. You are certainly going to be in a nice mess if you turn that thing on "cold" because the squeaks and everything else in the thing will be running a contest with your reproduction in an effort to see which is the greatest noisemaker. And of course your patrons are going to love it. Well, that's all. You know what the proverb says, "Never put off until tomorrow what you can do today.'

Fries Mixed Song Hits In With Ads And Got Publicity

Carlos Fries tied up with two newspapers on a stunt that derived lots of publicity for "Sunnyside Up" playing at the Ellanay Theatre, El Paso, Tex.

Both morning and evening newspapers announced the contest with a fifty-four inch column on the front page—asking everyone to turn to the Classified section and win one of the prizes.

The contest resolved itself in finding the titles of the seven song hits from the picture which were scattered on the Classified section. To the first 25 persons correctly submitting answers were given passes to see the picture.

Inasmuch as the picture was full of song hits, Fries capitalized on it by tying up with both local broadcasting stations in getting lots of advertising on the air. Two half hour programs; one at morning and the other at night were put on for two days in advance of picture. These programs consisted of nothing but "Sunnyside Up" records with announcements as to picture coming to Ellanay Theatre and play dates.

Carlos is by no means a new member, but we haven't heard from him lately. Come on there, Fries, from all accounts, you are putting over some great stuff down there in El Paso, so don't keep it a deep dark secret.

Atmospheric Front Turned Out by G. T. Goodwin Sold Town

Atmospheric fronts are a safe bet to click almost any place they are used. Of course, the creativeness used is entirely up to the manager. He may be able to turn out a front that will look like a million bucks and in reality cost only a few cents. Or he may do just the opposite, turn out a million buck, costly front, that will look like something left over from last night's April shower.

For the purpose of making ourselves understood more clearly we are showing a photo of the corking display turned out by G. T. Goodwin, manager of the Strand Theatre in Hays, Kansas. Here is something that is localized to the best possible extent. Novelty has been injected into it and it appears to be alive. The arrangement bears ample evidence of considerable care and speaks well for Goodwin's ability.

We do not know the cost of a front of this sort but we are sure that any ingenious showman can construct it at a minimum and that the results will more than merit the money expended. And it's a real fact that keeping your front all pepped up, instead of presenting the same drab layout all the time will help business a lot.

Thanks "G. T.," for letting us see what you are doing to sell your shows out there in Kansas and we want you to know that we would like to hear from you again in the near future and incidentally, why not give us a little dope about yourself?

Lou Smith Started Another Club On Latest Kid Serial

You can always depend on Lou Smith to spring a couple of angles that will boost up his kiddie business. It was only a little while ago that we told you about the stamp club he started at the Windsor Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., and now he has another sort of club.

When he booked in the serial "The Jade Box," he felt that a little plugging would go a long ways toward boosting business, so he went to work and formed a "Jade Box" Club. He distributed a number of cards, used as heralds, about the neighborhood which bore an announcement stating that the serial was to play his house. To make sure that the cards would be read, a space was left on one side for a letter. Anyone securing the ten letters making up the words "The Jade Box" were entitled to free tickets to witness a chapter of the film.

He followed this up with the club membership announcement, printed on green cards. The back of the card bore directions for filling out the spaces and also carried a notice to the effect that free tickets would be given the kiddies on their birthdays. Space was left for the insertion of the birthday date. In this manner he made quite a hit with the parents of the kiddies and let the house in for a lot of good-will and no doubt a lot more business.

The photo we are showing above is a street ballyhoo he used in connection with "Call of the Circus." As you will note from it, a man dressed as a clown, carrying a sign on his back paraded about the streets attracting plenty of comment wherever he went. With all these signs of activity coming from Lou's vicinity, he must be dragging in a little bit of extra dough from here and there, because this type of showselling, so we understand, "clicks" with the neighborhood his house is located in.

SOME MORE ADJECTIVES!!

(By Special Request)

Maybe we spoke too quickly when we offered to pass along another supply of these adjectives, but some one called us and we had to make good. Look 'em over, boys, maybe you know what they mean —and then again maybe you don't.

CONSEQUENTIAL	FEUDAL	MALICIOUS	SANGUINARY
CONTEMPTUOUS	FIENDISH	MISANTHROPIC	SATANIC
CONTUMELIOUS	FLAGITIOUS	NAUSEOUS	SPLENIC
CYNICAL	HOSTILE	NEFARIOUS	SQUEAMISH
DISDAINFUL	IMPLACABLE	NONCHALANT	SUPERCILIOUS
DERISIVE	INADVERTENT	OPPROBRIOUS	VENEMOUS
DEVILISH	INAPPRECIABLE	PHLEGMATIC	VICIOUS
DIABOLICAL	INDISPOSED	RANCOROUS	VINDICTIVE
DISGUSTED	INHOSPITABLE	REPUGNANT	VIPEROUS
DISINCLINED	INIMICAL	RETALIATIVE	VIRULENT
ENVIOUS	IRONICAL	REVENGEFUL	WRATHFUL
FASTIDIOUS	INVIDIOUS	SARDONIC	WROTH

Now then, if you think we are stumped, ask for some more. The supply is almost unlimited. Try to make us pass more of them along. We won't use up any valuable space unless we are certain that it is wanted and needed.

FredMcLennanHad Local Merchants In His Full Page Ad

Just to show that they are right behind us when it comes to turning out flashy work, our Canadian delegation forwards this single truck spread along to us. The page is the work of Fred McLennan, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Brockville, Ontario, Can.

By securing the co-operation of some of the most prominent merchants in Brockville, Fred was enabled to make up the ad which he ran in conjunction with "The Love Parade." You will notice that the house occupies one of the best positions on the page.

While we are on the subject it won't hurt to tell you that it isn't necessary to wait for a big production to come along to secure a page like this. If you can write attractive copy you can work this angle almost any time you care to. All that is really necessary is to show your local merchants what a benefit it is to them to group their ads in this manner and create a flash.

The only thing about these single and double truck co-operative pages is that you must be careful not to overwork them, for no matter how effective a thing can be, it is bound to lose some of that effectiveness if it is always before the publics' eye, permitting them to get used to it. There is many a slant you can work in with your local merchants if you care to tie in with them on certain pictures. For instance you have the cut-up still contest, whereby parts of stills are placed in every ad in the paper and free tickets offered for the best example submitted of the complete still.

We want to thank Fred for keeping us posted on his work up around Brockville, and also thank Jack Allan for the always active interest he takes in our members up there in the Eastern portion of Canada. Let's hear some more concerning your work Fred, so that we can pass it along, in order that your brother members in the States may observe what you are doing.

Charlie Raymond Tells You How A Chain Letter Sells

Well we've seen and heard many novel ways of exploiting pictures but it remained for Charlie Raymond, manager of the Midland Theatre in Kansas City, Mo., to put those darned pesty chain letters to use as a plug for "The Rogue Song."

He framed a chain letter working it around the names of famous musicians, advancing the statement that all of these music masters got together and decided to circulate the phrase, "Music Is The Language Of The Soul," passing the phrase along to eleven of their acquaintances with the request that the eleven in turn pass it along to others.

Raymond's stunt was used in Kansas City when "The Rogue Song" played there. The letter was sent to 2,000 people and believe it or not but this stunt offers the following: on one turn-over, it reaches 22,000 people, on two turn-overs, it reaches 242,000 and on three turn-overs it reaches, 2,662,000.

Just the same we want to hand Raymond a compliment for this stunt as it is certainly a novel angle and it has value. So, thanks a lot Charlie, and keep us up on whatever else you're doing out there in K.C.

Walter Morris Won By Losing 'Sarah's Son' In Tampa, Fla.

We had a hunch, when Walter Morris put over his "Vagabond King" campaign, that he was a believer in originality. And now Walter, who is temporarily located at the Tampa Theatre in Tampa, Fla., comes through with an original that worked like a charm.

As an advance plug on "Sarah and Son," telephone calls were made for three days by a young lady who conversed in this manner, "Is this the Tampa Theatre? No. Well, I'm Sarah Storm and I was supposed to meet my son Bobby at the theatre for the matinee and I find now that I will be a little late. So sorry to have troubled you." The young lady then hung up, leaving the other party somewhat mystified.

Teaser ads, broke in the papers on the second day of these calls, requesting information as to the whereabouts of the Son of Sarah Storm, who had been lost the day before, on Franklin Street between Zack and Polk. Informants were requested to call a number which proved to be the theatre's phone. The customary circuit greeting was discontinued in order to enhance the effectiveness of the gag.

Walter had also intended using handbills describing the lost boy and showing his mother, but the printing cost was so prohibitive as to make this impractical. However, we are giving you this slant in the event that you haven't a high priced printer in your town, for a gag like this would do much to further the effectiveness of the scheme.

To cap the climax a box at the top of the opening day's ad explained that Sarah Storm had found her son and both could be seen at the Tampa for the next four days. And we wonder how many people were fooled by this stunt. It was certainly masterly showmanship on Walter's part and it gives us great pleasure to pass it along to the rest of the Club. Keep up the "ace" work, Walter, because you're way in front with the rest of the Florida live-wires.

McNeill Has Had Many Experiences In Show Business

Step up and meet another real live-wire showman in the person of John S. MacNeill, manager of the Belmont Theatre in the Bronx, N. Y., for the Fox Metropolitan outfit.

He has been in the show game a good many years and it might interest his fellow members to know that at one time he worked for five years as manager to Thurston the magician. And got a real taste of what showman often have to put up with, when he took the number two road company featuring Dante the magician on a proposed tour around the world, which wound up after the first lap, in Venezuela, where for several months, being stranded, he gazed at the Southern American scenery.

When he finally got back to the States, he hooked up with Publix, handling publicity in connection with the inauguration of stage shows, for the New England division, from which position he went to his present one at the Belmont. And with such a colorful background it strikes us that we are going to hear some mighty fine things concerning his show selling in the future. What do you say, John? When you put over some of those stunts we know you are capable of, don't forget that the rest of the Club is just as interested.

Percy Even Had A Sidewalk Cafe In His Publicity Gags

San Francisco was treated to one of the most complete campaigns it has ever seen, when Frank Percy, manager of the RKO Orpheum Theatre located in the California city, set out to sell "Ladies Of Leisure."

He started off the splurge by using teasers in his newspaper ads and working them up into the big ads. On the opening day of the picture, a press luncheon was arranged whereby the newspaper men and women met Ralph Graves and Barbara Stanwyck, the stars of the picture, who came on from Hollywood, especially for the premiere. In this manner lots of valuable space was secured in the newspapers as they all broke next day with a story about the luncheon.

Prior to the stars' arrival, a ballyhoo coach, bearing five beautiful girls and drawn by four horses, was driven through the main streets of the city arriving at the station in time to greet the movie artists. As you will note from the photo, a large banner, announcing the picture, was hung alongside the wagon. The photo on the lower left shows you a car, secured from a local auto agency, which was used to plug both the picture and the auto manufacturer. The three girls grouped around it were driven about the city, stopping here and there to stand around the front of the car. When a crowd gathered they then went to another place.

The picture on the upper right we are using as an illustration in order that we may bring home more forcibly the possibilities of making advantageous tie-ups by securing stills that will fit in with the products your local merchants carry. In this case, the still is a natural for a cigarette lighter and you can bet no up-to-the-minute dealer will turn a deaf ear to any proposition you make for a window display. On the lower right is part of the side-walk ballyhoo which created lots of comment. This "side-walk cafe" was opened right in front of the theatre and all passerbys were invited to stop and quench their thirst. The house certainly was let in for a lot of publicity on this one and no doubt it re-acted later towards the box-office.

There were many other angles covered by Percy in his campaign but since space will not permit us to list them here at this time we feel sure that you will see from the photos and the brief description that we have sketched out, what a whiz of a campaign the entire work was. We have endeavored to pick out the highlights of his work in the event that any of our members should care to use them as there certainly is a few angles that will stand following-up.

We want to thank Percy for this one and we hope that he is going to be represented on our pages a great deal more in the future.

Jones Secured A Lot Of Good-Will By Phoning Town

The old adage of "locking the stable after the horse is gone" can now be paraphrased to "catching the horse while he is going." Manager William H. Jones of the Baker Grand Theatre of Natchez, Miss., thought the horse was gone, when his publicity story regarding the chain broadcast of "Vagabond King" failed to break in his local paper, but by being alert and resourceful "he got the horse while it was going," through the cooperation of the local radio dealers from whom he secured the names of all residents owning radios and immediately had each one phoned personally and informed of the fact that Denis King, star of the "Vagabond King" was singing over the radio that night.

District Manager Walter Richardson states that a tremendous amount of good will was created for the theatre through Manager Jones thoughtfulness and that many patrons phoned the manager and thanked him for his courtesy.

The above effort suggests the use of radio dealers' mailing lists on productions that have radio favorites in the cast.

Crowther Comes to The Front Again With This Display

Atmospheric fronts seem to be the vogue around Florida, for it was only a little while ago that we showed you the one used by J. H. McKoy. And now Ted Crowther, manager of the Stanley Theatre in West Palm Beach, Fla., comes forward with this front.

The display extended from the marquee to the sidewalk's edge and was painted to represent a typical Negro home. An opening was placed in the center to allow persons to walk in or out. Two small windows on either side of the doorway, showed cut-outs of players in the picture, while the title of the picture as well as the director's name and the play dates were lettered on the outside of the cabin.

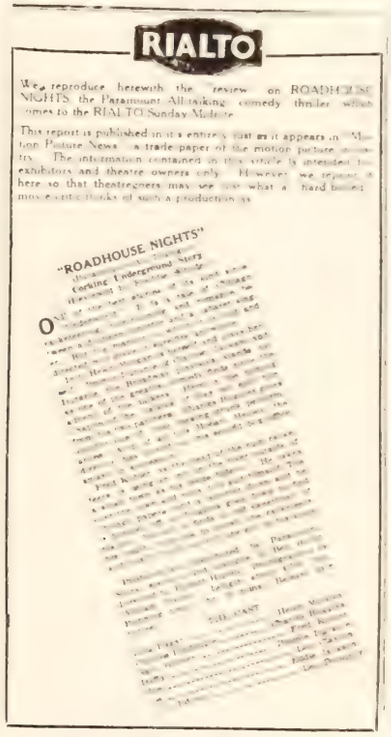
To give it a more realistic effect, two bales of cotton were placed on either side of the display. In addition to this stunt, Crowther also secured a couple of windows in a very busy section of the city and arranged a couple of corking "flashes" by dressing the windows with cotton, bits of sugar cane and one sheets; with stills being grouped about the entire effect.

With activities such as these it is a cinch that he sold the town on the picture and we want to thank him for letting us see this gag. Keep us posted on your future work Ted, because we know that you rate pretty high among the rest of the Florida showmen.

John J. Scanlon Pleased Newspaper With His Trailer

Though we are a little late in presenting this account of the way John J. Scanlon, manager of the Strand Theatre in Lynn, Mass., sold "Show of Shows" to the town by means of a number of mighty fine showmanlike angles, we feel that there are one or two points that will be of benefit to his fellow members.

To start off the campaign he arranged with a local dealer to feature a giant pass in the window. The pass bore the heading "The Biggest Pass To See The Biggest Picture." By examining the cut we are reproducing you can see the rest of the copy he used. The dealer supplied the name of the person to whom the pass was given and the names changed every so often. To plug the theme songs from the picture, Scanlon made up a novelty trailer announcing that the songs could be purchased from a local dealer. He worked in a corking angle on this trailer in the form of an announcement carrying the music dealer's name imprinted against a newspaper page which carried the heading of one of the local papers.



This stunt made a big hit with the press as it was the first time it had ever been done, and they were more than glad to co-operate with Scanlon after seeing what he did for them. He took advantage of their offer and ran a coloring contest, offering tickets for the best coloring of one of the scenes from the picture. This offer was made to the kiddies and you can bet that it also made a hit with the grown-ups when they noticed the interest the theatre took in their offspring. Another stunt that secured the theatre a lot of publicity was the mailing of three thousand personal cards from Boston to Lynn citizens. Besides this gag, balloons were given away to the first three hundred children attending the matinee and also released from the roof of the theatre, with passes attached.

Scanlon's entire campaign was well planned and executed and we feel sure that the picture was more than sold; and in addition to thanking him for passing this along we also want him to know that we appreciate the active interest he has always shown in the Club.

Klingler Follows Through And Gives Town Ad Novelty

It was not so long ago that we ran a little article setting forth the way Stewart Tucker livened interest in his newspaper advertising by reprinting a review of the picture playing his house, which appeared in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Another showman—and a very active one—decided to use this angle also, so we want to give you an idea of how Paul O. Klingler, manager of the Rialto Theatre in Lewistown, Pa., handled it.

RIALTO

"ROADHOUSE NIGHTS"

The cut will show you, more than anything else, the value of an ad of this sort. Not only is it well made-up, but it is so well spaced that to let it get by without reading it seems impossible. There is a wealth of possibilities in this kind of advertising and we don't doubt but that Klingler has found this so. As you all know, Paul, from time to time, has favored us with many new slants on show selling and we want to thank him for letting us see this one.

In advertising almost every kind of an angle can be used and it's only a matter of sitting down and doping out your campaign. If your advertisement, which you may carry daily in the local papers, is going to be the same day in and day out, it stands to reason that people will not look at it unless they intend to go to the theatre on that day or night. You should try as much as possible to inject slants like the above into your work not only because of the "flash" it creates for the picture but to keep interest in your house and what is going on there, livened.

You may have a message of special import to give to your patrons. What do you do? You run a special ad and pay a little more dough than usual. Whereas if you paid more attention to your make-up and strived to inject that pep that will sell any ad you can rest assured that your patrons will make it a nightly habit to look at the theatre advertisement, and with a daily novelty of make-up they can't pass it up no matter what part of the paper it appears in.

AND STILL THEY COME!

ARTHUR SMITH is the manager of the Stillwell Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., and it was only a short while ago that we showed you what Arthur looked like via his photo. Being allied with Lou Smith, in this great industry, we look forward to hearing lots of nice things concerning the way he sells his shows at the Stillwell. Regards to Lou, Arthur.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOHN S. McNEIL manages the Fox Belmont Theatre in the Bronx, N. Y., and right up where competition is pretty strong. Knowing most of the showmen who operate around this district, we feel that McNeil is doing some tall stepping to keep the public informed of his attractions and we hope he will let us in on the secret. What say, John?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

RALPH J. BERZAN is the manager of the New Centre Theatre in Montreal, P. Q., Can. As Mr. Berzan no doubt knows, our rolls boast the names of some of Canada's foremost showmen, and we are indeed glad to welcome another peppy manager into this group. Don't keep us in the dark concerning what you are accomplishing up there, Ralph, and why not send us in a photo of yourself?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

LOUIS GLINNEN is a young fellow whom we think will make a name for himself as a showman in the future. Louis is at present serving as Assistant Manager of the Olympia Theatre in Chelsea, Mass. And under the able tutelage of Manager Herman P. Claman we believe our prediction will come true. Incidentally, Louis is only eighteen years old. So just stick at it Louis and the results will surprise you.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

BURR W. CLINE manages the State Theatre in Mankato, Minn. While we haven't been out around that district, we feel that any place or town that harbors a theatre also boasts a darn fine showman. So listen, Burr, why don't you send us your photo and a little dope about yourself so that we can give you a regular introduction.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM DE VELLIER is the manager of the Sunnyside Theatre, in Woodside, L. I., N. Y., and knowing what the rest of his fellow members think of him, we feel that the Club has acquired a very active member. And incidentally, Billy, we got a little dope on you from Frank Shepherd, who claims you are a second Will Rogers when you want to be. So how about making use of that talent and slipping Kirschbaum some "Lobby Laffs" ideas.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FREDERICK H. LAURANS is the house manager of the Crown Theatre, in New London, Conn. With our active member, Max Melincoff, operating around your section, Frederick, it would pay you two showmen to get together and sort of line up that town so they would know Round Tablers were about. For as you know, wherever there's showmanlike activity there's bound to be a Club member.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

E. C. COLLINS is the manager of the Kirby Theatre in Houston, Texas, for the Publix outfit. Our Texas delegation shows a good many managers from this live-wire outfit and we are very glad to welcome Collins in with the rest of the bunch. So let's have a few accounts of how you are keeping your house up with the leaders "E. C." and don't be afraid to set them forth by the volume.

R. L. RIPLEY is the manager of the Codman Square Theatre, Dorchester, Mass. Not so long ago it was our pleasure to drive around Mr. Ripley's neck of the woods and we would like to state that we were very much impressed with the town's layout. We won't say that it is a "natural" for exploitation, because we know that Ripley's activities will answer that one for us. So what do you say, "R. L." Keep us informed, will you?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

RUSSELL LAMB is the manager of the Plumb Theatre in Streator, Ill. As he is another one of the Publix showmen to join our Club, we are of the opinion that Russell often hands his patrons some mighty fine examples of exploitation. With his brother members just burning up the towns and cities with their stunts, we feel that Russell is going to jump right into the thick of things and the future will be productive of many new slants.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CHAS. A. GAA manages the Playhouse in Mamaroneck, N. Y. Since Mamaroneck is right around our "golfing grounds" we intend dropping in there some day and seeing just what he is doing to sell the town on his attractions. But before we run in Charley, we'd like to have a photo and a little dope about yourself so that we can introduce you more properly to the rest of the Club and tell them something about that pretty little town you are situated in.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOHN MARTIN is another manager who is no stranger to his fellow Club members. Operating around Watertown, N. Y., John is pretty busy whipping his house into shape, but we know that when he gets started we will have a number of his activities to pass on. And when we make that statement you're right behind us, aren't you, John?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

H. S. ORR manages the Colonial Theatre in Winston-Salem, N. C. Though Mr. Orr has been represented on our pages before, we would like him to know that all members must sooner or later pass through these portals of initiation, in order that everything may be complete. Well, "H. S." all we want to say now is that so long as you continue the active interest you have shown in the past, we'll be more than satisfied.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MAX FARBISH is the Manager of the Granada Theatre, in Corona, L. I. He has been in the show business for a good many years and has, in fact, been handling the Corona for quite some time. We have secured some "dope" on this showman's wide and varied career and intend to shoot it on our pages in a little while. Meantime, Max, in order that we may present the story properly, why not slip us one of your photos? We'll do the rest. Oak.

THE Club is anxious to publish photographs of every member and would, therefore, appreciate receiving as many as possible for use in future issues of the Club columns. If you have not already done so, PLEASE send us your own photo at once. Thank you.

AN AMAZING ROMANCE AS MODERN AS BROADWAY

A CHALLENGE TO ALL

San Francisco Press Raves Over Latest Marvel of Talking Screen

"Lillian Gish scores an outstanding success in her talking debut. Of equal importance is that 'The Swan' in its audible film form is particularly fine entertainment. It is a story which will appeal to the romantic of all ages. Its beauty of scene will delight the eye of the artistic. The glamor and grandeur of its settings will intrigue lovers of the magnificent. Its very excellent dialog will appease the veriest stickler for quality in that regard. Its fine enactment by a carefully and well chosen cast will find the utmost favor with the meticulous. Lillian Gish is an entrancing Alexandria. All the charms and graces and that certain wistfulness which made her so great a favorite in the silent drama are here in evidence, together with a well modulated speaking voice that is used most effectively."
—NEWS

"Lillian Gish Wins Talkie Honors in 'Romantic Night'! It is a long step—and she takes it triumphantly—from the misty-eyed, languorous type of roles. She becomes a more buoyant heroine. Her voice is sweetly resonant. A newly revealed laugh and vivacious manner. Conrad Nagel is delightful as the tutor, Rod La Rocque displays a good voice and an excellent performance. It is fine entertainment, with flawless acting against a scenic background of lavish beauty."
—CALL-BULLETIN

"Acted by a high-power cast, the spirit of the original play and much of its most significant dialogue have been faithfully preserved. Lilli Gish is remarkably well cast and s acts with intelligence and restrair Marie Dressler is happily cast a does excellently. Much credit is d Paul Stein; he has done his wo with intelligence and feeling, a has made of 'The Swan' more th I imagined could be made of it a talking picture."

—EXAMIN

"An exquisite picture. The spi of that lovely creation has been pr served. Lillian Gish's diction is e cellent, her laugh a delight. She warm and sweet and lovely. Ste has managed to veil his story delicate beauty, tender and dair and affecting. Romance sir through its scenes. Rod La Roc looks splendid and acts with mu passion. Conrad Nagel makes t tutor a very likeable and handso man. Marie Dressler does wond and O. P. Heggie is admirable."

Fox Film Corporation

Secured 6% Gold Notes

Due April 15, 1931

Price 100 and interest

A letter from Mr. W. C. Michel, Vice-President of the Corporation, is summarized as follows:

Company: Fox Film Corporation is one of the largest and most prominent companies in the world engaged in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures. Its product is distributed throughout the world.

Fox Film Corporation has acquired from Fox Theatres Corporation the latter's holdings of common stock of Loew's Incorporated.

Security: These Notes, in the opinion of counsel, are a direct obligation of the Company and are specifically secured under a Trust Indenture by the pledge of 660,900 shares of common stock of Loew's Incorporated and all the capital stock of United American Investing Corporation, which has a substantial stock interest in Metropolis and Bradford Trust Company, Ltd., owners of 65% of the ordinary stock of Gaumont British Picture Corporation, and represents an investment on the part of Fox Film Corporation of $20,000,000.

Equity and Assets: As at December 28, 1929, the pro forma consolidated balance sheet of Fox Film Corporation and wholly owned subsidiary companies, as prepared by independent auditors, reveals net tangible assets, without deducting this Issue, of approximately $157,208,511 (including over $9,800,000 of cash), an amount equivalent to $2,850 for each $1,000 of Notes.

Earnings: The consolidated net earnings of Fox Film Corporation and subsidiary companies, available for interest requirements on this Issue, after maintenance, taxes (other than Federal income), depreciation, amortization and other deductions, including profits applicable to minority interests and interest requirements on the mortgage and funded debt of subsidiary companies, for the two fiscal years ended December 28, 1929, as reported by independent auditors, are given below:

Year	Amount
1928	$6,572,840*
1929	13,966,355*
Annual Interest Requirements on this Issue	3,300,000

* The 1928 and 1929 figures are before the deduction of special charges consisting of obsolescence of silent films, scenarios and advertising accessories in the amounts, respectively, of $2,085,137 and $1,138,437. In the figure given above for 1929, profits on the sale of securities of $5,612,608 have not been included, nor have there been deducted certain non-recurring charges aggregating $938,364

Management: The management of Fox Film Corporation will be vested in certain principal operating executives who have been responsible for the past success of the Company, augmented by the engineering and scientific staffs of General Theatres Equipment, Inc.

This offering is made subject to the conditions more fully set forth in the complete descriptive circular, a copy of which may be had upon request.

"Mightiest War I

THE N. Y. TELEGRAPH RAVED.— Oliver Claxton Said:

"I would like to marshal all the superlatives that have been heaped on the book and apply them to the film, for everything said about the novel goes—and then more so—for the picture . . . two hours of gripping emotion that cannot be exceeded in this or any other town. . . . Mr. Milestone has given the movies back to the camera. . . . Far and away the best motion picture that has been made—talking or silent."

THE N. Y. MIRROR RAVED.— Bland Johaneson Said:

"A fine achievement . . . a great credit to Un versal . . . story exquisitely simple . . . truly im pressive, a powerful, brilliantly directed war movi Nobody should miss it."

THE N. Y. GRAPHIC RAVED.— Julia Shawell Said:

"A directorial achievement. Milestone has done wonderful job."

THE N. Y. DAILY NEWS RAVED.— Irene Thirer Said:

"It is so magnificent, so powerful, that it hardl behooves mere words to tell of its heart-rendin appeal, of its dramatic fire, its breath-taking battle shots. Milestone takes the directorial throne fo 1930. His treatment is superb. His sense of th dramatic is unparalleled. His understanding o the true and tender details which play on th spectator's sympathy is perfect.

THE N. Y. TIMES RAVED.— Mordaunt Hall Said:

". . . presented before an audience that most o the time was held to silence by its realistic scene It is a notable achievement, sincere and earnes with glimpses that are vivid and graphic. . . . A of the players do capital work. . . . One is gripped

rama Ever Seen"

—Says Regina Crewe, in the N. Y. American

THE N. Y. WORLD RAVED.—
Quinn Martin Said:

". . . a masterly incarnation of that shockingly vivid novel of valiant youth meeting lonely death. . . . Mr. Milestone has achieved a magnificent success."

THE N. Y. TRIBUNE RAVED.—
Howard Barnes Said:

"An enormously compelling talking motion picture. . . . Not only a brilliant transcription of the most famous book of a decade, but a splendid achievement for the audible cinema. . . . Intelligently adapted, magnificently directed and given an assured and even performance, 'All Quiet' is something to get definitely excited about."

THE N. Y. TELEGRAM RAVED.—
William Boehnel Said:

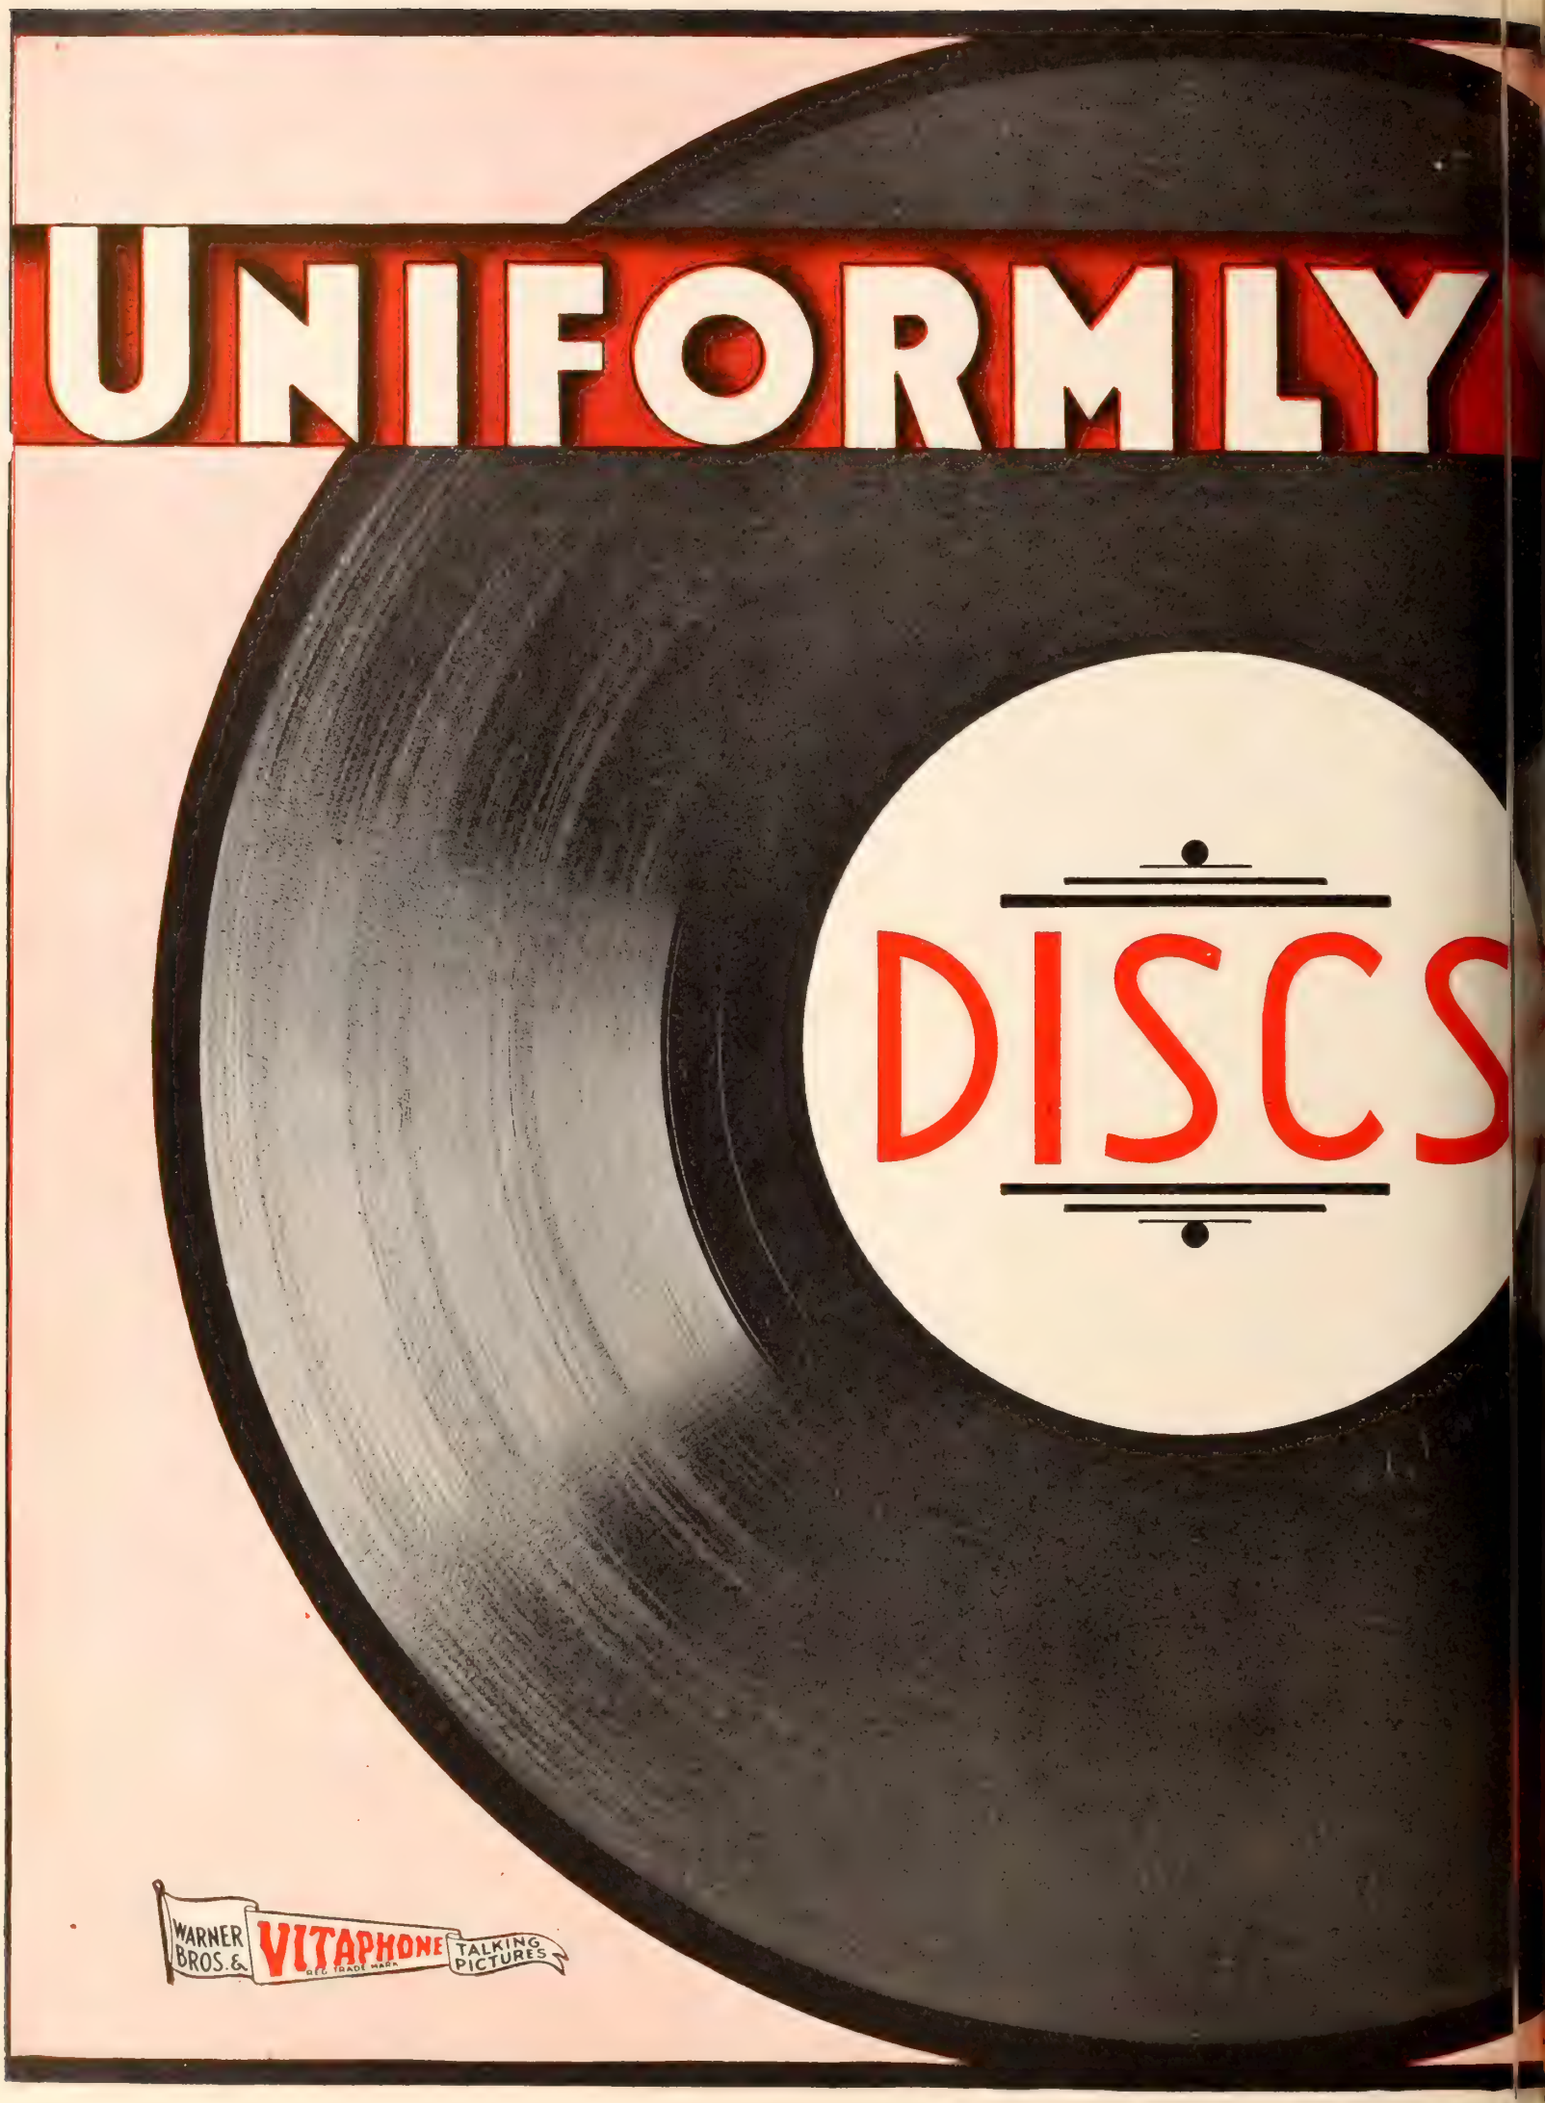
"In 'All Quiet' the cinema has produced the finest war picture since characters first began to flicker across the screen, one that has never, I believe, been surpassed either here or abroad. Here is a war picture beside which all others seem trivial. Magnificently directed. Beautifully portrayed . . . it fascinates you, holds you spellbound. It is tremendous. . . . It simply MUST be seen."

THE N. Y. EVENING WORLD RAVED.
George Gerhard Said:

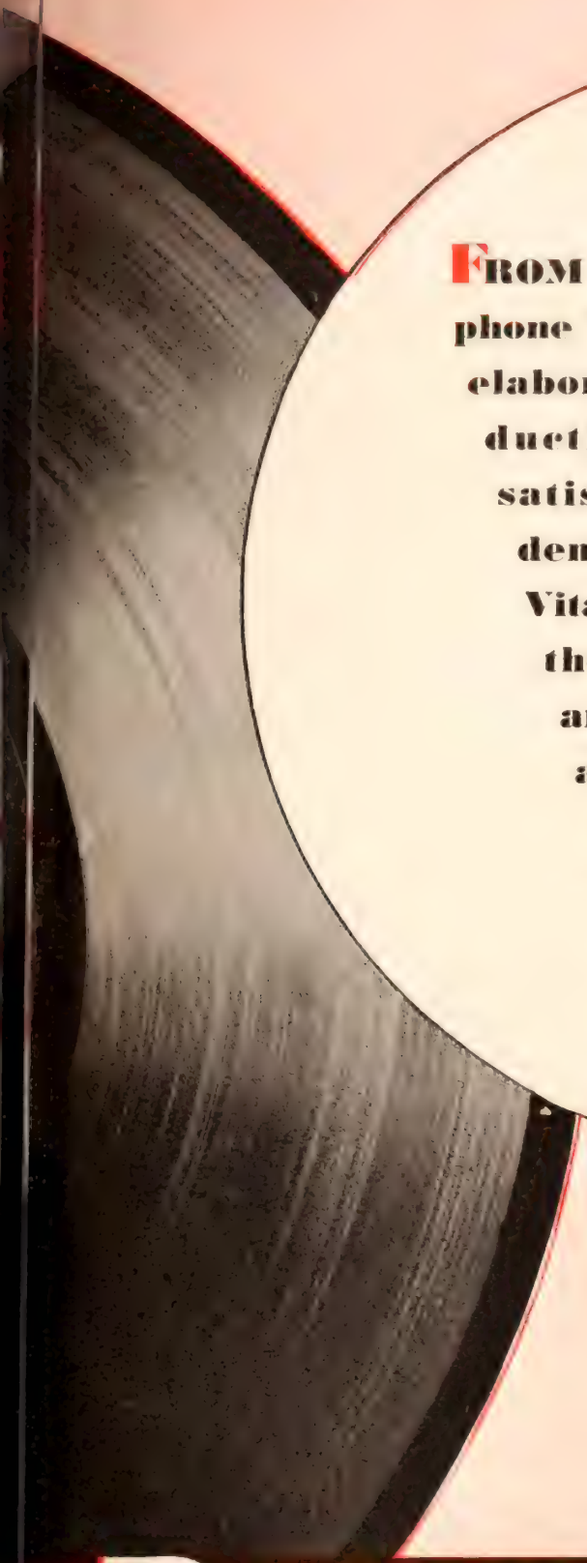
"Far and away the most significant picture ever turned out by Universal. . . . The direction is one of the best jobs ever seen upon any screen, and it raises Mr. Milestone to a niche in the movie hall of fame. . . . Maxwell Anderson kept to the original text, including that part in which the three young soldiers ford a river without a stitch of clothing to call upon three French girls. And, although this is daring in the extreme, Director Milestone treated the scene with extraordinary delicacy, although he left little to the imagination."

THE N. Y. SUN RAVED.—
John S. Cohen, Jr., Said:

"The film represents a more or less stupendous achievement in movie making. It is stupendous in its picturizations of trench battles, of men under fire, of youth caught up and snuffed out. . . . The spirit of the book is whole-souledly in the film. . . . All of the acting is good. . . . See 'All Quiet' and think it over, or rather try to prevent yourself from thinking it over—if you can."



THE N. Y. JOURNAL RAVED.—
Rose Pelswick Said:



"It is a dramatic production . . . well cast, intelligently directed and splendidly made . . . a credit to its producers and those concerned in the filming of Remarque's sensational document. . . . Battle scenes tremendously vivid. Milestone has done excellent work in treatment of the story and his handling of the sweeping action . . . an impressive production."

THE N. Y. AMERICAN RAVED.—
Regina Crewe Said:

"The epic picture of the war. A celluloid record for the ages. It had its premiere at the Central Theatre last night before an audience stunned with the terrific power of stark, awful drama. . . . It plays upon the soul like a mad musician on a harp. It rips the heart to shreds and tatters. Eyes scald with tears. It is stifling in its immensity . . . mightiest war drama ever screened in the ages of history."

Copy Too Hot, Hays Body Tells Film Ad Men; New Code to Eliminate Spice

Hays' S.M.P.E. Talk to be Broadcast

Address of Will H. Hays before the Society of M. P. Engineers' meeting at Washington, May 7, will be broadcast on a national radio hook-up. Thirty-three stations of the Columbia chain already are scheduled to participate in the broadcast. Hays will talk on "Scientific Accomplishment in Motion Pictures."

For detailed account of the events at the forthcoming session of the Society of M. P. Engineers, turn to page 35.

Darmour Signs Dane, Arthur, For 2-Reelers

Hollywood—The former M-G-M feature comedy team of Dane and Arthur will be reunited in a series of talker two-reelers to be produced by Larry Darmour for RKO. Darmour will produce at least six subjects with the pair, making arrangements with M-G-M to borrow Karl Dane when the latter is between pictures for the latter company. George K. Arthur, other member of the team, recently returned from an Eastern vaudeville tour, and was immediately placed under contract for the series by Darmour.

The comedy producer has also signed Louise Fazenda for a series of star comedies on the Darmour-RKO program for the season of 1930-31.

In addition to the above series, Darmour will continue the Mickey McGuire kid series, besides an all-star group that will utilize many available "name" players.

Schnitzer, Marcus, Le Baron Big Shots at Meet

Joseph I. Schnitzer, president, Lee Marcus, vice-president in charge of distribution, and William Le Baron, vice-president in charge of production, will be principal speakers at the RKO sales convention to be held May 18 at Los Angeles. Delegates from the United States, Canada and Australia will attend the five-day sessions.

Paramount Not Renewing Dennis King's Contract?

Paramount probably will not renew Dennis King's contract when its option expires in a week or two, it is understood. Decision is to be made in New York in the matter. There has been no rift between the company and star, but audience reaction to his picture, it is said, has not sold Paramount the idea that renewal of the agreement is a good bet.

Columbia—R-K-O In Booking Deal; Merger Is Denied

Deal for a booking arrangement which will insure playing time for Columbia pictures in houses of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum chain is under way. No details of the deal have been set as yet, according to Jack Cohn, who says discussions are being carried on between the two companies.

Cohn denies that the deal is for sale or merger with R-K-O, as had been reported. Columbia stock was active during the week on the strength of the reported deal.

U. A. Trio Returns

Al Lichtman, Bruce Gallup and Emil Jensen have returned to New York from their trip to the Coast.

A New Department

Beginning with this issue of The Showman, and appearing weekly thereafter, John F. Rider, nationally known writer on technical subjects, will conduct a complete course in sound projection through the columns of Motion Picture News.

Each article will be a chapter in a complete course. The entire series has been outlined in advance, and for the first time offers projectionists, technical men and students a scientifically planned course of training in the principles and functions of sound projection, its operation and servicing, and theatre acoustics.

The introductory article appears on page 49.

Peppy Ads Result in Action; Committee to Formulate Regulations

[illegible] the rounds of late, resulting in jams at St. Louis, Chicago, Portland and other cities, will be outlawed when a Code of Ethics for advertising men, suggested by the Hays association, is adopted.

Ever since MOTION PICTURE NEWS called attention to "hot" copy on "The Love Parade," which caused near-censorship, and on "Party Girl" and "Hot for Paris" copy in several cities, the growing tendency to skate on thin ice on advertising has been under scrutiny. Recently, Sam Katz of Publix passed the word to his organization that copy of the kind was not to be tolerated.

The Hays organization this week summoned film advertising men to a conference on the subject, the upshot of which was naming of a committee to draft a Code of Ethics governing advertising.

Sand Lot Golf Racket Injures Coast Business

Hollywood—Tom Thumb golf courses and driving ranges are cutting into suburban theatre attendance throughout Southern California, with indications the night golf racket will be a heavy competitor of show business this summer.

The miniature golf courses are being constructed in wholesale quantities in Hollywood, Los Angeles and all towns of Southern California. A lot 50 by 150 can accommodate an 18 hole layout which is solely a putting course with mechanical hazards. Flood lights for night play are drawing capacity on those layouts that are now operating.

Capacity per course is figured at about 50 players, who are tapped for 25 cents per round. The game can be played in about 40 minutes, with operators figuring five capacities nightly.

Fox Discontinuing Its Silent Newsreel Issues

Fox is discontinuing its silent newsreel, except for foreign accounts, and intends to concentrate on Fox Movietone News, Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager, stated Thursday.

Vol. XLI NEW YORK CITY, MAY 3, 1930 No. 18

ADVERTISING GOES TO THE CLEANERS

THE whitewashing concession in the picture business is becoming a valuable property. First, the producers, as a body, came along with an entirely new set of standards neatly tied up in a bundle labeled the Code of Ethics. Now the advertising fraternity centered in New York is to have a catechism all of its own.

Seriously, one of the promising signs of the film year. The honest individual interested in his business and in its welfare reached the conclusion some time ago—shortly after the sound stampede smacked the trade, as a matter of record—that advertising copy was headed straight for the cleaners if troubles were to be dodged.

In the Producers' Footsteps

In fastening the onus for breaches in good taste, it is only fair to point out on behalf of the advertising branch of the business that its members followed religiously in footsteps clearly defined by their employers. The original trouble centered in the studios, was reflected in the home offices in New York and picked up with a sweeping alacrity by exhibitors throughout the land.

Now, it seems, a new day is dawning and, like all new days, much is promised and expected. Producers have pledged themselves to hew to the line as sharply as they know how. For their sake and for the sake of the industry, this column is rooting that they do.

Copy writers now having been commissioned by Will Hays to do likewise, a committee has been named, one meeting has been held and the machinery is lumbering on its way.

Spring and Housecleaning

It is significant that the necessary housecleaning is to come from within. The spectre of outside interference in the form of revived reform agitation and the rumblings of a Federal censorship are possibilities which cannot be overlooked. The measure of freedom which the industry is permitted to enjoy from now on will be in proportion to the manner in which it heeds its moral commitment with the public.

Insofar as Motion Picture News is concerned, the contemplated Hays plan constitutes ample justification for an editorial stand assumed many weeks ago. This writer socked and socked hard—he hopes—the inexcusable bad taste evidenced in exploiting "The Love Parade" in St. Louis and followed that incident with others from major cities throughout the United States.

What followed was a mixture of censure and praise. There were those who thought the point well taken. Others cried "Purist" and turned loose their ridicule on this hapless observer. But in the light of what is now happening, perhaps this forum was correct. At least, Hays is insisting upon the code to govern advertising and that, you will agree, places us in the same camp with the acknowledged head of the industry.

It is easily apparent, however, that unless the exhibiting fraternity swings into line, efforts to lift clear of questionable advertising can never become widespread.

The Shrine Called the Public

Showmen are fully entitled to utilize any and all measures that bring money into their box-offices, but it seems almost a needless task to emphasize their obligation to the public. Once that public loses confidence or respect for the theatres it patronizes, the chaps running them might make up their minds to enter another field.

The code and its scope will be ready in due order. If the purpose behind it materializes as its theory would indicate, the move will be constructive and helpful.

It's a definite assignment for every exhibitor in America to back it up. To the hilt, full and to the last letter.

Showdown Due on ASC Demand Music 'Tax' Be Paid to Exhibit Sound Films

Offers Resignation?

Joseph P. Kennedy, chairman of the Pathe Board of directors, who is reported to have offered to step down, in favor of a number of his associates, at Wednesday's meeting of company directors.

Snag Faced by 5-5-5 Confab as Exhibitors Protest Warranty on Tax

Proposed warranty on the music license payment by exhibitors, as demanded by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, promises to be a real stumbling block when the 5-5-5 conferences are resumed early in June to complete the draft of the standard contract being negotiated by the Hays office, the M.P.T.O.A. and Allied States Ass'n.

This was emphasized this week when John G. Paine of the Music Publishers' Protective Ass'n. indicated in no uncertain terms that his organization intends to stand pat on its demands that sound films containing music it controls be supplied only to theatres which have paid the music license.

The music society, in its contracts with Electrical Research Products and RCA-Photophone, stipulated that films using its copyrighted works be shown only in theatres which the society has licensed, and that any deviation from this stipulation by a distributor sub-licensee will violate that distributor's recording contract.

Distributors take the position that their hands are tied in the matter by virtue of their contract with the electrics, and that while their sympathies favor the exhibitor, they have no alternative.

Contend Contract Illegal

Exhibitors, on the other hand, insist that such a contract is illegal, and want omitted from the contract the proposed warranty, which automatically would cut off from film service any exhibitor who refuses to pay the so-called music tax to the society. The "tax" has been a bone of contention for years, with many exhibitors steadfastly refusing to pay it even in the threats of prosecution by the society, which has won damage actions against many exhibitors.

Allied States Ass'n. wants to substitute the warranty with another which says that the exhibitor warrants he has the legal right to play the picture concerned, so far as copyright is involved. President Abram F. Myers has asked distributors for a copy of their contract with the electrics, desiring to make a study of its legality.

Score Charge an Issue

The exhibitors insist that paying the society its demanded levy of ten cents per seat and then paying a score charge on pictures is unfair and illegal. They also are opposed to paying distributors a profit on the score charge.

Warranty that the theatre is licensed by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers is contained in new contracts now being used by Paramount and M-G-M.

Protection and the advance deposit demand of distributors are other controversial issues which confront the 5-5-5 conference.

Going to West Coast

P. G. Wodehouse, English humorist, who left New York May 1 for the Coast to begin work for M-G-M.

Talkers Talking Turkey; Selling Sunday Shows

Des Moines—Credit talking pictures with the trend toward Sunday shows throughout the Middle West. Their popularity is erasing old "blue" laws off the statute books, because of the desire of municipalities to keep showgoers at home on Sundays.

Where previously picture fans motored to neighboring towns on Sunday, seven-day operation of their local house permits them to enjoy pictures at home. The local solons feel that it is preferable, from the standpoint of morals, to keep young folk at home on Sunday, and the merchants find that it is good business.

This year a number of towns throughout Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri and the Dakotas have voted favorably upon the Sunday show question.

Lloyd Going to Hawaii

Hollywood—Harold Lloyd will head a party of 50 film folks, comprising actors, directors, cameramen and technicians, and forming the largest motion picture unit ever to leave the West Coast for a trip across the Pacific Ocean, when the steamship Malolo of the Matson line sails from San Francisco on May 24.

Sequences for his next picture, "Feet First," will be sound photographed at sea, and also in Hawaii.

Whatsa Matter With Kansas? Read 'n' Weep

Topeka, Kan.—William A. Smith, attorney-general of Kansas, is about to inaugurate a crusade against Sunday shows in the state.

"The law must be enforced," Smith declared, "and the law must be enforced in every town alike. But it is a hard task when the people of a community are not in favor of enforcement. However, we are taking the stand that all must obey the law alike. We are preparing to get out an injunction against every theatre owner who disregards the law and we shall direct county attorneys to take similar steps. Every prosecutor in counties where shows operate on Sundays has been warned the law must be enforced."

Last November a group of 16 ministers and church people visited Gov. Reed to demand that he enforce the Sunday labor laws. At that time the attorney-general said he would try to close theatres operating on Sundays by injunctions in those localities where it appeared that public sentiment would not permit their closing by prosecution.

Completing Swanson Film

Hollywood—Only a few scenes remain to be shot for "What a Widow," Gloria Swanson's new picture for United Artists release. The star has just completed the recording of three songs.

The Insiders' Outlook

A BUSINESS of funny twists. This proves it:

Two executives—headline stuff both of them—who are hitting it off on all cylinders insofar as outward appearances go, are crossing trails on the inside.

One chap is head of a company which has been moving forward in seven league strides in the last year or two. The other's company has long been one of the topnotchers and, while its position through the years has been threatened from time to time, the celluloid archives reveal that this outfit knows well enough how to maintain its position.

As events shape themselves, it wasn't so long ago that these two executives found it of mutual advantage to work hand-in-hand on many matters. There was the problem of theatre expansion to be sanely handled. Both were intrenching, digging in, expanding in the same territories and there appeared little use in overseating and, thereby, threatening damage potential revenue.

But the company of the meteoric rise has been stepping at a gait which is causing frequent periods of reflection in the other camp. The result, hardly tangible as yet but certain to take on more definite form as the summer advances, will be a series of checkmate moves. Of course, you might describe that which is to come as a desire to keep competition thriving.

Perhaps that's true. But with some knowledge of the ambition for power which runs through the minds of the film elite, that explanation falls by its own weight.

Actually, it is a case of one mogul, smile on face, grasping his compatriot by the hand while poising something what looks suspiciously like a knife in the other.

The Way of All Flesh

This yarn persistently refuses to die. It concerns a big operator—a man who, since he joined his present company, has spent many of its millions for expansion. Name got into the papers—newspaper and trade—often. A No. 1 guy in the eyes of the industry.

But a change seems to have crept into the picture in the last few months. You don't hear so much of him any more. Yet, his various titles are still his and ostensibly, at least, the situation is without change. A small group on the inside which insists it is in on the know, is persistent in its statements that this individual has been shorn of his power and give as a reason the suspicion that he recently rode his company into a financial morass from which it was difficult to emerge.

THE INSIDERS know the man. Many of you do, as well. If his name were made known, there would be amazement, punctuated by considerable wonder over how such a proud and autocratic spirit can hold up with wings clipped and authority checked.

All In the Breaks

Not far from Broadway's incandescents sits a film man, softly berthed in a comfortable spot, who has been getting away with it for so long that life was beginning to pall. By political maneuvering and an adept display of chicanery, a big job had fallen to his lot. The cards were so well stacked in his behalf—and why not since he had stacked them?—that apparently nothing short of an earthquake could unseat him.

Then came the dawn in the form of a confab. Some things had traveled the wrong way, insofar as the head of the company was concerned and he was inquiring why? Tough spot for the boy in the soft job. So in the direction of the Big Shot was thrown an ultimatum. He would deliver, or else.

Maybe he didn't take that to heart! So much so that he took his feet off the desk, rustled pencil and paper out of their resting place and began to figure. Then he went to work—really to work—and put over one deal for his company which again made him the white-haired boy.

Today, this chap is again bouncing over the tops of the waves. Maybe it will be lasting. Maybe. But the chief he renders his stewardship to is one vacillating hombre. And you can't tell what tomorrow will bring. In this business, anyway.

Circles—Square Ones?

Square pegs in round holes never make the grade, 'tis said, but in this man's picture business, square pegs must remain just that under agreements between some so-called best minds. And the bidding gag works—except where some person is wanted. Then the dog eat dog theory gets a play.

Recently a capable executive who had been with a certain organization a long time, was regarded by another firm as an ideal selection for a post in mind. In the new field, he would have opportunities far greater than in the old, as well as to fit into a post for which he was better equipped.

The donor of the new post, in accordance with the ethics of things, wrote a letter to the president of the other company, asking if there were objections to negotiations for the services of the man concerned. Followed threats of bringing down the wrath of the powers that be. This man was his company's property, so 'twould seem, and the company intended to keep him. However, a little appeal to common sense produced the desired result, the opposing proxy consented, the company made a deal and everything is serene along the Potomac. Wherefore, no names will be mentioned here.

Jousting for Credits

Ramblings from the Coast about under-cover bitterness at the Tiffany studio over "Journey's End." Eastern travelers have it that several of those prominently identified with its production are sorely peeved by a few reams of publicity, printed in Los Angeles dailies, crediting one of the studio executives with full honors for it, and no mention of the others. The latter are confiding to their intimates that if the particular individual had won his arguments the picture would be rated a dud, while the individual in question concedes that he had a stiff job on his hands holding the crew in line and making them stick to the stage script.

Star Chamber Methods Used to Plant Hays Aid in Academy, Members Charge

That's an Idea!

Fanchon and Marco are said to be the first theatrical producers in history to be honored by the Pullman Company. Two cars running out of Chicago have been named after the pair. One is Fanchon, the other Marco.

Shorts Program Boosts Theatre Intake by 50%

Seymour, Conn.—Presenting a program of nine short features and billing the show as a "$1,000.00 Vaudeville Talking Film Show" jumped box-office receipts 50 per cent above the average at Harry Feldman's Strand. In addition to advertising, and exploiting the program as mentioned, the idea of a vaudeville program was carried out in the presentation of each of the subjects on the screen.

"We used nine acts," said Feldman, "that is, eight acts and the Hearst-Metrotone News. We had name cards made for each unit and set up two easels, one on each side of the proscenium arch. The name cards were placed on them, and we used a baby spot to illuminate them. We had a boy on each side of the arch change the name cards, and light the baby spot light when necessary. The complete show consisted of 12 units, counting the overture, intermission and exit march. The front curtain was dropped after each unit was presented, and we used a non-sync record on which was recorded canned applause. We did this to make it look and appear as if our patrons were witnessing a real vaudeville show. Running time of show was two hours and twenty minutes.

"For the overture, intermission and exit march, we used the records from 'Hollywood Revue.' During the intermission we turned on the house lights and played the intermission records, and at the finish showed our coming attractions."

Vandals Destroy Seats In Chicago White Palace

Chicago—Vandals broke into the White Palace, west side house, this week, and caused damage estimated at several hundred dollars by cutting and destroying about one hundred recently installed seats. The fact that no other furnishings or equipment in the theatre were damaged gave rise to the belief that labor trouble might have been the cause of the depradation. However, the manufacturer (Heywood-Wakefield) denied that his factory had been involved in labor difficulties of any kind. The owner of the theatre, Abe Ostrovsky, said he knew of no reason for the act.

William De Mille Said to Have Engineered Selection of Clinton Wunder

Hollywood—If Will Hays expects to obtain eventual domination and control of the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences through the apparent planting of Clinton Wunder in that organization, the M.P.P.D. A. head is due for a rude awakening. This fact was made plain by several influential members of the organization when they first learned of Wunder's appointment as public relations counsel for the Academy.

Prominent members of the association are emphatic in their statements that the Academy had shown remarkable progress and accomplished much in its three short years of existence without any help or assistance during that time from either Hays or his assistants. In fact, it is charged that Hays had only tolerated the Academy in the past and some now see an ulterior motive behind his recently awakened interest in the welfare of the organization.

Won't Bow to Anyone

Determination is also expressed in positive terms by these members that they would never allow the influence of Hays to creep into the operation or control of the Academy. It is pointed out that the Academy membership comprises various groups that are independent—independent in thought, actions and speech—and that the financial status of the majority makes it unnecessary for any of them to bend the knee to Hays or anyone in the industry in order to protect their jobs.

Rumors that there are likely to be resignations from membership are discounted with the statements that every member of the Academy will henceforth exercise diligence in protecting the organization from any outside interference. The attitude of both Wunder and Hays will be carefully sifted from now on.

General announcement of the appointment of Wunder as public relations counsel of the Academy is creating a stir in the ranks of Academy members, especially certain members of the executive committee and board of directors. It seems entire negotiations for Wunder had been conducted in the strictest secrecy, and without the knowledge of these officials.

"Hello Yourself"

Hollywood—Rod La Rocque expects soon to make his debut as co-inventor with Robert Frazer of a self-answering telephone. La Rocque, who has a machine shop and laboratory built into his Hollywood home, claims the invention will not only answer calls but also take messages, according to his press agent.

A la Espagnol

Santiago—Picturegoers saw and heard their first talker recently by means of superimposition of Spanish words on the English used in the original version.

Yellers Yelling NEWS Is Yellow; Yeah? Sez Noah

"Yellow" boost is the cause of the jaundiced power of the industry.

So charge at least two picture personages. They accuse Empeenews of being "yellow." If true, the great majority of important producer-distributor-exhibitor executives and successful independent exhibitors are enjoying chronic "yellow" fever, according to NEWS circulation department figures.

The yellers who are putting the yell in "yellow" deserve to win one argument, so the NEWS is making certain that this issue has yellow in it.

Mr. Noah Webster, an author of some note, even though he hasn't written for the screen, defines "yellow" as "of a bright, pure color, resembling gold." NEWS subscribers deserve that consolation for their "yellow" fever. Further, it is pointed out by two other blind men who are keen students of color, "yellow" is the hue of sunshine; it is the color of ripe wheat—the staff of life if not of spankings—the color of corn, stepchild of the Eighteenth Amendment. Best of all, it is the color of blondes, and Anita Loos has convinced the world that gentleman prefer blondes.

So ends a thesis on "yellow," printed on "yellow" so that two color-blind men can henceforth distinguish between facts in black or yellow, but facts, nevertheless.

Montague and McConville Feted at Boston Party

Boston—Representatives of all branches of the industry here assembled to honor Abe Montague and Joseph A. McConville, district managers for Columbia, and former proprietors of Independent Films.

McConville has just completed two terms as head of the Boston Film Board and both men are among the most popular in the New England field.

Harry Campbell of Fox headed the committee in charge, assisted by Joseph A. Roth of Consolidated Films, Louis M. Boas, representing the exhibitors, and William H. Erbb of Paramount.

Diamond rings were presented to the guests at the close of the dinner. Entertainment was supplied by professional talent from Boston and New York theatres.

Roxy's Contract with R-K-O Expected To Hasten Final Wash-Up with Fox

New Deal Reported Made to Precipitate Break With Fox Officers

Termination of the contract between S. L. Rothafel and Fox is regarded as imminent in New York film circles, following revelation of the contract with Radio-Keith-Orpheum, which Roxy signed some time ago. Roxy's contract still has two years to run, but the new contract, it is said, was signed to precipitate matters in the break with Fox officials which has been portended for some time. Under the new deal, Roxy is to be managing director of the mammoth house to be built by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and operated by R-K-O.

Roxy announced his new association to his staff prior to going to Bermuda with M. H. Aylesworth, president of National Broadcasting Co. At that time, he hinted that berths for some members of his organization probably would be available at the new post.

The theatre to be built will be larger than the Roxy, and be part of a huge amusement project between Fifth and Sixth Aves. from 48th to 51st Sts. There will be three theatres and a large broadcasting station, the principal theatre slated to seat 7,500. Construction starts within a few weeks, with the house to be opened by June 1, 1930.

To Get $5,000 Weekly

If the break with Fox materializes, Roxy, it is understood, will confine his activities to broadcasting until the new theatre is ready.

Under terms of the contract, Roxy is to receive $5,000 weekly, it is said. His present salary is understood to be $3,000, to which figure it was raised from $2,000, after Fox acquired control of the Roxy.

John Zanft, general manager of Fox Theatres, will take over direction of the Roxy upon termination of Rothafel's contract, it is stated.

Normal-Tone Officials on Coast

San Francisco—Norman Goldstein of Universal Television, Inc., and J. C. Rich, sales manager, have arrived in the interest of the new Normal-Tone sound equipment.

New Exchange Building

St. Louis—Paramount-Publix is to occupy a two-story film exchange building being erected at Olive Blvd. and Compton Avenue. The structure will cost $50,000 and is being erected by Theodore Mussey.

Loew's Net Up

Net of $8,243,584 for the 28 weeks ended March 14 is reported by Loew's, Inc., on an operating profit of $10,893,972. This compares with net of $5,251,958 for the same period last year.

Radio Signs Young Singer

Roberta Robinson, 17-year-old singer, has been signed by Radio Pictures and will star in a series of pictures for that company.

Spoor Process Debut

Hollywood—Wide film and wide screen of the Spoor-Berggren process will make its feature debut with the showing of a western now under way at the RKO studio. The story is an original by James Ashmore Creelman. In the cast will be Jean Arthur, Louis Wolheim and Robert Armstrong. Previously it had been intended to make "Dixianna" the initial picture employing the process, which has been under development for several years by George K. Spoor, pioneer producer.

Feature Brevity Hikes Overhead, Showmen Assert

Minneapolis—Exhibitors of this territory are chafing at the prevailing short length of features, declaring that it is resulting in boosting overhead to an alarming point.

Because of the number of shorts they are forced to use to round out their program, some exhibitors of the territory assert that they pay more for shorts than they do for the feature.

Brown Sponsors Center

Hiram S. Brown, president of R-K-O, is a member of the board of trustees of a Brooklyn group sponsoring a $100,000,000 medical center to be organized in association with nine hospitals in the borough across the East River.

Yes, Mr. Jolson

One of Mark Hellinger's newest Hollywood yarns is about "a very arty organization in Los Angeles" [Can he mean the Academy of Arts?] which awarded prizes for the best picture productions of the season. The prizes were given during a banquet that was attended by practically everyone in the business.

The prizes were in the shape of little statues. Everybody got one. They even gave Texas Guinan some kind of a mention for "Queen of the Night Clubs." They forgot but one man: Al Jolson. Al sat there and saw everybody getting a little statue. He was being ignored. He felt he was entitled to a little something for "The Singing Fool." But nothing arrived.

The hour was growing late when the master of ceremonies called on Jack Warner. He went into a flowery speech and handed Warner the inevitable statue. This was too much for Jolson. He leaped to his feet.

"What good is that statue to Jack Warner?" he cried. "It can't say yes!"

Television Peril Is Far Distant, Says De Forest

Minneapolis—Television may be just around the corner, but it's "a mighty long corner and there's lots of wind blowing around it, so far as theatre owners are concerned," Dr. Lee De Forest, inventor of Phonofilm, declared in a recent speech before exhibitors here.

Although he said television for the home is imminent, Dr. De Forest added that exhibitors need not worry about developments in that line for from 10 to 20 years.

"Within 10 or 20 years probably we shall be sending motion pictures by wire instead of by film, and there is now a machine which may be installed in the home which receives by radio and a half tone picture about two inches square, which may be viewed by only two persons at a time. However, these will not be in practical use in homes for several years," he said.

"A photo-electric cell, the eye of television, 100 times more sensitive than those now perfected, must be developed before television will be practical. Television also," he said, "must have a wider wave band than is now available."

"A most important forward step in talking pictures is the development by which it is now possible to use a quarter-inch track for the recording of sound waves on the motion picture film, instead of the one-tenth of-an-inch film."

Three Films Deleted By Virginia Censors

Richmond—Deletions in three films, "The Divorcee," M-G-M; "Hold Everything," Warner; and "Spring is Here," First National, have been ordered by state censors.

Eliminations pertain to scenes and dialogue. The censors examined 78 films comprising 228 reels for the two weeks ending April 19, as compared with 67 films with a total of 153 reels scrutinized within a similar period ending April 5.

Only one film was molested within the period ending April 5, it being Fox's "The Golden Calf," in which three scenes were found objectionable. "The Golden Calf" came back in expurgated form and was licensed. It played the Capitol.

Exchanges May Refuse to Sell Films to K. C. "Pan" as Price Slashing Kickback

How to Write Theme Songs

By Eddie Quillan

1. Avoid originality whenever possible.
2. Don't read the scenario until after the theme song is written. It may cramp your style.
3. Familiarity with the works of other composers is an important requisite.
4. If the novice song writer runs short of words at the end of a line, cleverly add a "hey-hey," a "Vo-do-dee-o-do" or a "boop-boopa-doop."
5. All lines, except in the above instance, should end with words rhyming with June, mammy, or boy.
6. Remember that blue songs are coming back into their own. They are now enhanced by the new medium, Technicolor!
7. The locales for all blue songs must be below the Mason and Dixon line, or on a dirty river.
8. Or so it themes.

Warners, F. N., To Make Foreign Talkers on W. C.

While other major producers are developing a pool for production of foreign language talkers, Warners and First National intend to make pictures for export at the Coast studios. In connection with this plan, the companies are establishing a school of foreign languages on the Coast, where four instructors soon will institute the course.

As soon as company players are sufficiently proficient in the languages concerned, production of talkers in that tongue will be instituted. Other companies are planning to make talkers abroad on a co-operative basis. Adolph Zukor now is in Europe in connection with the plan.

Seeks Order to Halt Rebuilding of Theatre

Mansfield, O.—Ben Schwartz, manager of the Ohio and head of the Empire Amusement Co. here, has begun proceedings seeking a permanent order restraining the Memorial Building Co., a township organization, from rebuilding the Madison Theatre, destroyed by fire several months ago. The action is based on the claim that the procedure is illegal. It is said that the Scareb Amusement Co. is financing the project, having put up $200,000 to carry on the work, and that this company will lease the house on completion, considering the $200,000 as advance monthly rental covering a period of 25 years.

Day and Date Runs in Suburban House Suggested to Combat Admission Cut

Kansas City—That tempest in a teapot, brought about by slash of prices at the Pantages, first run house, may result in a test of the whole question of protection, it is indicated. The "Pan" recently cut to a 25 cent top, which is 15 cents below the general top charged at suburbans for subsequent runs of the pictures which play first at the Pantages.

M. B. Shanberg, president of the Midland circuit, which has a number of suburban houses here, says he will not follow the Pantages with pictures which play the downtown house at the lower tariff. He says he will ask cancellation of pictures which get "two bit" runs at the Pantages. As the Midland circuit is a powerful one in this territory, his stand will carry considerable weight with exchanges.

One exchange manager says he will refuse to sell the Pantages if the house continues its 25 cent policy. However, Manager Louis Charninsky declares he has good product bought and does not contemplate changing the present policy.

Just how far ahead Charninsky has bought his pictures has not been disclosed, but it is rumored here that exchanges may have something to say regarding the releasing of their pictures for first run at 25 cents and second run at 40 cents. It is possible that pictures playing at the Pantages will be available for earlier neighborhood runs at lower admission prices. A day and date policy has been suggested.

Taxation to Be Principal Topic at Carolina Meeting

Charlotte—Taxation is expected to be the principal topic at the summer convention of exhibitors of North and South Carolina to be held June 8 and 9 at Myrtle Beach.

Daylight Saving Voted

Whitehall, N. Y.—Daylight saving was victorious at the referendum here by vote of 624 to 416. The election was one of the most spirited of recent years.

Lost Motion with Ads

Washington—Post Office Department has launched a campaign to encourage advertisers to give their complete address in advertisements. The government estimates that approximately 50 per cent of all ads appearing in newspapers, magazines and trade papers do not show a street address and number. Responses, therefore, omit that necessary information which seriously interferes with prompt delivery of such mail and not infrequently resulting in non-delivery.

Form No. 117567

Here's Paul Dejereinis' version of a star's biography bunko a la 1930 press-agent style:

"How did you become a movie star, Miss Lola Lulu?"

"I ran away from a convent at the age of fourteen I came to Hollywood when I was sixteen. Von Schmitzelheim, the famous foreign director, saw me in a small part in the 'Garrulous Gorilla' and recognized my artistry. I was then starred in 'The Pretzel Murder Case,' 'Hey, Hey, Hannah' and 'Passionate Pastrami.' I am only eighteen years old now and live with my mother, who is my dearest companion."

"What are your hobbies, Miss Lulu?"

"I love Shakespeare and Chekhov. They are so unfathomable! Bridge and swimming are my favorite sports. They stimulate one mentally. Yes, the talkies will bring greater artistry than ever to the screen."

Played Banned Picture; Mayor Imperils License

Madison, Wis.—Action on the request of Mayor A. G. Schmedeman that the license of the Majestic theatre here be revoked was deferred by the city council license committee at a recent meeting pending a joint meeting of this committee with the city censorship committee for the purpose of working out a new plan for censorship of moving pictures in the city.

Mayor Schmedeman in his previous letter to the council reported that E. M. Michalson, manager, had recently shown a film "No More Children," which had not been approved by the censorship board.

The council committee approved Ald. H. J. Schmiege's resolution to delay action and hold the joint meeting when members of the committee admitted ignorance of local censorship methods. No definite date for the meeting was set.

Sentenced for Hurling Stench Bomb in Theatre

Minneapolis—Percy Wing, stage hand at the State, was sentenced to 45 days in the workhouse when he was found guilty by Judge Paul S. Carroll of throwing a stench bomb into the Grand. A disagreement between operators of the Grand and members of the stagehands' union is believed to have prompted the bomb throwing. Operators of the theatre are said to have refused the union's demand that stagehands be employed.

Cleveland Exhibitors, Claiming "Backs To the Wall," Seek Relief from 'Changes

Harwood Says Suburban Intakes Have Dropped Off A Third Since Jan. 1

Cleveland—Because, he says, business in the local suburban and subsequent-run motion picture theatres has dropped off more than 33 1/3% since January 1, J. J. Harwood, president of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, has invited the branch managers of the Cleveland exchanges to confer with the board of directors of the Cleveland Exhibitors' Ass'n., in an effort to work out a relief plan whereby the independent exhibitor can stay in business.

"The subsequent-run independent theatre owner has been the victim of the musical comedy and revue epidemic in the motion picture industry," said Harwood, in his explanation of the dire necessity for some relief for this type of exhibitor.

"Tunes of the tune shows are so old by the time they reach the subsequent run house, that not only are they no asset, but they are a distinct liability. Tunes plugged over the radio weeks before the release of a picture, played by every cabaret band, and every song counter plugger, followed by their first run engagements, just about exhaust their popularity. And once its popularity is over, the tune is dead, and the show it once made, is also dead.

"This alone would have been enough to seriously handicap the independent subsequent run theatre owner. Add to this, the excessively high cost of sound operation, and the close price competition between the downtown and neighborhood houses, and it is evident that, unless some relief is granted, the independent neighborhood house is doomed."

Reduction in the price of film, and decreased protection are among the relief measures that the Cleveland Exhibitors Association will ask of the distributors at the forthcoming meeting.

Publix and Crescent Building in Nashville

Nashville, Tenn.—A theatre building race is on here and when it is ended this city will have 4,200 more seats.

The Crescent Amusement Co. is to erect a $1,000,000 office building and theatre, at Sixth Ave. and Church St. The present structure is now being razed and plans for the project have been completed by Marr & Holman, architects. The auditorium will follow the Venetian style and seat 2,700.

A half million dollar Publix house is being erected at Eighth Ave. and Church St., the contract calling for the completion of the building by Sept. 1. It is designed to seat 1,500.

Technicolor Awards Contract

Hollywood—Technicolor has awarded the Austin Co. of California the contract for design and construction of a camera maintenance and repair building.

Showmanship A La 1930

Mason City, Ia.—Aviation turned ally to the local show business when J. M. Heffner, managing the Palace, discovered that negligence of a brother exhibitor at Emmetsburg jeopardized box office receipts on Monday.

The Emmetsburg exhib sent a print of "Sarah and Son" to Heffner. It arrived too late for a rehearsal and only just in time for the first show. As the feature unreeled, the projectionist discovered that the last reel was missing and a checkup showed that the shipper had failed to enclose it in the print can. Hurry calls to the airport brought an airplane and Heffner flew to Emmetsburg, picked up the missing print, returning it to his theatre just before the previous reel had ended.

Studio Pops Use The Slipper to Tan Bad Girls

Hollywood—When players upset the studios with rebellious conduct, heavy slippers in the form of work in two-reelers, poor roles and minor supporting roles under newcomers, descend in the hand of their studio "pops"—and sometimes they work wonders.

Life is anything but pleasant on the lot when some high-hatting femme puts on the dog in the form of "temper-ment," and the wise producers have their own methods—very effective ones, too—for use in knocking 'em down to earth.

Samuel Mook, writing in "Picture Play," tells of several cases where big names were put over the studio pops' knee and given a sound tanning. "Joan Crawford, now one of the most tractable stars on the M-G-M lot was not immune," he says. "For a time, Joan had the idea that Gish and Garbo, and all the other talented sisterhood who have graced that stormswept area, had nothing on her for histrionic ability."

"Pop" Mayer Goes to Work

Something had to be done. It was. Papa Mayer summoned Miss Crawford into the sacred precincts of his inner sanctum, and what he didn't say was only what he forgot. He ended the sermon by telling her that she was such a swell actress, and so indispensable that they had decided to let her support Colonel Tim McCoy, in his latest Western.

"When Joan finally stumbled out into the California sunshine, she wasn't wearing rose-

Well, Do They?

Does John Stahl of Hollywood know that John Stahl is an exhibitor operating a theatre at Homestead, Pa.?

Does D. J. Selznick of Hollywood know that D. J. Selznick is an exhibitor at McKees Rocks, Pa.?

Does Archie Fineman, operating a theatre at Beaver Falls, Pa., know that Bernie Fineman is now supervising for M-G-M?

Warners Purchase Eleven M. T. C. Wisconsin Houses

Milwaukee—Despite the fact that no definite announcement has been made, it appears that the Milwaukee Theatre Circuit, Inc., operating eleven theatres in the state, will be taken over by Warner Bros., if it has not already reverted to the new owners.

Fred S. Meyer, managing director of the circuit, is back in Milwaukee after a week in New York, but refuses to make any statement. The deal will not include the Alhambra here, it is believed.

Theatres included are the Lake, Kosciuszko, Venetian, Downer, State, Riviera and Juneau, all Milwaukee neighborhood houses; and the Venetian and Rialto, Racine; Sheboygan, Sheboygan; and Kenosha, Kenosha. These theatres will be operated by Warners, it is believed, in addition to its new downtown house now under construction.

Universal will continue to operate the Alhambra, which will be redecorated and renovated.

Gov. Roosevelt Signs Operators' Rest Bill

Albany—One day of rest in seven for New York operators will be provided by law starting Sept 1. The bill, which recently passed the legislature, has been signed by Governor Roosevelt. Twenty-four hours of consecutive rest are made mandatory under the measure.

The operators' bill is the only one directly affecting the film industry which survived this year's session.

Coast Visitors in N. Y.

Arrivals from Hollywood:

Norman Taurog, who will direct a picture in the East for Paramount.

Fay Wray, out of the Paramount studio on her first New York trip in two years.

Viola Dana, also vacationing.

"Buddy" Rogers is due in two weeks to make "Heads Up" for Paramount.

Lack of Backbone Causing Independents To Throw Up Sponge, Exchange Men Say

Going Up

Washington — Copyright entries in the Library of Congress have increased from 55,000 in 1898 to 264,000 last year, many thousands in the current group having been issued on motion picture equipment.

Cut Prices in Omaha Stir up Loud Squawks

Omaha—Local suburban exhibitors and houses in country towns within 40 miles of Omaha are squawking plenty since Easter Sunday when Harry Goldberg, former Publix division manager, opened the Moon with sound at 15-cent matinees and 25-cent nights.

House is a 1,200-seater, located downtown in one of the best spots in town. It is wired with RCA Photophone and playing the best second run pictures with three changes a week.

The house may hurt local exhibs when the public gets wise to policy and pictures played, as little newspaper space is used. Suburban houses, getting second run pictures in about 30 days after downtown break, tax from 25 to 35 cents with no matinees.

Out of town houses, with 50 cents top, feel the most cut up about the "jitney."

Business was okay the first week, according to Goldberg, who is also wiring the Muse, located ten blocks from the heart of town.

Small Exhibs Passing Up Big Chance to Capitalize Opportunities

Are independent theatre operators throwing up the sponge upon the false theory that individual operation is impractical and unfeasible under conditions existing in the industry?

That is a question being asked by exchange men in various sections of the country in the light of operating methods now being employed by circuits and independents. A number of independents, these exchangemen report to Motion Picture News, are giving up the ghost, some of them through shiftlessness and others through incompetence or indifference, plus the belief that the struggle just isn't worth while.

In this connection, exchange men report, the circuit managers find themselves on the spot in order to hold down their jobs, and so put real effort into operation of their theatres. The owner-operator, on the contrary, is his own boss and has a steady job regardless of his efficiency.

Demonstration has been given in the past of the opportunities which can be realized from an independent house properly operated, provided product is obtainable. These are the advantages of personal attention, contact and his standing in the community.

In many instances, however, it is asserted, these advantages are being thrown overboard by many independents, who feel that sooner or later circuit competition will sound their business death knell, and just haven't the energy or ability to prevent that eventuality.

Says the Gag Man:

"It's an ill wind that doesn't blow the girls' skirts upward."

"The modern family is strong for the two-car propaganda, but not for the two-baby idea."

"The only way you can insult a girl nowadays is by not insulting her."

Portland Cuts Prices; 50 Cent Maximum Seen

Portland, Ore.—Despite the fact that Howard Sheehan, vice-president of Fox West Coast Theatres, recently declared that business here and in Seattle is 100 per cent. ahead of the first quarter of 1929, prices of admission continue downward here, and before the end of the summer season it is expected that 50 cents will be the universal top price. Recently the Portland Paramount reduced its price of 50 cents top, since which time Phil Lampkin and his Paramounteers have been added. The latest house to reduce prices is the Fox Alder, which dropped to 35 cents top, but now will show subsequent runs.

Numerous outside attractions, including the opening of the baseball season, golf and the opening of three outside parks, tend to cut in heavily on the matinee business. This will bring out some real showmanship on the part of exhibitors, in order to hold their patronage during the summer months.

There's Life for the Independent Yet

Changed attitude of producer-distributors toward one, two and three-theatre circuits, which is leading to turning back of a number of houses to independents, is providing a new lease on life for independents, Motion Picture News pointed out editorially last week.

The opportunity for operation of their houses by independents, without fear of circuit competition, was stressed in the editorial, which queried the attitude of these independents in view of the "breathing spell" which the changed situation has provided.

The reasons for the situation, said the editorial, are several:

"Firstly, perhaps, the national chains have learned with considerable pain that manuals of operation, blueprint instructions and correspondence school managers don't seem to get over in theatres where the individual touch of the local manager has counted for so long.

"Telling a chap in Iowa how to do it from behind a desk in New York or Chicago looks grand on paper, but in actual fact it rarely works.

"So it is your powerful circuits have discovered that the problem of the small and medium-sized town is one which they have been unable to adequately handle.

Move is Under Way

"Secondly, the profit is comparatively too slight for the trouble involved, as a result of which big operators from now on may be expected to devote time and money to situations where they figure the return is commensurate with effort applied.

"It is some weeks now since Motion Picture News first caught this trend and published the fact that several thousand houses will be returned to individual operation by the end of the year. The movie is beginning to assert itself.

"Nothing more vital from the independents' angle has developed in this business in many, many months. This does not mean that the wave of theatre acquisition is over. On the contrary, the campaign is aggressively on, and the news headlines of the next few months will demonstrate how accurate this observation is. But it does mean that below a certain level, the producer circuits will not go. What that level will be is difficult to gauge, but in the opinion of those who should know it appears that towns with populations of 20,000 to 25,000 will not be touched except where a concentration of industrial activity makes it smart business for the circuits to invade them. College towns fall into a similar category."

Nathanson Threatens Rival Circuit if Paramount Gets F. P.—Canadian Corp.

Operator, Allied with Fox, Said to Have Backing of Royal Bank

Toronto—N. L. Nathanson intends to carry out his plan announced several months ago to build up a rival circuit in Canada, allied with Fox, in the event Famous Players Canadian Corp. carries out the proposed approved by directors to sell control of the circuit to Paramount-Publix.

Nathanson attended the stormy session of directors of the Canadian firm, and opposed acceptance of the Paramount offer at the meeting. He is declared to have stated that he has strong financial backing for his proposed chain of Canadian theatres. Presumably, this is Sir Herbert Holt, head of the Royal Bank of Canada, who quit the Famous board at the time of the jam last year.

The mix-up started when Nathanson returned from England with an offer of purchase of the Canadian chain by Gaumont British. Adolph Zukor of Paramount and I. W. Killam, Montreal, who with Nathanson comprise the voting trusteeship, blocked submission of the plan to stockholders, insisting that the sale would mean control of the Canadian chain by Fox. This they intended to fight against, it was asserted, in a determination to keep control in Canadian hands. Nathanson resigned from the firm as a result. He continues as a voting trustee, however, and the trusteeship cannot be dissolved without unanimous consent of all members. The trusteeship was formed when Paramount sold its shares in the Canadian firm back to the company and its stockholders.

Now Paramount is desirous of purchasing the Canadian chain, and is offering four shares of its stock for each five of the Canadian company.

There is a real fight looming in the race for support, as Zukor and Killam cannot vote the stock held in trust in favor of the merger, so long as Nathanson opposes it.

"Charley's Aunt" 1 of 2 Christies for Columbia

Christie Film Co., will make two features for Columbia for 1930-31, one of them "Charley's Aunt," which the company made as a silent several years ago for P.D.C. release. The deal was closed by Charles Christie and Simon Rowson, who controls English rights. Rowson's company, Ideal Films, Ltd., will handle distribution of "Charley's Aunt" in Great Britain.

Fitzgibbons Is Chief

Boston—Paramount is confident its deal for purchase of control of Famous Player Canadian Corp. will go through, it is indicated with appointment of J. J. Fitzgibbons as director general of Paramount-Publix in the Dominion. A testimonial dinner to "Fitz" is scheduled here May 6.

Invasion Planned by Others

Toronto—Possibility of "other large and powerful interests" entering the Canadian field is cited by Vice-President J. P. Bickell, of Famous Players-Canadian, as one reason why stockholders of the firm should accept the Paramount-Publix opportunity. Under terms of the offer, a minimum of 250 shares, or voting trust certificates representing that number, must be deposited before May 25, in which event the exchange of stock would be effective June 5, entitling agreeing shareholders to Paramount's June 28 dividend.

Lawyer Attacks F. P.-Can. Sale as 'Abuse of Power'

Toronto—"Breach of trust"—"abuse of power"—"national menace"—are some of the choice terms used by Attorney W. A. Roebuck, representing minority stockholders, to describe the proposal of directors to sell control of Famous Players Canadian Corp. to Paramount-Publix. Roebuck, who is attorney for N. L. Nathanson, is organzing a protective committee to fight the proposed merger. The fight is expected to be carried to court for an injunction "to preserve the Canadian screen from American domination."

"One year ago," Robuck asserts, "the voting rights in the controlling shares of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Lmited, were placed in the hands of three trustees, N. L. Nathanson of Toronto, I. W. Killam of Montreal and Adolph Zukor of New York. Shares themselves, ex voting rights, were offered to the Canadian public at $51 a share. Canadians were urged to purchase on the representation that their so doing would retain in Canadian control the dominant chain of Canadian screen theatres. Large numbers of shares were purchased by Canadians with this patriotic purpose in view.

Contrasts Two Offers

"Some time afterwards, Mr. Nathanson received an offer of $75 cash per share for all shares offering of the Canadian company from the Gaumont British company, it being a condition that sufficient shares be obtained to ensure control.

"This offer was turned down by Messrs. Killam and Zukor as voting trustees of the controlling interest, on the ground that William Fox, an American, owned an interest in the British company. Mr. Killam cabled that control by Fox would be contrary to the prospectus and advertisements.

"If a sale to the British company would be contrary to prospectus and advertisements," Roebuck winds up, "because of the presence of an American among the shareholders, what is to be said of the sale holus bolus to an American company? What are the shareholders to think of the refusal of $75 cash and the acceptance of $58 worth of minority shares in a company of which they know nothing and in the management of which they will have practically no voice."

Publix Expands In New England; Now in Norwalk

Norwalk, Conn.—Paramount-Publix is continuing its expansion program in New England, and on May 1 took over the Empress and Regent here. This leaves the city without an independently-operated house, for Warners have the Palace and Rialto. Charles and Mary Vuono, Stamford, are operating the Empress and Regent under lease from Andrew J. Collins, owner, who has been dickering with Paramount.

Ohio Cities to Get RKO Vaudeville Next Season

Columbus, O.—This city as well as Dayton, will, according to present plans, have R-K-O vaudeville when the new season opens in September. The Chamber of Commerce and influential residents at Dayton have petitioned Hiram S. Brown, president of R-K-O, to reinstate vaudeville at Keith's when the organization takes the house over on May 15.

Fox Signs Two Leading Women for New Pictures

Louise Huntington, leading player in several Broadway productions, has signed for Fox Movietone productions. She leaves for the Coast in May.

Her first picture work was the leading feminine role in "Vikings of the North," which was made on locations in Newfoundland and Labrador, with Captain Bob Bartlett, Arctic explorer.

Luana Alcaniz, 21-year-old singer and dancer, has also been engaged. She will play the leading feminine role in "Renegades," in which Warner Baxter, Victor McLaglen, Kenneth McKenna and Ed Brendel appear.

Comedy Shorts Now Being Stressed, S. W. Hatch Says

In the playing of short features, exhibitors are placing most emphasis on comedy, according to Stanley W. Hatch, general sales manager of Educational, who has returned to New York following a cross-country trip to company exchanges.

Paramount Gets Comerford Circuit of 75 Houses in Four-Cornered Rivalry

Stanley Co. Out

Philadelphia—That once proud organization, the Stanley Co. of America, is to pass out of the picture as a separate entity under steps planned by Warners. A few years ago the Stanley firm was in a commanding position, holding control of management of First National, by virtue of a pooling arrangement, and in a fair way to carry out the long-cherished dream of the late Jules Mastbaum of nationalizing the First National group into one circuit extending from Coast to Coast.

Plan 'Adventure Theatres' Showing Travel Subjects

Establishment in key cities of a chain of small houses devoted to adventure travel small houses devoted to adventure, travel ing Picture Epics and a group of capitalists. The houses would be known as Adventure Theatres.

Talking Picture Epics program for the 1930-31 season includes more than twenty features, each devoted to an explorer, adventurer, scientist, writer or speaker. In addition it will release a number of short subjects.

Goldstone on Leave of Absence from Tiffany

Hollywood—Phil Goldstone, production head of Tiffany, may take an indefinite leave of absence from that position, he has advised Tiffany executives in New York. Goldstone's mother has been in ill health for several months, with doctors recommending a recuperative trip to Lake Tahoe. When and if she makes the trip, her son will accompany her. Rather than attempt direction of studio affairs from long distance, Phil Goldstone has requested Tiffany to find another executive to take over entire charge of production during his absence. He further stated it would be acceptable to him for the substitute to remain permanently in his place if the new man was satisfactory to Tiffany officials.

Larkin Not Connected With Move vs. Exclusives

Hollywood—Recently abandoned movement to make all studio news available simultaneously to all publications was not conceived and fostered by an executive of the Ass'n. of M. P. Producers. A confused report had connected Mark Larkin, publicity counsellor of the association, with the movement. Larkin is not connected with the studio publicity committee, which sponsored the ruling, since suspended.

East's Largest Independent Chain Sought by R-K-O, Warners and Fox

Acquisition of the Comerford circuit of Pennsylvania, New York and New England theatres is about to be completed by Paramount-Publix. The deal ended spirited bidding for the East's largest independent chain between Paramount, Warners, Radio-Keith-Orpheum and Fox. At various times in recent weeks one or the other of the four companies, now engaged in drives for theatres throughout the country, had been reported as successful in the bidding.

The deal is said to involve nearly $20,000,000. Comerford is to retain active management of the circuit.

The move by Paramount is seen as driving an entering wedge in its campaign for a Pennsylvania stronghold, plans for which were announced exclusively by Motion Picture News several weeks ago. Since it became evident that Warners were out after what amounts to practically complete control in Pennsylvania, Paramount has been stepping fast to head off that eventuality.

Comerford has headed the circuit bearing his name for the last 25 years, after opening the Bijou at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., early in 1905. In some of his theatres, notably in Buffalo and up-state New York, Comerford has been a partner with Fox.

Warner Bros. Acquire Eight More Theatres

The acquisition of theatres by Warners continues without pause. Spyros P. Skouras, managing director of the circuit, this week announced the taking over of the Fairmont and Virginia in Fairmont, W. Va., and the Columbia Circuit of six houses in Erie, Warren, Sharon and Wesleyville, Pa.

Sells Chain to Paramount

Punch

Pulling power of trade press advertising is being demonstrated by "Flip, the Frog," new synchronized cartoon series created by "Ub" Iwerks, all European rights for which were sold within ten days after first trade announcement of the series. This, says Charlie Giegerich, general manager of Celebrity Prod., which is making the series, was before the first subject had been seen outside the Iwerks studio in Hollywood. Celebrity and affiliated exchanges will handle the series in the United States.

Eastern Studios Humming; Fire Code Is Revised

Revision of the fire code in Greater New York will increase production activity, already near a peak. The RCA-Gramercy studios are slated to reopen within the next 60 days, when Louis Brock and Amedee J. Van Beuren, among other producers, will shift production to that plant.

Paramount New York studios lead in activities with two features. "The Sap From Syracuse," featuring Jack Oakie and Ginger Rogers, and "Animal Crackers," starring the Four Marx Brothers, now in production, and another, "Heads Up," with Buddy Rogers, slated to start in a few weeks. Short subjects will continue to be made at this studio, 136 being contemplated. About 16 features on the new program will be made at the studio.

At the eastern Vitaphone studio several additions to both the writing and directorial staffs have been made and the plant is following a heavy schedule, averaging six to seven Varieties a week.

The opera "Pagliacci" and the first of the "Sheriff Crumpet" and "Old Bill" series have been completed at the Audio-Cinema studio and a series of Terrytoons also are in production for Educational.

Activities at the Metropolitan studio at Fort Lee, N. J., find "Othello," a five-reel feature, completed for N. B. C. and a two-reel short with Lou Tellegen and five other shorts for Megaphone pictures finished. The schedule calls for continued production of "Out of the Inkwell" cartoons and six new shorts to be made for Harry Revier.

Stage Hand Ordered for 1,000 Seaters in Omaha

Omaha — Ordinance requiring local houses of 1,000 seats or more to keep at least one man on stage at all times to handle electrical equipment and guard against fires was passed unanimously by the city council. The bill was advocated by stagehands and was unopposed by exhibitors.

Universal to "Rise or Fall" on New Policy, Laemmle Tells Sales Force

Manie's Day

Wednesday was Manie Gottlieb's day at Universal's sales convention, marking the culmination of several years of effort in the company's behalf. For Wednesday, Manie, who rejoined the company slightly more than a year ago as Cincinnati manager, was hailed as the leading branch manager of the Universal force, with tribute paid to him on the convention floor. He had joined the company to find vindication, after resigning as St. Louis manager some time before. He found it Wednesday, together with announcement on the floor of the convention of a substantial raise, as evidence of the company's recognition of what he has accomplished.

Universal Executives Discuss Foreign Films

A policy on talkers in foreign language countries will be discussed in Atlantic City over the week-end by the two Laemmles and their foreign representatives who have been attending the Universal sales convention in New York. Decision may be made to produce overseas.

N. L. Manheim, foreign manager, will attend, as will H. McIntyre, general representative in Australia; Monroe Isen, general manager for Latin America; Al Szekler, general manager for Europe, and Frank Ditcham, general sales manager in England.

Year's List of Twenty to Be Sold on Individual Basis After Filming

Sale of pictures on an individual basis after they are made is provided for in the new policy of Univeral which is prepared to "rise or fall" this year on its new plan of operation, the sales force was told at the first international sales convention by President Carl Laemmle. Universal has scheduled 20 pictures for the 1930-31 season and a limited number of shorts. Serials, long a fixture on the Universal program, will be discarded next season.

Carl Laemmle

In the first group to be sold by Universal for the new season will be from 5 to 7 pictures, all of which have been completed. District and branch managers of the United States and Canada today are en route to their respective territories to launch sales on new season's product.

The Universal convention started last Saturday and wound up on Thursday. Carl Laemmle and Carl Laemmle, Jr., headed the list of company executives from Europe,

To Continue Silents

Chicago — Declaration that Universal's features will be made in silent versions, that he believes the present distribution system is the most efficient so far suggested, despite its duplication of service, and that economies would be effected through fewer pictures on which effort is concentrated, highlighted an interview with Carl Laemmle here, while the Universal chief was en route to New York to attend Universal's international sales convention, which has just come to a close at the Savoy-Plaza Hotel.

Laemmle Urges Tents To Foil "Monopoly"

Kansas City—Resort to tent shows by independents as a means of thwarting monopoly in some sections was predicted by Carl Laemmle, Universal president, in stopping here en route to the New York sales convention of his company.

In addition to preventing a "monopoly," Laemmle believes tents are sure to click in spots where sound has not been installed, and where circuses have built up a draw for outdoors.

Others include: Al Herman, Albany Exchange manager; T. O. Tuttle, Atlanta; Dave Miller, Buffalo; Cowan Bain, Charlotte; M. Gottlieb, Cincinnati; Barney Rose, Cleveland; J. H. Lutzer, Indianapolis; W. E. Sipe, Memphis; M. Joseph, New Haven; W. Richardson, New Orleans; Bill Doyle, Interstate Film; H. Milstein, Pittsburgh; Nate Sauber, Washington; F. Vaughan, Calgary; D. Leduc, Montreal; W. A. Sault, St. John, N. B.; S. Brint, Toronto; R. A. Scott, Vancouver; W. Elman, Winnipeg; Leo Abrams, New York; M. E. Morey, Boston; Clair Hague, Canadian division manager; W. K. Millar, Butte; H. M. Herbel, Chicago; R. C. McIlheran, Dallas; Sam Cain, Denver; L. Brauer, Des Moines; C. P. Lester, Kansas City; George Naylor, Los Angeles; George Levine, Milwaukee; J. E. Garrison, Minneapolis; W. P. Moran, Oklahoma City; Matt Skorey Omaha; I. Schlank, Portland; Fred Strief, St. Louis; J. A. Huff, Salt Lake City; R. I. Payne, San Antonio; W. Heineman, San Francisco; E. I. Hudson, Seattle; H. Chapman, Sioux Falls; Louise Lamkin, manager of Saturday Evening Post department; Gladys Dillon, assistant to Schlanger; Evelyn Rosenthal, assistant to Taylor; Ben Grimm, assistant advertising manager; Oscar Lehr, foreign department; Dave Bader, personal representative: Oscar Binder, assistant treasurer of Universal, and Oscar Cooper, publicity department.

Universal Un-Conventionalities

IT was a real bit of showmanship which led Carl Laemmle to put the gang up at the Savoy Plaza. Atmosphere in keeping with the new company policy, you know.

And Uncle Carl was the picture of happiness during the convention. Hadn't Carl Jr., just come through in a big way with "King of Jazz," and "All Quiet on the Western Front." And maybe Uncle Carl isn't proud . . . .

Lou Metzger, who found the general managership wasn't enough for his energy, and so resumed charge of sales, surely stirred up pep during the meetings. Even when the gang took time off Wednesday night, Lou kept right on working.

His new policy of splitting up the sales responsibility struck a responsive note during the sessions.

Morris Joseph, the most disconsolate man in the convention, the first day, is now beaming with satisfaction. The perpetual manager of the New Haven exchange has a habit of collecting a souvenir of every affair he has attended. Paul Gulick got up a Who's Who of the convention in order that everyone might know who everyone else was, and what he was. Unfortunately, he left Joseph's name off the list. On Monday, however, there was a new list, and Morris was alphabetically included, as were all the others.

William C. Hermann, special representative, who is to be assigned to the Boston territory, was another whose name was left off the first list, who was included in the second one. This is Hermann's second or third or fourth engagement with Universal.

W. A. Sault, the manager and almost the entire works of the Saint Johns, N. B. office, failed to produce any of the liquid entertainment for which Canada is so famous in the United States, but the boys soon forgot this and restored him to the affectionate place that this ex-English actor has always held in their hearts.

Leo Abrams, manager of the Big U, scarcely filled out one of the big and easy arm chairs which Harry A. Rost, manager of the Savoy-Plaza, provided for the delegates. Lou Metzger introduced him to the convention as the Manager of the Big U and points west. Leo is sitting pretty, even though he doesn't fill his chair as full as Bill Sipe, the dependable and genial manager of the Memphis office.

A little bird asked your reporter if he would kindly tell him what weighty matters were lying behind the wise and prescient eyes of Harry Ascher, Universal's distributing agent in New England. Mr. Ascher is president of the American Feature Film Company, one of the oldest and most valuable allies of Universal. He expressed himself as being tremendously pleased with Universal's line-up and prospects for the next year. He is a fashion-plate, the niftiest dresser in the convention, but oh, what a guy to play poker with.

George Levine, who likes Milwaukee better than New York, was prolific as always with suggestions for which he was publicly thanked by Mr. Metzger.

S. Brint of Toronto is an expert in overcoats. Two years ago he bought Paul Gulick one in Canada and Paul says if you ever want an overcoat, consult Brint. He's an authority on Canadian wool, not the variety you pull over the eyes.

A. Hermann, manager of the Albany exchange, was having some difficulty with his initial. Several of the boys were joshing him by calling him "Another" Herman. He is going to change it to "The" Herman.

Among the newcomers to the Universal organization is Harry Scott, manager of the Detroit exchange. Harry already knew the great majority of the boys and expressed himself as being delighted to be with the Universal organization.

Scott—it's a grand old name, as attested by that veteran of the Vancouver office, R. A. Scott, who came the longest distance of any of the North American exchange managers to the convention.

Matt Skorey is another exchange manager with a new and larger office. He now hails from Omaha.

The same thing applies to I. Schlank. Butte is one of the smallest offices, but Schlank is making a great record now in Portland.

Can't blame W. K. Millar of Butte for insisting on the accent on the "lar." Lou Metzger wanted to make sure of this, and he did. There is another Miller, yclept Dave. They don't look at all alike, but Dave has the more dramatic face of the two. Last year he was the hit of the burlesque playlet which was used as an illustration. Nobody wrote any playlet for this year's convention. It didn't need any. The two pictures, "All Quiet on the Western Front," and "King of Jazz," running in New York simultaneously, furnished the greatest argument that Universal pictures could have.

Cowan Bain is now in charge of Charlotte office, having risen successfully through hard work and application. Cowan started as a student salesman with Universal. More power to him!

Bill Doyle is another new manager. He succeeded Wittman when Sig took up executive duties in the home office. Bill has been so busy that he doesn't expect to play any golf at all this year, and Bill is very handy with his niblick!

Did you ever look in H. M. Herbel's eyes? Take a look if you have an opportunity. One of them has a tiny ornament in it, the shape of a shield. Nobody has figured out whether this is an offensive or a defensive weapon. It is very intriguing. However, he had it before he went to the Windy City, so it can't have anything to do with the state of constant warfare existing in Chicago.

"Snake" Richardson, the chandelier buster of New Orleans, for the first time in history came to a convention without his quartette.

The convention, though, was not without its singing features. Frank Goodman of Handman, Kent & Goodman, had written a convention song and after the boys had sung it loudly and lustily at luncheon, there was a demand that Harry Taylor, sales manager for the western division, give us a sample of his famous cheer leader stuff of old Kansas City days. Harry said he hadn't sung in over a [illegible] of "Captain of the Guard."

[illegible] sessions. A few more spell binding experiences like this, and Ted will qualify as an orator.

[illegible] Monday after flying from the Coast, the last stage of his 12,000-mile trip from Australia.

"Jimmy" Bryson, U's debonair managing director in Great Britain, burned up the cables with the wonderful reviews the New York dailies gave "All Quiet on the Western Front." "Jimmie's" the same old dynamo as in the days when Carl Laemmle commissioned him to open an exchange and he decided upon Minneapolis as a fine spot.

The keynote of the convention was "The Song of the Dawn."

Paul Whiteman told the convention that he thought the proper billing of "King of Jazz" should be: "Directed by John Murray Anderson and interfered with by Paul Whiteman." But Paul was only joking. He said that the cutter on the coast proved that he was only an amateur.

Ivan St. Johns made the typical newspaperman's speech: "I am very happy to be here," and sat down.

Metzger was on the job every minute and conducted the sessions with the ease that goes with great executive ability.

Frank Goodman, head of U's music publishing firm, told the delegates that he would visit every manager in his home town. "Some job," remarked Metzger. "Do you know how many offices Universal has abroad? Only 103. And it takes a month to get to Australia."

Graham McNamee couldn't get into his speech until he had begun by saying: "Good evening, ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience."

D. Leduc enthuses about Montreal's prospects in two languages, and, boy, he can rattle 'em off.

J. H. (Indianapolis) Lutzer is the illustrious brother of another of Universal's go-getters, but he's not letting that keep him from being outstanding in his own right.

C. P. Leter, southern traction and all, is showing 'em how to hit the ball in Kansas City.

Ralph Williams, assistant sales manager, brought down thunderous applause when he told the boys that he had devised a system whereby all of the commendatory things which are being said about our pictures will be transmitted photostatically to them as fast as they are said.

Somebody thought that Clair Hugh couldn't talk because he had never talked at conventions, but the general manager of Canadian Universal is there, and he proved it in a very clever speech. A lot of the boys in the

Musicians Ousted by Sound Win Point; Contract Dispute Goes to Supreme Court

San Francisco Orchestra Gets Appeal Verdict Against Nasser Bros.

San Francisco—Problem caused by discharge of musicians from sound houses is at issue in the case of local musicians against Nasser Bros., which is headed for the Supreme Court.

Findings of Judge J. J. Trabucco to the effect that the organized musicians had no forcible contract with Nasser Bros. were reversed in the District Court of Appeals by Judge John J. Tyler.

The musicians claimed that the contract obligates theatre owners to retain orchestras containing a minimum number of musicians even though music is supplied by sound apparatus. Under the decision of last week, the case will not be heard in the Supreme Court. If the musicians win, the theatres must either replace their human orchestras or close their doors. Nat Schmulowitz, attorney for Nasser Bros., said if the District Court of Appeals declined to grant a rehearing, the case would be taken to the Supreme Court.

Aid Free Lance Players Fearing Studio Reprisals

Hollywood—In an attempt to organize methods of handling complaints and adjustments under the recently adopted standard contract for free-lance players, committees of producers and actors are conducting a series of conferences.

First meeting was held in the Academy headquarters Monday night, with round-robin discussion on the question of proper procedure to provide for impartial presentation of specific complaints on contract violations. Academy's executive committee appointed Wm. Conklin, former player, as contact man in administration of the contract.

It was brought out that many players are reticent in placing a complaint against a studio for overtime or extra remuneration, as the actors feel they will find it hard to receive future work at the studio complained of. Main complaints on overtime without pay seemed to be that directors were developing the habit of asking players to work an hour or so extra to help them maintain or catch up on picture schedule. Under these circumstances, players did not want to press any claims for overtime, as the director involved would become offended.

Definite decision was made at Monday meeting, however, that a special representative will be employed to handle all complaints arising through operation of the standard contract. This move was reported exclusively in Motion Picture News several weeks ago.

Next get-together is slated for next Monday night, with player representatives at that time to present various general improvements for better understanding under the standard contract.

Pat Flaherty Host at Red Star Opening

Fox Film Lists 1,900,000 Class A Shares on 'Change

The New York Stock Exchange has listed 1,900,000 additional shares of Class A common of Fox Film, issued by the company on authorization of the directors. Of this total, 1,600,000 shares represent part payment for the 660,900 shares of Loew's, Inc., purchased by the company from Fox Theatres, the rest of the buy having been covered by $27,000,000 in cash advanced by General Theatre Equipment.

The remaining 300,000 shares are to be reserved for issuance upon exercise of stock purchase warrants and represent a portion of the refinancing plan arranged by Halsey, Stuart & Co.

Negotiating Deal

Earle W. Hammons, president of Educational, who is working with Charles Christie of Christie Film Co., on a deal for merging interests of the two companies.

Gold Note Issue of $55,000,000 for Fox

Public financing for Fox Film under the plan adopted by the new management will consist of $55,000,000 secured one-year 6 per cent gold notes of the corporation. The securities are offered by a banking group headed by Halsey, Stuart & Co.

The proceeds from the sale have been or are to be used for the payment of maturing obligations, including the company's $12,000,000 issue of 6 per cent gold notes due April 1, 1930, and for other corporate purposes.

This temporary financing has been effectuated pending readjustments in the company's affairs. In the statement of the bankers it was pointed out that, in the opinion of the new management, permanent financing can be accomplished in the next 12 months on terms far more advantageous to the company than at present.

The notes are a direct obligation of the company and are specifically secured under a trust indenture by the pledge of 660,900 shares of common stock of Loew's Incorporated, listed on the New York Stock Exchange, and all the capital stock of United American Investing Corp., which has a substantial stock interest in Metropolis and Bradford Trust Co., Ltd., owners of 65 per cent of the ordinary stock of Gaumont British Picture Corp. The capital stock of United American Investing Corp. represents an investment on the part of Fox Film Corp. of approximately $20,000,000.

Issue Voting Certificates

An additional issue of 433,000 shares of General Theatres Equipment common stock voting trust certificates is planned in connection with the company's acquisition of the controlling interest in Fox Film and Fox Theatres. This follows sale of an issue of $30,000,000 ten-year 6 per cent. convertible debentures, the initial financing in connection with the General Theatres Equipment—Fox transaction. These bonds, which were offered at 99½, are now selling at about 102. The group, which will make the offering of common stock, is headed by Pynchon & Co. and includes West & Co. and W. S. Hammons & Co.

States result in a virtual monopoly," Laemmle said. "Theatre circuits have been fused to a point where the independent producer may be shut out if he will not accede to the prices the combines are willing to pay.

"I believe it is entirely feasible for a film production company of sufficient magnitude to play a succession of 'tent show' engagements throughout the agricultural sections of the United States and for it to make money. The tent show has been synonymous with festivity in the rural sections of this country for many years. Circuses and carnivals always draw crowds in the very season when the business of the theatres is bad.

"The tent idea might be practical in the sections where talkie equipment has not yet been installed. There are a great many dollars in these communities awaiting such a venture."

When asked how such a venture might be handled Laemmle answered:

"Who has the tents?"

State Dept. Okays Capital Increase Filed by Para.

Authorization to increase its capital from 3,000,000 to 4,000,000 shares, no par, by Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp., and filing of an application to change the company name to Paramount Publix Corp. are highlights of an active week in corporate activities in Eastern states. The name change becomes official as of this week.

Warners incorporated a subsidiary unit in New Jersey, called Warner Bros., Theatres, Inc., headquarters in Newark, to operate all company theatres owned in that state.

New Theatre Units

Other new incorporations chartered in the current group include Weingin Amusement Corp., to operate theatres, and represented by Albany Service Co., 299 Broadway, New York; L. M. J. Productions, booking office in New York, of which J. Wilzin, 521 5th Ave., New York, is attorney.

In Delaware, Historical Cinema Association was chartered with a capital of $1,000,000, and, in the same state a charter was granted to International Amusement Corp.

Naturalscope Formed

Naturalscope Pictures, Kayhill Holding Co., Checker Music Corp., Iberia Productions and Elkay Productions were formed in New York. Additional New Jersey charters include certificates issued to Risdan Amusement Co., Draclair Amusement Co. and Esco Amusement Co.

John Flinn on Coast

Hollywood—John C. Flinn, Pathe executive, has assumed charge of short-subject production at the Pathe studios.

"U" Convention Sidelights

States had never seen Mrs. Carl, but they got a ten carat look at her at the party in the Gold Room. She had the expatriated Mrs. Oscar Hanson with her, too.

It was S. F. Ditcham's first visit to New York, and Lou Metzger kept translating Americanisms into the King's English for the benefit of the sales manager for Great Britain.

H. (Pittsburgh) Milstein is a newlywed, but he certainly doesn't let that keep him from getting those contracts. He started to make a speech acclaiming Manie Gottlieb, but was howled down.

Fred Strief is a veteran of Universal, during several regimes. He's going great guns these days at St. Louis.

W. Moran is so sold on Oklahoma City, that he just can't wait to get back among the Sooners.

"Bob" (Dallas) McIlheron had a lot of sage suggestions to offer the gang.

And T. Tuttle is trying to figure out just what is the difference between Charlotte and Atlanta.

Louis Laemmle, with a smile as brilliant as the gold room itself, got a real kick out of the convention.

Charley Gregory, erstwhile Columbia executive at Kansas City, thought the Savoy Plaza was the Universal lounging room.

M. Morey, Boston, was all wrapped up over the new product. They should try to stop that bimbo from garnering contracts on the new pictures.

And speaking of Beau Brummels. Cleveland would forget its fashions if B. Rose ever was transferred. Clocking him primping up is a real job.

George Naylor has a telegraph hook-up, so they say. He gets that way by being the Los Angeles manager, and wires about every picture.

R. I. Payne, who does his stuff at San Antonio, is a real go-getter. Just watch the standing of his office mount during the new year.

S. Cain is in Denver because he's a climber with a slogan of San Francisco or bust.

There are managers and managers, and then there is Hymie Chapman. He's really got acclimated to Sioux Falls, and knows how to keep his sales sheets mounting.

L. Brauer, Des Moines, is a young fellow trying to get along, and will.

Joe Garrison had a real homecoming when he returned to Minneapolis as manager of the Universal exchange, after hanging up a fine record at Albany.

Universal to "Rise or Fall" on New Policy?

South America, Australia and every territory of the United States and Canada.

Fifteen of the 20 pictures on the new program already have been determined upon, Laemmle told the delegates. These will include a talker version of Tod Browning's "Outside the Law," with cast headed by Mary Nolan and Edward G. Robinson; Floyd Dell and Thomas Mitchell's play, "Little Accident," to be directed by William James Craft; "Boudoir Diplomat," play by Rudolph Lothar and Fritz Gottwald; "East Is West," starring Lupe Velez in an adaptation by A. E. Thomas of the Samuel Shipman and John B. Hymer play; John Erskine's "Sincerity," which John M. Stahl will direct.

"Strictly Dishonorable," by Preston Sturges, which probably will star John Boles; "Saint Johnson," by W. R. Burnett, to co-feature Lewis Ayres and John Wray and directed by William Wyler; "Ourang," to be filmed in Borneo by Harry Garson and Julius Bernheim, with Dorothy Janis as feminine lead; a sequel to "All Quiet on the Western Front," by Erich Maria Remarque; "The Love Cavalier," operetta with John Boles and Jeannette Loff, to be directed by John S. Robertson.

"Gypsy Love Song," an original by Konrad Bercovici, with songs and music by the author and featuring John Boles, Jeanette Loff and Lupe Velez; two John Murray Anderson productions, "The Cohens and Kellys in Ireland" and "The Oregon Trail," which Edward Laemmle will direct.

Egyptian Long Runs, Grind at Coast Pantages

Hollywood—Grauman's Egyptian, a Fox West Coast house, drops its grind policy and returns to long runs when the new Pantages opens on May 29. The opener at the Egyptian will be "Hell's Angel's."

The Pantages will show first runs on a grind with Fanchon and Marco "Ideas" on the stage. The house seats 2,500.

Big Billing Campaigns For Broadway Pictures

Return to heavy billing campaigns is being seen by current hits now on Broadway, which are copping big business following extensive papering. These are John McCormack's "Song of Love," which has been showing a big draw since its opening several weeks ago; "Journey's End," which is continuing to record business at the Gaiety, and Universal's "All Quiet on the Western Front," off to an auspicious start at the Central. All three pictures were billed extensively in campaigns reaching as far as Brunswick in New Jersey, Far Rockaway on Long Island and throughout Westchester County.

Canada Puts Compulsory Arbitration Into Effect; Courts Enforce Awards

Arbitration Decision Awaited

Washington—With formal requests for appeal in both cases made by the losing party in each, the Supreme Court is expected to determine the credit and arbitration cases in October. The government appealed the credit case, which the Hays association, Film Boards and distributors won, and distributors are appealing the arbitration decision, which resulted in outlawing arbitration in the industry. Judge Thacher, now solicitor general, ruled on both cases while sitting on the Federal district bench at New York.

Film Funsters' Flip and Frisky Flicker Frolic

The guys who are supported day in and day out by this here film business are going to cut loose and have some fun. You know, "laugh, clown, laugh" stuff. After a solid year's work, they've doped out a plan to have an evening of carefree enjoyment. Of course, everything depends on the sense of honor of the anonymous chap who's been making rash promises, such as:

"The most important of all current road-show pictures—never before exhibited—will be previewed at the Flicker Frolic. Announcement will shortly be made of the selected production. Following the picture there will appear an army of artists in a stellar show now being summoned together by the leading executives of motion pictures. The combination Preview and Stage Show will give New York an evening in the theatre never before even approximated for entertainment value."

Top is $15. Presented by the Motion Picture Club. Send your checks (certified) to the treasurer, at 1560 Broadway.

Oh, yes, the affair will be staged at the Liberty Theatre, West 42nd St., Sunday night, May 11.

Thacher Decree Issue in Suit By Paramount

Cincinnati—Is arbitration in or out, in view of the Thacher decree, and can the arbitration provision of contracts be enforced?

That is the question at issue here in suit of Paramount for an order to compel the Springfield Amusement Co., the Charkares Amusement Co., Phil Chakares and the Regent State Corp., Springfield, to arbitrate a dispute.

The exhibitors contend the Thacher decree held invalid the arbitration provision of the contract, but Paramount said the contracts are valid and that the provision for submission of disputes to arbitration, should be enforced by order of the court.

U. S. Judge Negin told the counsel for both parties to get together on an agreement of facts, and continued the hearing.

ABRAM F. MYERS

Washington — Charges that attacks have been launched by or at the instigation of the Hays office upon Allied States Ass'n. have received no answer from Hays, Abram F. Myers Thursday told MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Myers said that Allied has admonished its members to keep the peace, but said Hays had declared against peace, citing an attack upon the Myers house organ plan, upon W. A. Steffes and H. M. Richey, and adding that it was not the first time such attacks had been made. "Serious effort" was made to break down the RKO and Tiffany franchise arrangements, he alleged.

Technicolor Reports 500% Increase in Earnings

Technicolor, Inc., and subsidiaries report earnings of $676,859, before taxes, for the first quarter of 1930. This represents a gain of more than 500 per cent over earnings of $101,790 for the same period in 1929.

The report does not include any income derived from the new Hollywood plant, which has been under construction for the past eight months and which went into operation early this month.

The Technicolor plant in Boston is now printing approximately 5,000,000 feet monthly, while the new Hollywood plant will have a capacity of about 3,000,000 feet a month, giving Technicolor a total capacity of about 100,000,000 feet annually. Twelve months ago Technicolor could print only 1,000,000 feet a month.

Exhibitors Consulted About Standard Contracts; 1—1 Boards to Rule

Toronto—Compulsory arbitration, which follows British practice with penalty clauses deleted, is provided for in the new contract for Canada which distributors will put into effect May 15. Enforcement of awards is to be a court proceeding, as is the case in Great Britain.

The new standard contract, according to Col. John A. Cooper, president of the Canadian distributor-exhibitor association, was drawn after consultation with leading Canadian exhibitors. Pointing out that it has been impossible to consult every exhibitor of the Dominion, changes have been summarized and published, and request made that any exceptions any exhibitor may take be wired to him, promising that they will be given consideration. General approval will be assumed if no exceptions are filed.

Arbitration Boards

In the new form of agreement, arbitration boards are reduced to two members, one for the exhibitor and one for the distributor, these two choosing a third. Fees of arbitrators are fixed by statute in Canada, the losing party being required to pay the costs of the hearing. A submission to arbitration is made irrevocable under the contract.

Publix Managers Shifted In Des Moines Territory

Des Moines—Publix managers made a change at Davenport, where R. F. Emig, who was manager of the Columbia, was transferred to the World, Omaha. John K. Krier comes from the Publix school to take the Columbia.

H. D. Grove, Publix manager in this district, also announced the appointment of Gerald Gallagher, formerly of Richmond, Ind., to the Fort at Rock Island and as city manager for the Publix theatres there. C. W. Peterson is transferred from the Spencer, Rock Island, to the State, Cedar Rapids, and H. A. Holsberg of Cedar Rapids will go to the Publix school.

Lou Elliwitz, district advertising manager for Des Moines, will take the management of the Garden at Davenport, with George Collins, formerly assistant at the Garden, as manager of the Spencer.

Sunday Showings Click Big In Florida Town

Winter Garden, Fla.—Tired of seeing his patrons gas up each Sunday and hie away to neighboring cities, where Sunday shows are permitted, Manager Biggers of the Winter Garden decided to do a little Sunday showing himself and keep 'em home.

He booked a special program and last Sunday opened up to big returns. It went over so well that there were no protests of any kind from anyone. So, Sunday movies will be a regular thing from now on.

The S. M. P. E. Meets

CONTINUING in their praiseworthy efforts to focus scientific research on the motion pictures, the Society of Motion Picture Engineers again finds itself on the eve of another convention.

In Washington and for four days many of the foremost technical and analytical minds of the industry and its co-related fields will discuss improvements in the mechanical, chemical and scientific processes which permit motion pictures to function.

There is no more important work, actual and potential, under way in the whole scope of the industry than the efforts centralized in the endeavors of the S. M. P. E. to raise operating standards.

To an industry which short-sightedly enough is often prone to overlook merit which exists at its very doorstep, it is suggested that a more careful scrutiny be directed toward the aims and accomplishments of this organization. Solution of the problems of the present and future rest largely in its hands. Whatever the S. M P. E. does, has, by the record, demonstrated itself to be worthy of the most careful observation and respect.

Convex Balcony As Sound Aid, New Construction Slant

Elimination of Air Pockets, Circular Auditorium, Are Features of Hollywood, New York

Front of new Hollywood, New York. The roof sign is said to be the largest in the world

Sweep of the stage from the balcony. This house was built with an eye toward wide films and stage shows. The inserts are two of twelve ceiling murals representing months of the year

ELIMINATION of air pockets under the balcony, through a convex surface, is one of the features of the new Hollywood, New York, just opened by Warners.

Whereas the average balcony slopes downward, flooring of the balcony of the new house curves the opposite way, in manner said to possess acoustical features which are revolutionary.

Changing of the style of balcony is regarded by Warners as the newest "wrinkle" of sound house construction, entirely eliminating the air pockets common in houses which have balconies of the old-fashioned type.

Another acoustical feature is felt lining of the walls. This is concealed by crimson damask hangings. Between the felt and the damask is an air space, making for better sound values through absorption instead of the reflection of sound from the walls.

The circular-shaped auditorium, done in French Baroque style, rises to the mural-treated dome which is flanked by columns arches and architraves that reflect an abundance of detail. There are 26 rows of seats on the main floor. The seats are upholstered in a dull red and the carpet is dull red.

The proscenium is large enough to permit the staging of dramatic and musical productions. The stage itself is large enough to accommodate the most pretentious of theatrical offerings. It is supplied with a counterweight system for the handling of scenery. At the sides are five tiers of dressing rooms with every convenience for their occupants.

The lobby is of modernistic French design, with mirrored walls enriched with bronze, marble floor and plastic ceiling. It leads to the entrosole which in turn leads to the grand foyer, an oval rotunda, made almost octagonal by eight marble pillars. The foyer decorations are in French Baroque, the motif which is carried out, in the main, throughout the building. The columns support the arches of the grand foyer and the winding stairway which leads to a mezzanine overlooking the foyer. A marble fountain in the foyer blends into the mood of the period decorations.

Around the mezzanine promenade are a series of curved balconettes overlooking the foyer. Period furniture and soft lighting make the promenade a delightful place in which to linger.

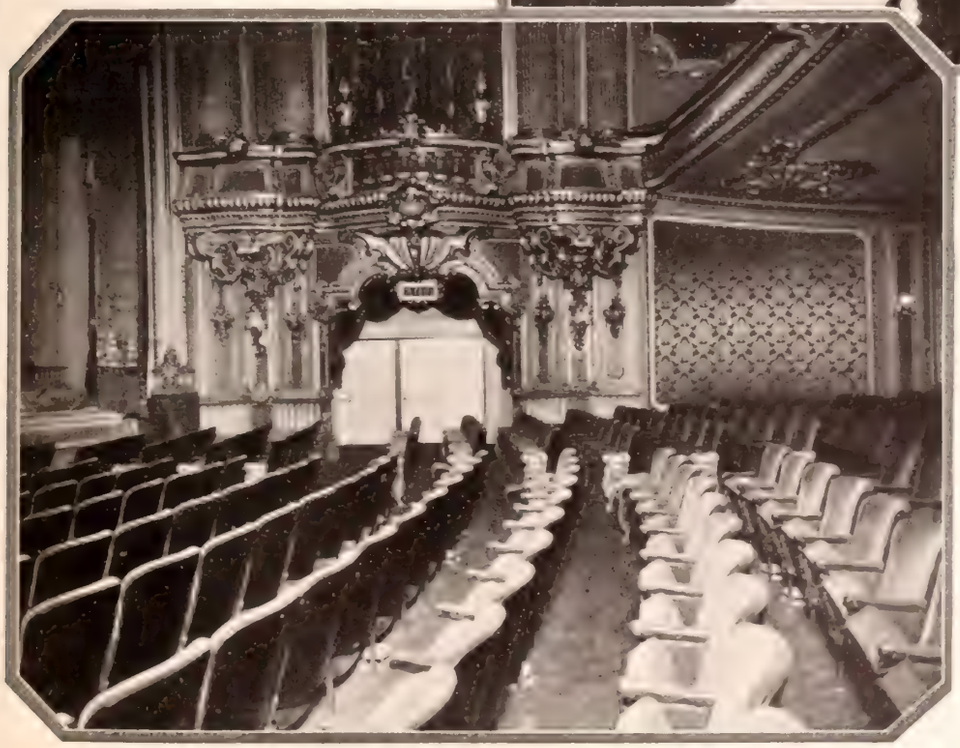
The lounge, located under the orchestra floor, has fireplace, sofas, chairs, lamps, electric candelabra and subdued lighting. It repeats in structure and treatment the theme predominant in the grand foyer. It is oval in shape and aisled with a marble colonnade. Opening off the lounge are the men's smoking room and the women's cosmetic room. The retiring rooms, leading from the lounge and those found just off the promenade are modernistic in style and decoration.

The most ornamental feature is the series of 12 murals which form a frame surrounding the flat elliptical portion of the main dome. Each mural represents a month of the year. The paintings, some of which are exact reproductions of Fragonard and Watteau, are executed in the spirit of the French Renaissance. The figures are life size, done in rich tones to harmonize with the ivory and gold of the surrounding ceiling space. The chandelier, in addition to numerous electric candles, has a large red globe surmounted by a smaller one, the red of both tinged with blue light at the top.

The projection room is 30 feet long and 12 feet high. Every piece of mechanism has been supplied in duplicate to avoid waits and delay.

The screen frame is said to be the largest in the United States, and the theatre's lobby rug is said to be the largest unseamed rug in the world.

The revolutionary advances in architecture and showmanship embodied in the new Hollywood are said to provide a high degree of perfection in volume and tone of sound reproduced.



The theatre, built as a memorial to the late Sam Warner, who pioneered in sound development, was designed to embody every feature of improved sound reproduction.

The stage was designed with possible future developments in mind. These include return of presentations, a full stage being built as a means of preparedness in case expanded stage presentations again become the vogue.

The wide film development upon which Warners and most other major companies are working, also is provided for in the stage construction, a full stage screen being part of the regular equipment.

Tilt on Film Vs. Disc Recording To Highlight S. M. P. E. Meetings

Anticipated Discussions on Wide Film and Color Won't Materialize—400 Expected at Washington Conference

WIDE film and color, important factors in the technical scheme of motion picture development, will be completely relegated to the background by engineering leaders attending the annual Spring convention of the Society of M. P. Engineers at Washington. The four-day sessions open on Monday at the Wardman Park Hotel, with 400 delegates on hand.

In technical circles, there is considerable speculation over the fact that an anticipated boom for both wide film and color will not materialize at the meeting, where technicians customarily discuss intricacies in scientific developments currently concerning motion pictures.

This pronounced silence on color and wide film, it is said, can only be construed as indicative of either one of two conditions: The embryonic phases of both developments forbids discussion, or attachment, by engineers, of the stamp of commercial unimportance at this time.

Fifty-two papers will be read by technical authorities and not one pertains to wide film. Color is the subject of a single discussion.

Interesting advances have apparently been made in bettering theatre acoustics, because the majority of papers prepared contain data on structural treatments which indicate new developments in acoustical problems.

Western Electric, RCA Photophone and others are understood to have prepared strong arguments against a paper prepared by Warners' engineer, P. H. Evans, captioned: "Sound Reproduction-Disc vs. Film," a topic which has long been a bone of contention between "ERPI" and Warners.

RCA vs. Western on Horns

Another verbal tilt is expected between Western Electric and RCA over loud speakers in theatres, with RCA contending that the greater naturalness of reproduction of both speech and music in theatres emanates from the directional baffle type speaker, and not the horn type.

Louis Malter, RCA engineer, who will read the paper on horns, will compare both types, arguing, it is said, that the directional baffle is not only greater from the standpoint of naturalness, but it is also superior in frequency range and uniformity of response. With regard to radiation distribution characteristics and input power capacity, the two speakers are approximately the same. The efficiency of the horn type, however, is acknowledged to be superior.

Immediately following Malter on the platform, W. J. Sette, "ERPI" engineer, and possibly others, will meet arguments on the alleged superiority of the directional baffle.

Jenkins Has New Televisor

Another highlight is slated to be touched when C. Francis Jenkins, pioneer in television, announces a new mechanism which, he believes, is far more promising for theatre radiomovies, having a low-price appeal plus technical advantages over the present method.

Other papers cover practically every phase of sound recording and reproduction, medical cinemicrophotography, lighting, economic changes in the industry, the latter to be read by Franklin S. Irby of McGraw-Hill Publishing Co.; electrical equipment, technical phases of vocalization, home movies, theatre and studio equipment, laboratory devices and processes, a new recorder for variable area recording, developed in the laboratories of Radio Victor Corp.; studio and theatre acoustical conditions, and additional engineering factors.

New Equipment Announced

William B. Rayton, of Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., will outline a proposed new series of standard focal lengths for motion picture objectives. M. W. Palmer, of Paramount's Eastern studio, is slated to reveal a proposed new method of timing negative.

Initial announcements will be made on new equipment, including a new buffing machine, by Dworsky Machine Co., a modified film washing machine, by Eastman Kodak, new projector products, by International Projector, and what is said to be an improved synchronizing apparatus for 16 mm. films with disc records, developed by William H. Bristol, who marketed Bristolphone.

The Ampro Corp., Chicago, has presented a technical description of its new 16 mm. projector, E. C. Richardson, of Mole-Richardson, Los Angeles, who will head a group of Pacific Coast members bringing papers on new devices, is on the program for discussion of a tilting head and rolling tripod for sound-proofed cameras. L. Thompson, of the Bristol studios in Connecticut, has developed a new power amplifier system.

Franklin, Thalberg May Speak

At the closing session on Thursday, Irving G. Thalberg, M-G-M studio chief on the West Coast, is expected to tell of technical activities of the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences. He will be followed by Harold B. Franklin, who has prepared a paper on "Talking Pictures—the Great Internationalist." The Thalberg group coming East will include L. E. Clark, Pathe studio engineering executive, who will discuss developments in sound proof housings for cameras.

All business sessions will be held at the Wardman Little theatre and in the Bureau of Standards lecture hall.

Pre-release showing of features, the semi-annual banquet, at which Jenkins will act as master of ceremonies; and a motor trip to Mt. Vernon, Virginia, are social highlights. Will H. Hays, Franklin, Thalberg and Hon. William P. Connery, Jr., will speak at the banquet.

SOME EXPERIMENTS IN M. P. OF THE VOCAL CORDS

By J. O. RUSSELL and C. TUTTLE
Kodak Research Laboratories

Photography of the vocal cords or even visual observation of them is made rather difficult by their inaccessible position in the throat. For this reason, the mechanism of speech production has never been thoroughly understood.

With the technic of motion photography described in this paper it has been possible to take pictures during the production of vowel sounds and to show the reaction of the cords while coughing or swallowing.

Such pictures demonstrate the falsity of some of the generally accepted theories of vocalization. A careful frame-by-frame study of some of the film has been made and the information so derived promises

A MOTION PICTURE MADE IN 1916 BY A TWO-COLOR SUBTRACTIVE PROCESS

By G. E. MATTHEWS
Kodak Research Laboratories

The principle of the tanning bleach which forms the basis for the preparation of dye images by the Kodachrome process was first observed by J. G. Capstaff in 1910. Details of the process were not worked out, however, until 1914, when it was applied to the making of two-color transparencies on plates. In 1915 the process was developed for motion picture photography and to test the practical value of the method as well as to ascertain its weakness, an actual story was photographed. It is believed that this picture, which will be shown at the meeting, is the first color motion picture made by a subtractive process.

LOUDSPEAKER AND THEATRE SOUND REPRODUCTION

By LOUIS MALTER

This paper is devoted to a comparison of the two chief types of loudspeakers used in theatres, viz: directional baffle type speaker, and horn type speaker. On the basis of actual experimental measurements a comparison is made on the basis of:

1. Frequency Range.
2. Uniformity of Response.
3. Radiation Distribution Characteristics.
4. Efficiency.
5. Input Power Capacity.

The measurements indicate that the directional baffle type speaker is superior in frequency range and uniformity of response. With respect to radiation distribution characteristics and input power capacity, the two speakers are approximately the same. With regard to efficiency the horn type speaker is slightly superior.

These experimental measurements are then used to explain the greater naturalness of reproduction of both speech and music in theatres with the directional baffle type speaker.

THE PHOTOGRAPHIC TREATMENT OF VARIABLE AREA SOUND FILMS

By J. A. MAURER
R. C. A. Photophone, Inc., New York City

This paper discusses both theoretically and experimentally the effect of photographic treatment on the quality of variable area records. Since nonlinear distortion cannot be introduced photographically, the points to be considered are high frequency response and volume range. It is found that the best procedure is to work for a density of 1.3 in both negative and positive, but this is not at all critical. Contrary to early opinion, it is considered better to work at low densities than at very high ones. Densities as high as 2.0 are particularly to be avoided.

CURVED GATES IN OPTICAL PRINTERS

By W. S. VAUGHN and F. TUTTLE
Kodak Research Laboratories

In certain types of optical motion picture printers, it is desirable for the film, in its printing position, to be curved along its length. This course may be dictated by the type of pull-down used, or by the possibility of dispensing with pressure pads and thus avoiding the difficulties attendant upon accumulated dirt, grease, and emulsion.

The question arises: When a curved object gate is used, what should be the shape of the image gate in order that the image formed by the printing lens will fall on the raw stock? Assuming a lens with a flat field, the problem has been solved analytically for the general case. It was found that a curved (circular) object gate is imaged as a conic section (ellipse, hyperbola, parabola) and that by making the curvature of the object gate a particular function of the printing magnification and of the focal length of the printing lens, the conic section becomes a circle. In cases where it is impractical or impossible to adopt this value of the curvature of the object gate, an approximate method is outlined whereby a circular image gate, conforming very closely to the actual image curve, can be computed.

A REPLENISHING SOLUTION FOR A M. P. POSITIVE FILM DEVELOPER

By J. I. CRABTREE and C. E. IVES
Kodak Research Laboratories

With the advent of sound film it has become increasingly important to maintain constant the developing characteristics of the developing solutions in a motion picture laboratory throughout the active life of the solutions.

The problem of devising replenishing solutions which can be added to the developer in order to keep it in a uniform condition has been studied and it has been found that such replenishing solutions can be made to function with precision. The use of a properly designed replenishing solution renders the developing process as certain and precise as any other element in the production of motion pictures.

SEMI-AUTOMATIC M. P. SENSITOMETER

By J. I. CRABTREE, C. E. IVES and F. TUTTLE
Kodak Research Laboratories

The motion picture sensitometer called a "timer" is used for making tests from which it is possible to determine the exact exposure required in making a motion picture print from a negative.

In the case of sound films, it is necessary to develop the positive prints to a very uniform degree of contrast and it is therefore not possible to compensate for errors in exposure of the print by varying the development time. The sensitometer described produces a series of trial exposures on positive film which are identical with the exposures given by the various steps on the printer. The picture of best quality is then chosen and the exposure which this received is the correct one to use on the printer. The instrument affords a much quicker method of making test exposures.

AEO LIGHT RECORDING

By R. F. NICHOLSON

This paper deals in general with the glow discharge type of sound recording, a process developed at the Case Research Laboratory and successfully commercialized by the Fox Case Corporation. It shares the title "Movietone" with the Western Electric light valve system, both processes yielding variable density records.

In particular the paper describes the various photographic problems which must be solved before the film can be properly exposed and processed resulting in a signal on the print of maximum volume and minimum distortion. Due to the limitations peculiar to the Aeo light, the records are not processed similarly to light valve records. In the latter the unmodulated intensity can be selected almost at will, while in the former the choice exists only over a limited range. In the solutions a graphical method of predetermining over-all film characteristics is employed with considerable advantage.

A COMPOUNDED GENEVA PULL DOWN FOR MOTION PICTURE APPARATUS

By F. TUTTLE
Kodak Research Laboratories

Practically any mechanism used for moving film intermittently in motion picture apparatus can be run at a speed considerably higher than normal operating speed without damaging the film. Since the time occupied for the actual movement of the film is so much time lost from the useful part of the shutter cycle, it would be advantageous, then, if the shutter cycle could be reapportioned, allowing more time in the useful part of the cycle by speeding up within the permissible limits the movement of the film.

By combining two Genevas in such a way that the driving pin of the second Geneva is driven by the first Geneva, the pull down period can be shortened to about 1/10 of the angle it normally takes to move film. In a printer this decrease allows a 50 per cent increase in the time for exposure.

A study has been made of the acceleration characteristics of the compound Geneva. This shows that under certain conditions the Genevas can be combined so as to give an acceleration to the film very nearly equal to that of a single Geneva pulling down in the same time.

A MODIFIED FILM WAXING MACHINE

By J. I. CRABTREE and C. E. IVES
Kodak Research Laboratories

A film waxing machine designed by J. G. Jones in 1922 applied a thin line of molten wax to the edges of motion picture film by means of two thin applicator disks. This machine tends to apply too much wax to sound films especially if the molten wax is not maintained at the correct temperature, and the excess wax encroaches on the sound track and produces extraneous noises.

This machine has now been modified so as to apply a cold solution of paraffin wax in carbon tetrachloride. The quantity of wax applied is independent of the temperature and is determined by the rate of rotation of the applicator disks and the rate of travel of the film. Normally, the peripheral speed of the disks is one-fifteenth that of the rate of travel of the film.

Floodlighting Boosted As a Method to Keep Public Sold

Exhibition Found Lagging Far Behind Enterprise of Other Fields in Extracting Values from Lights

An impressive example of the value of night illumination. The Paramount theatre and building in New York lighted by General Electric floodlighting projectors

FLOODLIGHTING of theatre fronts, associated principally with premieres and house openings, offers a big bet in selling the theatre. Night illumination now is in a formative stage, comparatively few lines of business taking advantage of its potentialities. The following article by George L. Rapp, architect, shows the dramatic and commercial possibilities of floodlighting. It is reprinted from "Architecture of the Night," published by General Electric.

"In present-day architecture the designs of buildings are frequently such that it becomes a very desirable and very feasible part of the project to illuminate all or portions of the buildings and to present to view the beauties of the buildings at night as well as during the day. It is not only possible to light up an entire building with floodlights, but in many instances the design of the building is such that it is much more desirable to pick out certain features of the building to accentuate and at the same time produce silhouettes which bring out the character of the structure.

Rapp Cites Advantages

"There are many effects which floodlighting can produce, such as variation in color, combinations of colors, and intermittent dimming effects, as well as a varying intensity of light and color. The selection of the type of floodlighting depends largely on the character of the building, as well as on the nature of the surface materials, which vary greatly in light absorption and light reflection. In considering color for floodlighting purposes, efficiency has great bearing on the selection, since in using the darker colors, such as blue, efficiency is as low as 5 per cent. This indicates that much more current must be supplied with the darker colors than with the lighter ones in order to produce effective results. Then again the matter of visibility must be taken into account. This has to do with the possibility of seeing a building lighted in blue at a great height and through atmosphere containing either smoke or fog. Thus illumination in brighted shades of color naturally has the greatest value. However, if an installation is made in which the three primary colors, blue, red and yellow, are in proper proportions, every color in the spectrum can be produced by using constantly rotating dimmers; and if the building surfaces to be lighted are not too far removed from the viewing point, this lighting is very effective. With the three colors on at the same time, a white light will be produced which bears a very close resemblance to daylight. The present-day 'white light,' as electrically produced, is far removed from sunlight or daylight, and unless some color

MODERN EQUIPMENT AND SHOWMANSHIP EFFICIENCY

Our recently completed new Fulton Model Theatre enables us to extend to everyone interested in the theatre industry a valuable service of which details will appear as trade press special month to month announcements.

With a responsibility to the theatre industry, of which it has long been a part, E. E. Fulton Company—now more than ever prepared comprehensively to serve every need of the theatre builder and operator—undertakes to bring together various groups specializing in the design and manufacture of theatre apparatus and to weld them into a single unit at the point of contact with the theatre itself for the purpose of putting the right equipment in the right place under an all-embracing Single-Contract, Single-Responsibility Plan.

Fulton's Model Theatre is truly a proving ground wherein you may critically observe modern conceptions in decorative treatment executed by the Tortenson Company; the latest, most luxurious chairs designed and built by American Seating Company; lighting planned and using the product of Edison Lamp Works of G. E. Co.; apparatus for stage and booth, including the Fulco Projector, generator sets built by General Electric Co.; carpeting by Wm. Slater, Jr.

In pages that follow you will note names of leading manufacturers of high grade equipment with whom we are associated to serve you. It is our wish to bring before you fullest details regarding merchandise which is specified by this company under its contract with the exhibitor, and to prove to you that in purchasing any product or service through E. E. Fulton Company you have secured the highest quality at the most reasonable prices consistent with modern theatre efficiency and economy.

Modern Projection for To-day's Pictures

With sound pictures, a critical public demands higher standards of projection. So General Electric, keeping pace with the industry, announces a new line of motor-generator sets which will give to-day's pictures the modern projection they deserve.

The sets are quiet and smooth in operation. They are compactly built. Unusual overload capacity permits plenty of time in changing arcs. And a special winding holds the voltage practically constant over the whole operating range—a feature the projectionist will appreciate.

The sets are built for 80, 90, or 100 volts, and range in size from 20 amperes to 300 amperes—and higher if desired. Write to your nearest G-E office for complete information.

OF INTEREST TO THE CHAIRMAN

NO Motion Picture Theatre today can succeed unless it satisfies the demand for real patron comfort. A discriminating public cannot be lured to the box office no matter how attractive the program if one must view the entertainment from seats that provide nothing of comfort for the spectator. A really good show loses a lot when seen from poor seats while on the other hand even a mediocre presentation seems worth while if bodily comfort is guaranteed by chairs of proper design and finish. A great number of new and important improvements in theatre seats have been achieved by us in responding to demands for comfort and luxury. Our chair forms are better than ever and upholstery methods using materials specially woven for this purpose, offer the most restful comfort imaginable and at prices surprisingly low if values are considered.

FULTON'S MODEL THEATRE

We hope you will visit Fulton's Model Theatre, furnished with our chairs which as you will discover gives a new meaning to the words—comfort and luxury. And yet the price of this chair is not beyond the average theatre man. We have many other styles and kinds suiting every purse.

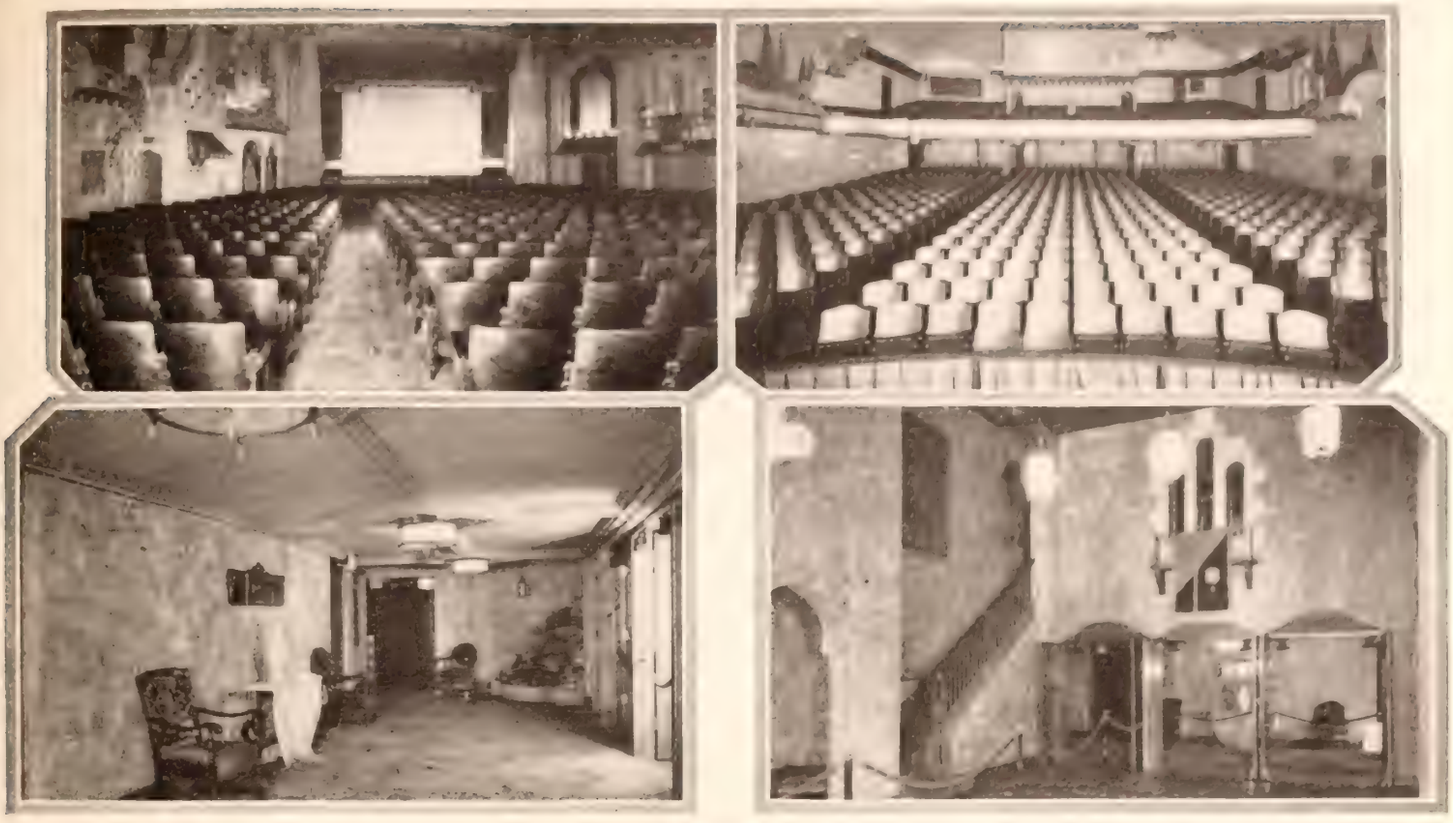
YOUR THEATRE—mecca of thousands—should scintillate with the feeling of light-heartedness and sheer enjoyment.

Extend the atmosphere of your theatre to the street. Fill the lobby with light and transform it from just an "entrance" to a golden pathway of light, a by-way in life through which your patrons find escape from reality.

Light plays an important role in the success of your theatre. To neglect this important box-office attraction by using inferior quality lamps, is as bad as showing mediocre pictures, and expecting a full house.



Good lighting is dependent upon good lamps. When you use Edison MAZDA* Lamps you get lamps that are of a known standard of quality.

Four views of the El-Tovar at Crystal Lake, near Chicago. The theatre, an adobe house, has just opened in the Main Street of an Illinois town. This article tells how.

An Adobe House Invades Mid-West

Pure Mission in Style, the El-Tovar at Crystal Lake Is an Innovation in Illino's Exhibition

CHICAGO—The Far West has seen any number of these theatres in the Mission style of adobe architecture rise in its mesa towns and hill-locked cities, but they are strange to the prairies of the Middle West. This architecture, with its roots along the trails blazed by the early Spanish missionaries across the dry plateaus of the Southwest, is native and proper in that setting; but can it be transplanted to, and made harmonious with, the Main streets of the Illinois plains? The answer is: it has been done.

This problem was presented to Elmer F. Behrns, Chicago architect, largely as the result of a sentimental ambition that persisted in the mind of a Chicago theatre promoter who had traveled extensively in the West. This man was Edward Kirchberg, president of the Crystal Lake (Ill.) Theatre Building Corporation. Years ago, while traveling in Colorado, he came upon an adobe structure of distinctive design, set high up in the Rocky Mountains.

It had been the home of a Spanish prospector, who had built it and named it "El-Tovar" (Resting Place), after striking it rich. Kirchberg was impressed with the architecture of the place, and the name, too, which fitted it so perfectly.

It became his ambition to one day transplant its pleasing and alien features to his own section of the country. But he was frustrated by the architectural difficulties and the seeming incongruity of an adobe structure on an Illinois prairie that had evolved in the days of its settlement no more native an architecture than that embodied in its stock barns and outhouses.

Eventually his ambition was broached to Behrns, and today it stands realized in the newly completed El-Tovar theatre at Crystal Lake, Illinois. It is said to be the first theatre of Mission style adobe architecture in this region, and is also the first of its kind to be erected hereabouts for any commercial purpose. Moreover, though its pure Mission style has been retained both in exterior and interior, not in any detail is it in conflict with its surroundings. It is noticeable, true, because it is different; but even its severest critics have failed to term it conspicuous.

The El-Tovar represents an investment of $170,000, the entire stock having been originally absorbed by the townspeople of Crystal Lake, a village of 3,000 population. (The theatre was very recently purchased by Polka Bros. of Chicago.) Crystal Lake is situated about 45 miles west of Chicago. It is 23 miles from Elgin and nine miles from Woodstock, Illinois, the only nearby centers of any appreciable size.

The building contains two stores and five apartments in addition to the theatre. The Mission adobe exterior is finished in rough terra cotta. Polychrome tile roofing is employed. The theatre contains 908 orchestra seats. A 20-foot stage with full rigging loft is flanked by six dressing rooms. Manager's office is situated in a balcony position directly beneath the operator's booth, and is fitted with a window, 9′ x 18′, from which the show may be viewed. A second window in this office overlooks the lobby.

Staircases flank the lobby, which is two stories high, on each side. In the center of the foyer is a rustic pool and fountain. A commodious restroom is at each end.

The auditorium ceiling is studded with fifty illuminated stars; while two cloud machines are employed to augment its atmospheric properties. Each side of the auditorium incorporates a different design of Mission adobe architecture. Antique [illegible] ported on spears, replace the customary auditorium drapes and contribute to the illusion of an open court.

Warm-air heating is supplied through the mushroom type of floor air-ducts, beneath the seats. Cool air ventilation is by two fans, one on each side of the organ loft.

The operator's booth is 12 by 25 feet, and is designed for three projectors. It is equipped with a spotlight and an effect machine. Adjoining it is the battery and generator room.

All modern equipment has been installed, and includes RCA sound, Wurlitzer organ, and a cool air system. Cushioned, spring seats, carpeted aisles and foyer, and discriminating use of tapestries and art work contribute their share to an atmosphere of luxuriousness and refinement that is rare in the small town theatre.

This Summer— Manufactured Weather

Will Greet Patrons of These Three Cincinnati Theatres

CINCINNATI theatre-goers this summer will be assured the added attraction of Manufactured Weather in three more houses—the Capitol, Palace and Lyric. These theatres, although not new, have been completely equipped to give patrons an ideally comfortable and a scientifically healthful atmosphere every day of the year, regardless of outdoor weather or the size of the audience.

Manufactured Weather is not new in Cincinnati. For two years patrons of the E. F. Albee Theatre have enjoyed this added attraction. Artists in Radio Station WLW (Crosley Radio Corporation) broadcast in ideal, quiet comfort. Guests at the Hotel Gibson dine and dance on the Roof in the healthful comfort of Manufactured Weather . . . as provided through the Carrier System for Air Conditioning.

This is the same system, including Carrier Centrifugal Refrigeration, which is providing ideal conditions of comfort at all seasons in many of the best known and most prominent theatres in the country, as well as in a good percentage of sound stages and broadcasting studios in which there must not be a single sound interfering with recording or reproduction.

Manufactured Weather, as provided by the Carrier System for Air Conditioning, is the only system guaranteed on a scientific basis as to sound level . . . that is guaranteed not to produce the slightest disturbing sound. A visit to any one of the Carrier conditioned sound stages or broadcasting studios will convince you as to the superiority of Manufactured Weather for these studios . . . and for your theatre.

A visit from one of our engineers will not incur any obligation.

The Projectionist Must Learn Sound to Survive, Rider Says

Rigid Requirements of Talkers Make Knowledge of New Equipment Vital He Says—First of New Series

By JOHN F. RIDER

MANY reasons have been stated to substantiate the claim that the present day motion picture projectionist must of necessity take a decided interest in sound projection. Many a line has been spent in discussion of the need for sound projection knowledge on the part of the operator in order that his show be what is expected. All of the statements were true, but the trend in the industry points to something more vital. Investigation of educational activities allied with the future projectionist show that he is being versed in sound work. As a matter of fact present day teaching considers sound projection as an integral part of motion picture projection. Hence the situation when viewed by the man who is now in the booth and knows nothing about sound, is one of self preservation.

An elderly lady from the East was visiting a Western cow town. One fine morning she approached a gun toting cowboy dressed in full regalia, and the following conversation ensued:

"How long have you been carrying that pistol?" asked the Eastern lady.

"Wa'll" drawled the cowman, "goin' on about twenty years."

"Really," said she. "If I may be so bold, how many men have you killed?" she continued.

"To tell you the truth" he replied with a smile, "nary a one yet."

"Then why do you carry it?"

"Wa'll, you see, when the time arrives and I may need a gun, I won't have time to go get me one."

The Projectionists' Case

Such is the case of the projectionist today. The condition of the industry at the present time demonstrates conclusively that the talkies are here to stay. It further demonstrates that much work can be done without an intimate knowledge of the machinery entailed. Despite this condition it is very hazardous to assume that because of past performance, the existing situation is correct and should cause no worry. The man who believes this is very far from the truth. True that we have had talkie performance, but will the past performance if duplicated within the next few years stand the gaff? Extensive investigation is not necessary in order to reply to the negative. The standards of reproduction are daily increasing and the requirements are becoming more rigid. Each and every bit of knowledge aids in that quest for natural reproduction. Each iota of information correctly interpreted by the projectionist helps fill the coffers of the exhibitor and helps assure the satisfaction demanded by Mr. Public.

With this in mind and recognizing that the man who studies motion picture projection in today's modern school is conversant with sound work, what is the status of the operator now in the booth and to whom sound work and equipment are foreign. He may be an old-timer and an A1 projection man, but he nevertheless is inferior to the product of today. That this is true has been stated on numerous occasions by men connected with many theatres.

Announcing—
The Projectionists' Round Table

THIS is the first of a series of lessons on sound projection to be conducted in MOTION PICTURE NEWS by John F. Rider.

Supplementary to the course will be a department in THE SHOWMAN which will be devoted to personal service experiences by projectionists now operating sound equipment. This will be known as the "PROJECTIONISTS' ROUND TABLE."

If you have corrected troubles in your sound equipment drop a line to the writer in care of the above department. Your troubles are the troubles of many thousands of other men and whatever information you may have will prove valuable to others. This department will be devoted to practical sound projection information and need not be technical. Let's have your comment.

One hundred per cent cooperation on the part of the projectionist is important to the success of a theatre. Sound work plays a very important role and in the quest to make his "house" a success the exhibitor will find it necessary to employ projectionists who will assure one hundred per cent operation of the sound apparatus.

Any union projectionists who feel secure that their union membership will assure them of constant work just so long as their projection of pictures is satisfactory, are in danger of a rude awakening some day to learn that such ideas are erroneous. Successful unionism is not founded upon protection of the incompetent. Recognition of equitable and just demands is imperative. The advent of sound introduces a new item into the projection line, just as the advent of steam introduced a new field of study for the old captains of the now obsolete windjammers.

On Servicing Sound

Coming events cast their shadows before them. The problem of service of sound equipment has been vital in the industry. The fact that it was necessary has increased the number of men seeking positions as projectionists. Perhaps these statements appear far fetched. Yet the writer knows at least 20 individuals who have been connected with the service problem in the sound field who are now taking or have completed courses in motion picture projection. It is true that the above number represents a small portion of the total number interested, but bear in mind that this country is large and many other men in other parts of kindred interest.

The modern service man in the talkie industry knows a branch of the business entirely foreign to the projectionist. It represents years of study at home or at school, years that are past, but the fruits present an advantage. If we are to be truthful, the service men can learn the art of picture projection much more rapidly than the motion picture operator can learn the art of servicing his sound equipment. The result is another potential motion picture operator qualified to fulfill existing demands.

Considered from the viewpoint of economy, the logical man to take care of the sound equipment is the projectionist. Now, we do not mean to increase the work alloted to this individual, but the day is coming when that condition will be national. Past performance shows that one man can satisfactorily maintain both units. Hence when all parts are functioning normally, his work remains as before. When Old Man Trouble arrives upon the scene in the booth today and the sound equipment is an integral part of the performance, the projection ceases. If the trouble is in the picture mechanism, the operator now goes to work. If it is in the sound equipment, he stands by until the repair is made; a condition which is not very satisfactory to the paying audience, and if the service man is not immediately available, the effect is far reaching. Perhaps all of this seems to point to a service man-projectionist. That state is not far away. However, he will not be known as a service man-projectionist but merely as a projectionist whose work encompasses everything in the booth.

It is true that a good deal of the equipment in use today is sold with service—at a separate price—but who can tell what the future holds in store? Then again a good deal of equipment is not sold on the same basis. A man operating in a booth which is now being serviced by a special organization may find himself in a non-serviced booth.

Projection Plus Sound

We do not mean to present a sad prospect, to assume the role of a pessimist. However, developments in industries change the status of the personnel. One must keep abreast of the times. The laggard falls behind and he alone is to blame. Personal success is a matter of individual ability. Whether or not it is viewed with favor, the projectionist must know his sound apparatus.

This introduces a new subject. What must the projectionist know about the sound equipment? What work is involved in the acquisition of this knowledge? Unfortunately both answers are lengthy. A sound system such as that utilized in a modern theatre is a sequence of coordinated electrical units. It consists of a large number of different parts, each of which entails its own considerations. However none of these parts is of the nature which defies average comprehension. The projectionist starts with an advantage. He already knows of the presence of an agent harnessed by man and known as electricity. He is familiar with

THE famous Rialto, oldest of Broadway's de luxe houses, was reseated by Heywood-Wakefield without a single interruption to any program, yet the Rialto is open from 9.30 A. M. to 2 A. M. The speedy job of reseating this famous Publix house was accomplished in a comparatively few days with installation crews working only in the early morning hours. A de luxe chair, particularly adapted and developed for use in sound houses, was selected by Publix officials and engineers for the Rialto. As in hundreds of other cases, Publix specified Heywood-Wakefield theatre chairs because of their long-wearing construction, their superior comfort, as well as their style and beauty. Warner Brothers, Roxy, Netoco, Schine, and a host of other progressive showmen are using Heywood-Wakefield theatre seats for good, money-making reasons. You, too, will find that these modern theatre chairs increase patron comfort and owners' profits. Ask your nearest Heywood-Wakefield sales office for helpful information on seating and reseating.

Circuits Push Building Plans as Step to Reduce Unemployment

Industry Subscribes to President's Plea for Economic Rehabilitation by Heavy Construction Programs

WARNERS, Publix, Fox West Coast and Radio-Keith-Orpheum are doing their bit in the campaign, sponsored by President Hoover, to minimize unemployment through advancing of construction projects. The President's call was sounded last winter, asking that projects be advanced as a means to help eliminate unemployment.

In the East and on the Coast, Warners are pushing plans for theatre expansion. The constantly increasing number of houses in the company chain are providing employment for thousands of workmen throughout the country.

Publix is going ahead with its theatre expansion plans, having recently provided approximately $70,000,000 in new stock for the purpose. The firm is building in New England, Middle West and South and Far West in connection with its campaign. On the Coast, alone, Warners will build 25 theatres within the next year. The Coast program involves an estimated $10,000,000.

The Radio-Keith-Orpheum chain is being added to at a rapid rate. The firm is building houses in a number of sections of the nation and has others in preparation.

Fox West Coast is continuing its extensive program upon the Coast, with the building of 16 theatres already provided for. In addition, the circuit is continuing its steady eastward expansion, which is to result in building of a number of theatres in the Middle West during the coming year.

Warners Rush On

HOLLYWOOD — Before the end of 1930, Warners will add 25 new theatres to its Coast chain, according to M. A. Silver, general manager of Warner Bros. Pacific Coast Theatres. Six new locations are under consideration in California. The expansion program was launched officially last week with breaking of ground for the new Warner house on Wilshire Blvd. Warners are building a $2,500,000 house at Oakland, an 1,800-seat house at Huntington Park and theatres at San Pedro and at Wilshire Blvd. and Western Ave.

Builders Seek to Envision Future

POSSIBLE return of presentations are being anticipated in new theatres under construction or planned. Chief of these anticipate developments in wide film, with practically all theatres now under way making provision for this forthcoming development.

The television angle is being considered but is not being touched due to the fact that builders have no idea as to the form this development will take.

Building Takes Wholesale Spurt

ALBANY, N. Y.—Simon Fabian has just closed a deal for the purchase of fourteen pieces of property on which will be erected a $3,000,000 theatre and office building, seating 3,000. It will be the largest house in northern New York and will be leased to R-K-O.

SALEM, Mass.—Paramount Theatre, the new million dollar Publix theatre in the heart of the business section, opened Patriots' Day, a Massachusetts holiday, with hundreds turned away.

KINSTON, N. C.—Construction is proceeding rapidly on the new Strand, which will be of Spanish design.

STAMFORD, Conn.—The Theatre Realty Co. has arranged a first mortgage loan of $500,000 to finance the erection of the Davenport. It will seat 2,500.

OAKLAND, Calif.—The new $1,500,000 Warner Bros. theatre to be erected on Broadway will be under construction soon. Plans have been completed by G. Albert Landsburgh, San Francisco architect.

BLACKSBURG, Va.—The new $150,000 Lyric has been opened, the structure facing the campus of the Virginia Polytechnic Institute. It is the property of the Blackburg Realty Corp. and has been leased to the Commonwealth Theatre Corp., of which R. Floyd Plank is president. It seats 900.

SANTA ROSA, Calif.—Construction of the new State by Redwoods Theatres, Inc., will begin this month, George M. Mann announces.

LOS ANGELES—Five of the 16 new theatre projects planned by Fox West Coast are to be located here. This is in addition to the Pantages, which is be opened May 29. Three of the houses will be in suburban Los Angeles, three in other California cities and two in New Mexico.

At Wilshire and Hamilton is the new Wilshire theatre, now more than half finished, and it will be ready to open some time in July. This will be a 2,500-seat house and will cost in the neighborhood of $300,000.

In association with Jacob Stern & Sons, Fox West Coast will build the Los Fellis Theatre on Vermont St., between Hollywood and Franklin. This will be a 900-seat theatre, of the de luxe type, all on one floor, and all seats of the cushion divan type.

On property owned by Mary Pickford, Fox West Coast Theatre will build a 1,500-seat theatre at LaBrea and Melrose Ave. It is to be called the Garden Ave.

Excavation will start within the next two weeks for the foundation for the Stadium at Pico Blvd. and Robertson.

In Westwood Village, Fox West Coast will construct the Village, a building with architecture blending with the name given to the new playhouse. These plans are now nearing completion.

In the suburbs of Los Angeles, Fox West Coast will build the Sunkist at Florence and Compton Sts., in Compton; the Venice, at Windward, Grand and Washington Ave. in Venice, and construction will start within 30 days at Huntington Park.

Fox Forging Ahead

PORTLAND—Wtih business at Portland and Seattle first runs for the first quarter showing a 100 per cent increase over the corresponding period last year, Fox West Coast is embarking on an extensive building program throughout Coast states, Howard Sheehan, vice-president of the circuit, told managers of Oregon and Washington key cities at a meeting here.

Houses to be built include three now under construction at Spokane, Centralia and Wenatchee.

Tea Room, Tennis Courts, 'Plane Landing for Theatres of Future

Investment Safeguarded by Addition of Outside Revenue

Seen as Next Big Development by British Manager

LONDON—Embodying radical innovations of construction and design including a disappearing proscenium frame, which exposes the entire front of the auditorium as a giant stage which can be used as a pastoral setting for ballets, is a "dream theatre," designed by Will Pepper, manager of the Regal, Norwood, and Cedric White, art director.

Pepper offers his suggested theatre of the future, to overcome waste of room in present structures. He criticizes the practice of building theatres without consulting the manager who is to operate the house.

"The plan," Pepper says, "is to combine under one roof all forms of entertainment, comprising theatre, dance salon, tea garden, tennis courts, etc., Continental swimming pool which can be converted into an ice rink, offices and clubs, and supplied with facilities that will make the place a flying centre. In addition, a high-class residential hotel will adjoin the building.

"The foregoing suggests innumerable sources of revenue. It doubtless will evoke criticism, but nevertheless, I contend that it contains all the potentialities which will make for its success.

"In these days a large theatre must have other sources of revenue to counteract the bad business periods which seem to be unavoidable. Also, it must be able to retain its public no matter what form of entertainment be in demand, hence the scheme to combine every form of entertainment under one roof.

"The real showman's theatre, to my mind, should be adaptable to any particular atmosphere desired. For example, a Spanish picture calls for a Spanish atmosphere.

"I claim that my suggestion will fill the long-felt want for it can be readily transformed into a Russian, French, Spanish or Italian theatre within a minute's notice by mere suggestion.

"This may appear very vague, but I am convinced of the possibility. The following scheme which has taken twelve months to perfect in detail, will afford scope to every showman.

Front a Magnet

"The first consideration has been to create a magnetic atmosphere wherever the theatre is within sight of the public. Hence the front of the building will be carried out in black glazed marble interspersed with innumerable windows which will be prominently utilized in a unique decorative scheme. Concealed lighting will be used, which, together with the diffused illumination of the stained glass windows, will provide an ambitious decorative effect for the frontage. There will be shops running along practically the entire front of the building, and these, of course, provide a big source of revenue.

A British View of Theatre of Future

WHAT will the theatre of the future be?

There has been great speculation on the subject both in the United States and abroad. Will Pepper, who manages the Regal at Norwood, England, in the accompanying article, offers his ideas. It is worthy of note that in his predictions, no mention of nor provision for television are made.

His airplane landing angle is an interesting slant and his contention that the practical manager should be consulted in the designing of the house is one to consider seriously.

The entrance itself will be formed of metal and glass, surrounded by an ornamental bronze portico. On either side will be two handsome fountains set against a background of constantly changing lighting effects, which are used to create atmosphere in both winter and summer. Similarly, the whole of the building will be bathed in concealed lighting. A Neon type of lighting will be employed to carry out the decorative emblems.

"Across the front of the building will be a balcony, which can be used as a promenade, or for serving luncheons, teas and dinners during the summer months.

"Flood lighting will be used to maintain the decorative idea. On top of the building there will be powerful beacons to serve as landmarks for all aerial craft passing to and fro from abroad.

"The vestibule will be lavishly furnished, and in between the pay-boxes will be the Control. From this centre, communication will be effected to all parts of the building, and there will be facilities for a comprehensive inquiry bureau. The playing of artistic fountains will give an effect of spontaneous gaiety.

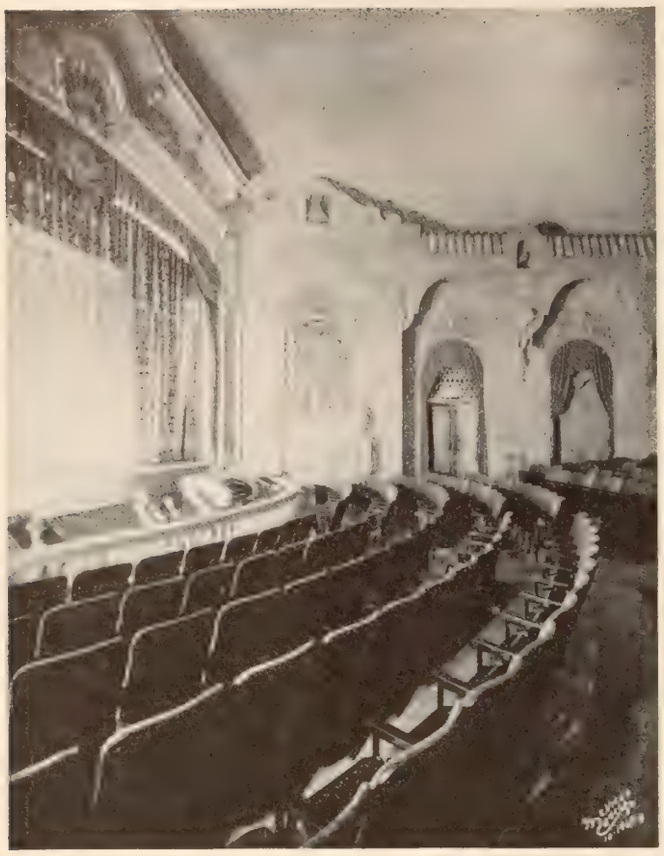
A Crystal Palace

Immediately on entering the building proper there will be a dance salon which will be a veritable crystal palace the whole of the appointments being carried out in glass. Decorative glass panels will be the main feature of the interior, and a glass dancing floor will be a distinctive idea, the dancing space being illuminated from beneath. The whole design of the salon is intended to convey the impression of the heart of an opal. Lights will be perpetually changing in exquisite pastel colors. Alcoves on either side will be used for tea tables.

"On the right of the salon will be a semi-circular colonnade giving access to the garden. Unique lighting effects and the trees, shrubbery and a grass lawn will convey the impression of the open air, and it will be arranged from the garden to maintain its summer garb all the year around.

Design Is Continental

"The construction of the theatre will be a practical attempt to combine the best of existing structures, and at the same time to give the public something different. It will be in every sense an atmospheric building, and the Continental design will be definitely prepared for the purpose of creating this illusion. The theatre will be a theatre within a theatre, and by this means it will be possible to maintain the idea that one is seated in an open-air theatre. Lighting effects will be used behind the inner walls and the exterior sides of the building will be merged into the roof, thereby creating a feeling of spaciousness. The seating accommodation will be arranged in the form of a horseshoe, and every seat will afford a view of the whole of the house, a point that never seems to be considered.



"Around the lower and upper tiers there will be a promenade which, together with the scenic design, will add to the illusion of the open air. A wonderful underlit canopy will extend from the stage, and on either side of the proscenium opening will be bays for fountains some 30 feet high, which will be thrown into relief with concealed lighting. The general lighting arrangements will enable floating clouds, sunset, sunrise, and storms, lightning, etc., as well as night and day to be effected. An escalator will give access to the upper part of the building.

"Provision is also made for rest rooms and lounges, to accommodate two thousand persons, at the entrance to the upper and lower part of the theatre, thus obviating the necessity for the public to wait outside the theatre.

"The stage will contain many wonderful innovations. Instead of the customary curtains, there will be richly ornamented brass gates. Ultra modern ideas will be incorporated in the working of the stage and presentations, and the Schwabe system of lighting will be employed with many other patents that have never been used hitherto.

The operating box will be so situated as to give a level "throw," and provision will be made for the wide screen and stereoscopic pictures.

Rectangular Auditoriums with No Curves Held Acoustic Aid

Irregular Distribution of Sound Through Proper Shape, Size, Interior Finish Stressed by Bureau of Standards Expert

WASHINGTON—Shape, size and interior finish are the three main factors to be considered in planning an auditorium to assure proper acoustics and safeguard against echo, dead spots and reverberations, it is stated in a treatise prepared by Paul R. Heyl, senior physicist in charge of the sound laboratory of the Bureau of Standards. Curved walls or ceilings should be avoided, he says, pointing out that auditoriums of a rectangular shape have been most satisfactory.

Following is text of Heyl's treatise:

The usual defects of auditoriums are three—echo, dead spots, and reverberation. In the usual sense of the term, echo means a definite or articulate repetition of a sound after an interval at least equal to the total duration of the sound that is being repeated, while reverberation means a confused or inarticulate prolongation of the sound. Echo is always a bad feature in a hall; reverberation, on the other hand, is desirable up to a certain point; only in excess is it an evil. Of the two, echo is the more difficult to remove; prevention by foresight in construction, aided by expert advice, if necessary, is the best plan.

Echo and Its Causes

Echo arises by regular reflection of sound from smooth walls, ceilings, or proscenium arches just as a mirror may reflect a beam of light without scattering it. If, however, the surface of the mirror be roughened the reflected light will be diffused in all directions; and if the walls and ceilings of a room be similarly irregular (on a sufficiently large scale) the reflected sound will be scattered, broken up, and its definite or articulate character destroyed. In this case we have what is called reverberation.

The lapse of time before an echo is heard is due to the fact that the reflected sound has traveled a longer path than the sound which comes directly from the source. This difference of path may be such as to cause much mischief. The reflected sound of a spoken syllable or of a note of music may arrive at the ear at the same moment as the succeeding syllable or note which has traveled by the direct path, and so cause hopeless confusion.

Generally speaking, auditoriums are less likely to exhibit troublesome echo when their outlines are rectangular. An instructive case of the trouble that may be caused by curved walls is cited by Watson (2) in the case of the auditorium at the University of Illinois, with an approximately circular floor plan and a hemispherical dome. The best that could be done in the way of after correction of the acoustics of the room was only partly satisfactory. Watson regards the complete cure of such a room as hopeless without "surgical treatment"; that is, straightening the walls.

Securing Irregular Distribution

Smooth, hard-finished walls, such as the usual plastered type, are excellent regular reflectors of sound and are consequently likely to produce echo. It becomes of importance, therefore, to break up such surfaces so as to produce irregular distribution of the reflected sound. This is usually done by coffering in the case of ceilings. Examples of this may be seen in many theatres of modern construction. The ceiling and, perhaps, the proscenium arch are broken up into depressions about four feet square, containing a succession of steps totaling a depth of, perhaps, eight or ten inches. An irregular surface of this character breaks up the reflected sound and distributes it in such a way as to minimize echo, and, in fact, to convert it into reverberation. The dimensions which should be assigned to such coffering are not a matter of taste or accident. If the wave length of the incident sound is very large compared to the size of the irregularities it encounters there will be little dispersive effect produced; and if very small, the smooth spaces inside the coffering may act as regular reflectors. The size mentioned, four feet in diameter, is a compromise between the average wave length of the male and the female voice.

Dead spots and sound foci occur as a consequence of echo-producing conditions. Sound travels through the air as a wave of alternate compression and rarefaction, and if a reflected sound wave is retarded by the proper amount it may happen that the compression of the directly transmitted sound and the rarefaction of the reflected sound arrive at the ear at the same time, neutralizing each other's effect and producing a diminution in intensity. If the reflected sound is retarded a little more it may happen that two compressions coincide, producing an unusually loud sound. The most usual cause of such sound foci, however, is a curved wall of ceiling which concentrates the sound to a focus.

Since dead spots and sound foci arise from the same cause as echo their removal may be brought about by the same treatment. Some care and experience is necessary in order to locate the particular portion of the room which is responsible for the production of a dead spot. Often this can be found only by a cut-and-try experiment, as it is not possible to predict the path of reflected sound with the same accuracy as in the case of light. The reflecting portion once found must be treated in such a way as to decrease its power of regular reflection.

W. C. Sabine mentions a case of a theatre, the ceiling of which contained a flat oval panel, to which such trouble was traced. In this case an irregular canopy, oval in plan and slightly larger than the panel, was hung just below it with good effect.

Balconies may require special consideration, especially if low and deep. As a rule, this type of balcony should be avoided, as the sound intensity is sure to be diminished at the rear under the balcony, and may be so low that hearing will be difficult.

Fundamentals of Acoustically Proper Auditorium Not Understood

The fundamental principles governing the construction of an acoustically successful auditorium are no longer new, but are not yet generally understood by those engaged in such work. In this paper these principles are stated and an example is worked out showing their practical application to the planning of a new auditorium or to the curative treatment of one that has proved to be unsatisfactory.

The scientific study of architectural acoustics is a thing of comparatively recent years. In 1895 Harvard University had just completed the Fogg Art Museum, containing an auditorium which proved almost unusable. The corporation of the university appealed to the scientific staff of the faculty for advice and assistance in the matter, and Prof. W. C. Sabine undertook the study of the case. Two years were spent in the investigation of the questions involved, in the course of which experiments were made in a number of existing and satisfactory auditoriums. As a result, certain fundamental but previously unrecognized principles became clear, which later enabled Professor Sabine to predetermine the acoustic design of the new Boston Symphony Hall 1.

These investigations of Sabine were the pioneer scientific work in the subject. So completely and carefully were they carried out that subsequent workers have done but little in the way of extending the theoretical foundations of the subject, and have for the most part merely enlarged our knowledge of the acoustic properties of the various materials commonly used in building construction.

A sound produced in a room is reflected back and forth from walls, floor, and ceiling, a portion being absorbed at each reflection until its intensity is so reduced that it becomes inaudible. Owing to the high speed of sound there may be many such reflections in the course of a single second in a room of ordinary size; and the greater the dimensions of the hall the more prolonged will be the reverberation.

If the walls of the room are covered with some sound-absorbent material, such as hair felt or acoustic plaster, a few reflections may suffice to destroy the sound. Such a room is acoustically "dead" and undesirable. A little reverberation is necessary to satisfy our established tastes and auditory habit, and the desired amount of reverberation is found empirically to increase with the size of the auditorium.

It is customary, since the pioneer work of Sabine, to define the "reverberation time" of a room (perhaps, somewhat arbitrarily and artificially) as the time taken for a sound of specified intensity to die away to inaudibility. This standard intensity is a sound somewhat difficult of reproduction. Fortunately, its use is not necessary in ordinary practice, fo rin most cases the "reverberation time" can be calculated with sufficient accuracy. The method of making this calculation will be explained later.

Excessive reverberation is an evil because it prolongs unduly each syllable or note of music, causing it to interfere with the next. The ideal conditions for intelligibility of sound are two: Each syllable should die away before the next arrives, which in ordinary speech may be, perhaps, one-tenth of a second; and the sound must always be loud enough to be heard.

The first of these conditions can always be secured by providing enough sound-absorbing material in the room. For a small auditorium which can easily be filled by the speaker's voice, this is the most important consideration. For a very large room it may be that the amount of absorption dictated by the first condition is so great that the speaker cannot be heard in the back of the room. Since the intensity of the human voice cannot be much increased it is necessary to compromise between these two conditions and to permit longer reverberation in larger rooms.

Shorter Reverberation Time in Theatre

In the case of theatres used for sound pictures this compromise is not necessary, as the acoustic output of the loudspeaker is by no means as limited as that of the voice. For such auditoriums there may be employed to advantage a somewhat shorter reverberation time than is desirable for rooms of the same size used for speaking or musical performances.

Broadcasting studios may be equipped with variable absorption, consisting of smooth plaster walls covered with heavy curtains which may be pushed back exposing the wall when more reverberation is desired.

Experience with a number of existing auditoriums of acceptable acoustic quality makes possible the formulation of the following table, in which the acceptable limits of the standard reverberation time are expressed for rooms of different volume, used for speaking or musical performances.

TABLE 1.

Volume of room (in cubic feet)	Acceptable limits of reverberation time (in seconds) Half audience	Maximum audience	Volume of room (in cubic feet)	Acceptable limits of reverberation time (in seconds) Half audience	Maximum audience
10,000	0.9-1.2	0.6-0.8	400,000	2.1-2.3	1.7-2.0
[illegible]	1.0-1.3	.8-1.1	600,000	2.3-2.6	1.8-2.2
[illegible]	1.2-1.5	.9-1.3	800,000	2.5-2.8	1.9-2.3
[illegible]	1.3-1.8	1.2-1.5	1,000,000	2.6-2.9	2.1-2.5
200,000	1.8-2.0	1.4-1.7

The limits given in the table are not to be regarded as rigid. Auditoriums are known which exceed these limits in either direction by several tenths of a second and yet are of fairly satisfactory quality. And, as mentioned above, large auditoriums used for sound pictures may advantageously be designed for a figure somewhat less than the minimum given in the table.

Acoustic Probe On in Dominion

Toronto—Research into acoustics is to be carried on in three Canadian universities—at the University of Toronto by Professor G. R. Anderson, a member of the executive board of the Acoustical Society of America; at the University of McGill, Montreal, by H. E. Reilley and at the University of Saskatchewan by E. R. Grieg.

Theatre acoustics will receive special attention and Prof. Reilley has already made a detailed technical survey of conditions in 18 Montreal houses. While the work deals with acoustics generally, it will be concerned specially with acoustic treatments which would result in further utilization of Canada's immense gypsum resources in the form of fireproof acoustic plasters.

Calculation of Reverberation Time

As a result of Professor Sabine's investigations we have a formula giving the reverberation time of a room. Let t=reverberation time in seconds,

V=volume of room in cubic feet

A="total absorption" of the room (to be explained later).

Then the following relation holds

$$t = \frac{0.05\,V}{A}$$

The only point that needs explanation in this formula is the quantity A.

Different materials differ considerably in their absorbing powers for sound. The most complete absorber known is an open window. It is theoretically possible that a small amount of sound may be sent back by diffraction from the edges of the window, but this quantity is so small that it is permissible to say that an open window is a perfect absorber. A good absorber of sound may absorb, perhaps, half as much sound as an equal area of open window. In other words, if it may be said that an open window absorbs (or transmits) all the sound that falls upon it, its coefficient of absorption is unity, while that of the material above mentioned would be 0.50.

In like manner, every substance may be said to have its own absorption coefficient. This constant was measured by Sabine for a number of common materials, and later workers have extended the list.

Table 2 gives the absorption coefficient for several substances. Strictly speaking, these coefficients will vary somewhat with the frequency of the incident sound, and in Table 2 the values given are for a frequency of 512

TABLE 2.—Sound-absorption Coefficients

Concrete	0.015
Glass, Single thickness	.03
Marble	.01
Open window	1.00
Plaster	.03
Stage opening (depending on furnishing)	0.25- .40
Ventilators (50 per cent open space)	.50
Wood, varnished	.03

Absorption coefficients for a variety of materials have been measured at the Bureau of Standards, and the results, at frequencies ranging from 128 to 4,096 cycles per second, are available upon request. Sound-absorbing materials are frequently changed by the manufacturers, and a printed list is consequently soon out of date.

In Table 3 there are given values of the total absorption of individual objects as determined by Sabine. The unit of absorption in which these values are expressed is the absorption of 1 square foot of open window.

TABLE 3.—Total absorption by individual objects

Audience	per person	4.7
Church pews	per seat	.2
House plants	per cubic foot	.003
Seats, upholstered, depending on material and lining	per seat	1.0-2.5
Seat cushions, cotton covered with corduroy	per seat	2.2
Seat cushions, hair covered with canvas and light damask	per seat	2.3
Settees, upholstered in hair and leather, seat and back	per seat	3.0
Wood seats, for auditoriums	per seat	.1

As an example of the use of these coefficients let us take an anditorium of 100,000 cubic feet capacity, including the stage opening. There is a wooden floor of 4,550 square feet, a plastered ceiling with the same area, 5,320 square feet of plastered walls, a stage opening of 600 square feet, and 500 plain wooden seats. The coefficients for plaster, wood, and glass being the same to the accuracy requisite for this calculation, no special allowance is necessary for closed doors and windows.

Empty Room Absorption 634

The calculation of the total absorption of the empty room is made as follows, the computations being carried to the nearest integer:

Wood floor	$4,550 \times 0.03 = 137$
Plaster ceiling	$4,550 \times .03 = 137$
Plaster Walls	$5,320 \times .03 = 160$
Stage opening (no furniture, bare walls)	$600 \times .25 = 150$
Wooden seats	$500 \times .1 = 50$
Total absorption of empty room	$= 634$

In the case of a half audience we must add $250 \times 4.7 = 1{,}175$ and subtract the absorption of 250 seats at 0.1, giving the net addition of 1,150 absorption units, and bringing the total absorption of the empty room up to 1,784. The reverberation time for half audience is then found by the formula.

$$\frac{0.05 \times 100{,}000}{1{,}784} = 2.8 \text{ seconds}$$

which is considerably too large, the acceptable range for this size of room being (by Table 1) 1.5 to 1.8 seconds for a half audience.

For full audience we add to the absorption of the empty room $500 \times 4.7 = 2{,}350$ and subtract $500 \times 0.1 = 50$, making a net addition of 2,300 giving for the total absorption of the room 2,934, with a reverberation time of 1.7, a little in excess of the upper limit of 1.5 in Table 1, but not seriously so. However, as a maximum audience can not always be relied upon, it is well to add absorbing material to the walls to reduce the reverberation time in the case of the half audience at least to the upper limit, 1.8 seconds.

The value of A for half audience has been previously found to be 1,784; hence 993 units of additional absorption are required.

The choice of absorbing material is a question of price and appearance. Suppose it is decided to use a hypothetical material of coefficient 0.25. The coefficient of the plaster which this covers is 0.03, hence the net coefficient of added absorption is 0.22. To obtain a total absorption of 993 units would require the application of $\frac{993}{0.22} = 4{,}514$ square feet of material. This is slightly in excess of the ceiling area and much greater than the available wall space. The best practical solution would be to distribute the material as uniformly as possible, filling wall panels only (if such exist) and placing the remainder on the ceiling in some

Illustrating Theatre Chair No. 7860

A chair of this type was installed in the famous Chicago Civic Opera House. Full upholstered back, spring edge seat and Moderne Standards. A triumph in building into theatre chairs maximum absorption values. Only one of the many American Seating Company types and styles of theatre seating.

"CAME THE TALKIES"... sound reproduction to synchronize with photography. Theatres dressed up... another era dawned. Beauty, harmony, comfort and acoustical perfection. That is what the public asked of theatres.

Electricity had wrought another miracle. Architects made contribution. Sound to be understood, must carry without reverberation, without echo.

So, American Seating Company saw a modern problem. They undertook acoustical research. They found that chairs of certain types have greatest sound absorption. That seats could aid the ear—as well as make for comfort and beauty.

And soon the motion picture industry found that chairs meant more than physical comfort—more than beauty to harmonize with the design and decorative charm of interiors. That to attract patrons—to keep them coming to the theatre, new sound equipment was not enough. New chairs were needed . . . chairs whose acoustical properties brought to their audiences the speaking or singing voice—clearly and undistorted.

To many, reseating—the replacing of old chairs with new—corrected sound distortions, and brought the bigger box office receipts that new sound equipment failed to bring. New, acoustically correct chairs paid for themselves in attracting capacity crowds.

Intelligence, Decision, Loyalty Called Showmanship Keystones

Fox West Coast President Outlines to The Showman What He Thinks Cardinal Factors in Showmanship

AS TOLD BY HAROLD B. FRANKLIN to Frank Whitbeck

TO the right are the Ten Commandments for every manager of a theatre in the Fox West Coast circuit.

Here are ten fundamentals of vital importance to showmanship, and with very little variation they are vital to any business organization. Yet these are more of a summation of the factors which made Fox West Coast a success than a new and arbitrary injunction to circuit theatre managers.

In its infancy, this circuit was blessed with a factor rare and precious in any enterprise—and that was a robust heart, with a goodwill, interest, and enthusiasm for the enterprise which extended far beyond trifling personal feeling. In almost every great human endeavor, which has shown a gratifying measure of success, there has been a marked human factor—possibly a "grim old father of the business"—or a business built on the doggedness of a man, or a group of men, who would not be downed. The Fox West Coast Theatres were built on heart—and loyalty.

Heart, gusto, enthusiasm, zest, are almost irresistible. They have an infectious quality. Many are the organizations which have reached out to get a good man, as if they were purchasing a new clutch for a car, installed the man, and got good results from him; but few and far between are the fortunate institutions which attract to them men who pitch their hearts, hats and happiness into the enterprise, and will fight the devil or the deep blue sea for the sheer pleasure of seeing their own organization out front—and this is the spirit that has made Fox West Coast Theatres.

"No Closed Corporation"

Not every man who enters our employ stays and becomes a living part of the concern. Men come. Men go. But, there is an ever-increasing residue of those who, by nature, can feel an organization; men of the sort who love a smooth, efficient machine, men of the type who can turn their own wits to adding vigor, and life, to an enterprise already vital and strong.

And, as a man grows in responsibility, as his powers increase, he hears more and more often these cardinal principals upon which the success of the institution is based. Leadership is fostered by constant reiteration in the minds of managers and their officials, of the ten commandments, of the ten cardinal points of showmanship. The personnel of the circuit feels no resentment because of this constant repetition. They do not feel that they are being read the ukase of a monstrously efficient "master mind."

Once a prospective manager has experienced the infectious "sturdy heart," once he has proven his mettle, when he has been encouraged, and has responded to the stimulus proffered by his officials, once he is tried and found true—he is handed back the reins.

"Managers in Fact"

He is not considered "Cog 98" in the flywheel of the circuit—he is encouraged to be his own boss! "You are the manager of your theatre—in fact as in name!" His officials ask for his originality. They ask him to share it with them, and with his fellow managers.

To the utmost degree, the manager of a circuit theatre is encouraged to be an intelligent, quick-acting, sure, accurate executive, with a desire to foster cooperation in the organization, and, above all, to take pride and pleasure in the circuit.

Let no one conceive of this as empty bombast. A very simple illustration of the spirit I have attempted to describe is evinced in our house organ, which is named—economically—"NOW." The degree of "official advice" is kept to the minimum. Nine-tenths of the publication is devoted to terse reports of publicity stunts that have worked. A good tie-up occurs with one of our managers—he outlines it, sends it to the editor

The Ten Commandments of Circuit Showmanship

1. You are the manager of your theatre . . . in fact as in name.
2. If you believe in yourself . . . in your ability to do the right thing at the right . . . you cannot help but succeed.
3. To be an executive . . . and when you were appointed manager of your theatre, your division manager believed you had executive ability . . . you must make decisions; clear, clean, straightforward decisions. You must not "pass the buck"; neither will you procrastinate.
4. If you are a good manager—if you are a man—you will never bring discredit to Fox West Coast Theatres, nor to the man who gave you employment.
5. Believe in your home office executives . . . have faith in their judgment . . . trust their actions . . . have confidence in their integrity . . . give them the cooperation you expect from them.
6. If you are to be called a "showman"—then you will have a love for the theatre and its traditions at heart. You will aspire to be worthy of the name "showman."
7. Your theatre must be a shrine of happiness, of good cheer, of instruction . . . music . . . art . . . literature . . . the best the screen has to offer; you will watch your programs and eliminate whatever is not worthy of your institution.
8. You will never advertise that which is not the truth . . . you will not cheapen yourself, nor your organization, with misleading advertising, neither will you advertise in a manner that will offend the good taste of your patrons.
9. Your theatre will be the reflection of yourself. . . . See that it reflects naught but good.
10. Be honest with yourself . . . in your business conduct . . . in your associations with your fellow managers. Be truthful. Be courageous in thought. Be liberal in your cooperation. Be helpful to those that need help. Be kinddly, yet let not sympathy sway your better judgment. Be the man that your division manager . . . and the Fox West Coast . . . expect you to be.

of "NOW," and it is discussed by alive, alert, interested fellow-managers. Our home publicity office works on it. Perfected, the plan goes back to every manager. The stunt hits, on one day, over the entire circuit. The local effect is powerful. The total effect tremendous. And, if the season is slack, "NOW" invariably contains the ingenuity of all our managers, and forever something new, catching, diverting, refreshing and proven, to put over local theatres.

"NOW" is not the mouthpiece of some one officer of Fox West Coast Theatres. It is the expression of a body of men; it is the voice of the circuit.

Showmen—Their Make-Up

Inevitably, during a discussion of circuit theatres, or organizations of such a nature, comes some discussions of efficiency. Let me make this point, however. Efficiency is an almost universal discovery, the benefits of which can be enjoyed by any organization with initiative enough to reach out and adapt it to their own needs. To create an "efficient organization," then, sit complacently by and wait for the profits to roll in, is a dangerous process. Ten years ago, when the term was not so well known, it paid to harp upon it incessantly. I believe that now much of the self-satisfied prattle which goes on about efficiency is its exact antithesis; that which has resulted from a high degree of organization is a fine machine, but a machine is—heartless.

I never knew a showman who was a good bookkeeper, and, on the other hand, I have met but few bookkeepers who were good showmen. The showman hires his bookkeepers, his superintendent of efficiency, while he, the showman, gets out and hustles up business for his theatre.

Of course, circuit theatres must be efficient; we must have a high degree of accuracy. But, Fox West Coast Theatres is loathe to forget that zest, vigor, enthusiasm, are as fundamental to success as efficiency.

Showmen have changed in the past two decades. The change is partly physical, entirely beneficial. Study the postures of the old-time performers, as they are immortalized on tintypes. Such "hamming" would be booed from the stage today. Recall the theatrical manager, with his red vest, watch chain imported from the Oregon forests, derby, oil and dirt. He cannot compare with the modern showman. The modern manager has been showman enough to bring the entire populace into his theatre. The old-timer associated exclusively with the habitues of the back bar. The modern showman knows reputable people, is a member of clean-cut business organizations, fosters more committees of civic benefit than the leading merchant of his town.

Love for Theatre Essential

Fox West Coast Theatres go on praying for hearts that fight, joyfully and long, whose game is to succeed, who do not forget that theatres are to broadcast amusement, entertainment, enlightenment, instruction, and cheer, and these attributes, or virtues, the old-time managers did not possess.

"If you are to be called a 'showman'—then you will have a love for the theatre and its traditions at heart. You will aspire to be worthy of the name 'showman.'"

The man who succeeds in this business of ours was born for it. You cannot make a showman, any more than you can make an actor. It must be in the soul. Give me the man with show business in his veins—with loyalty in his heart, and with 60 per cent efficiency, and whoever wants him may have the man who finds show business just a job, has no loyalty, and 100 per cent efficiency.

The showman today must be versatile—he must know, appreciate and work for: public relations, and in Fox West Coast Theatres we have the pioneer public relations department of American theatres.

Public Relations Need Stressed

Service departments have grown up in many great business organizations, for the public is now recognized more and more as a cooperating factor necessary for good will and success. And in no business is such a department more worth while and productive of harmony and success than in the exhibiting of motion pictures. During the past three years, the Department of Public Relations of the Fox West Coast Theatres, initiated by Regge Doran and carried on so efficiently by Ryllis Hemington, has built up a great public backing, an understanding sympathy, and a feeling of confidence among women which I think it would be difficult to over-estimate. Its accomplishments are very great and the future holds an increasing opportunity for successful endeavor.

Mutual understanding and sympathy are necessary in any situation and at all times. It is the hope between nations for world peace. It applies equally to local situations and it seems to me that in no business is it more necessary to overcome ignorance, indifference, and intolerance than in the motion picture industry. The industry has now become essential to modern life. If pictures never had an educational quality, they would still be vital and necessary because of the need they fill for relaxation and entertainment—but as in every business, standards may be lowered and defiled by individuals, and as in so vast an organization criticism can be justly made, there is an opportunity for the expression of prejudice and intolerance and a chance for active antagonism which is harmful both for exhibitor and the public. It is true that every community has reformers who sometimes defeat the very purpose for which they are working, for an unintelligent survey of a proposition without understanding of the facts involved, impedes any course.

Woman Held Best Post

The director of public relations can bring about the sympathetic and intelligent understanding necessary between the theatre and the public. I believe that the choice of a woman for such a position is absolutely right because public opinion is molded by women, and women express themselves more freely and frankly to each other and are best understood by their own sex. If the woman in charge can have experience in theatre management, it is, of course, of immeasurable help, because practical experience, not unproven theory, gives greater confidence to those with whom it is necessary to work. Questions of practical application come up constantly, and if they can be answered from a business standpoint, the satisfaction to all concerned is very great. Women in our territory have found that there is a considerate, tactful, just and sympathetic woman to turn to in the Fox West Coast offices, sone one sincerely willing to help or to explain the situation and satisfy all doubts. As a result of the confidence created, women, generally, are rallying to the exhibitor and are willing to openly take sides in questions where the theatres are locally in danger of autocratic inhibitions. This was recently proven in two of our towns where the different women's organizations gave every assistance to defeat censorship, because they felt that theatre managements are sincerely attempting a wiser solution to the problem.

The Junior Matinee or the week-end booking of family pictures in neighborhood houses has been enthusiastically received on our circuit as the solution for children's attendance at motion pictures, and as an answer to censorship. The movement meets with approval from the public generally and the plan has been carried throughout the circuit.

As director of public relations, this executive is in a position to know the different communities, to learn of the activities of the leaders in various welfare or "reform" movements, to distinguish the constructive element and separate it from that which would defeat progress.

Keeping the Public Sold

There are many demands made constantly upon theatre owners and managers. Some of these calls are legitimate in service of the community. Many are frankly impertinent. Some come from women's groups who take advantage of their sex and organization name to make requests from the theatre manager which are difficult to refuse. But many such requests are made in ignorance, and the director of public relations is in a position to educate the public. There has already been a general movement on the part of federated clubwomen to stop the abuse of such requested courtesies. The Public Relations Director is the intermediary who carries to the theatre men the viewpoint of the public, and to the public an understanding of the problems of the business and the necessity of construction criticism and cooperation.

Educating the public on the technical side of exhibiting pictures is also an interesting phase of this work. It has aroused a greater interest in theatres, all of which aids in greater discrimination and greater appreciation of the entertainment given and the finer pictures shown. It is bringing to the children at junior matinees, through cooperation with the boy scouts, camp fire girls, playground associations, music settlement, police and fire departments, and other such groups, new interest and increased civic understanding. There are infinite possibilities for future development along these lines which would be distinctly constructive in effect for the exhibitors and for the public.

There are innumerable ways in which a great exhibiting group may be of benefit to the public, but certainly the greatest welfare work it could do would be through real

Good Advice

HAVE all your lights washed and everything looking springy and clean. Theatres that have no marquees will drape their flags and bunting across the face of the building neatly. It is possible to set a definite scheme of decoration for each theatre. Make your's the best. —From "The Firing Line" (published by Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, New York State Division).

900 Attend RCA Course in Sound

WITH 900 members of projectionists locals from Manhattan, Long Island, eastern New Jersey, southwestern Connecticut and other nearby sections enrolled, the second semester of the course of study in the operation of sound equipment being conducted by RCA Photophone, Inc., at its installation and service department is under way. It is for union members only.

Of the 250 members of Local No. 306, New York City, who attended the classes during the first semester, 60 re-enrolled for the second course. Classes are held daily from 10 to 12 in the morning, one to three in the afternoon and eight to ten in the evening. About 30 students attend each session.

Lectures are delivered by Harry Braun, A. R. Schultz, A. Preisman, Watson Jones and Edwin Costello, each of whom has had broad experience in connection with the operation of sound reproducing equipment.

Text Books Aid Studies

Text books have been prepared under the direction of H. E. Costen, who has been assisted by four other experts. These text books are said to be the first authoritative information upon the subject of sound reproduction and the care and maintenance of sound reproducing equipment. In addition to the lectures and the text books, the instructors give demonstrations of the operation of the various types of sound equipment with which the lecture room is amply supplied. A completely equipped projection room with two sound reproducing projection machines, operating with sound-on-film and disc form a part of the equipment used in connection with the class work.

Represented in the class are projectionists from Stamford, Hartford, and Bridgeport, Conn.; Newark, Perth Amboy, Jersey City and Paterson, N. J.; about 20 cities and towns on Long Island; Mt. Vernon, New Rochelle, Nyack and New York City. Applications have been received from various other cities, among those from a long distance being Atlanta and Los Angeles.

Carpets and Drapes Lead Replacements

CHICAGO—Carpets and draperies are chief requirements in replacements made by theatres this spring, according to National Theatre Supply Co. Sales volume during the last thirty days has practically doubled, the drapery and carpet department states. New seats and lobby frames are other leaders during house cleaning time, it is declared.

Keeps Burglars Away With This Type Alarm

Hollywood—An ingenious burglar alarm, installed at the Orpheum, Marion, Ill., is described by "Now," house organ of Fox West Coast Theatres.

"One alarm button is installed in the cashier's cage with the button on the floor handy for the foot and the buzzer in the manager's office," the publication states.

"The other is a bit more novel and operated only in connection with the same. The wiring system for this calls for a brass plate under one of the castors with the other wire leading to a nail in the wall at such a point where the contact will be closed by the opening of the door and the door contacting the nail, which gives the signal either in the lobby or the projection booth.

"The use of the nail, or hook, if you desire, is inconspicuous. Burglars working hastily will usually swing the door open wide, or if you are compelled to open, you swing it wide and the warning is immediately given.

"Both of these systems are easily installed at very little expense."

6,000 Study in Lighting School

Approximately 6000 students have been enrolled and are now taking the free correspondence course in general illumination being conducted by the Westinghouse Lighting Institute, Grand Central Palace, New York.

The course, covering every phase of illuminating engineering, has been established to qualify employees of public utilities, manufacturers and merchants in the fundamentals of good lighting practice and the modern developments of the art.

The course contemplates the collection of essential information from many sources, condensing and presenting it in sequence. It permits an absorption of illuminating engineering that would otherwise require study, often beyond the convenience of most lay students. Companies employing men engaged in illumination activities are thus enabled, through the medium of this course, to give their employees a fundamental working knowledge of lighting practice without detaching them from their company duties.

Nine Assignments in Course

The course consists of nine assignments, each covering a specific phase of illumination. These divisions embrace: Light Sources, Units of Light Measurement and Photometry, Principles of Lighting Calculations, Commercial Lighting, Display Lighting, Industrial Lighting, Floodlighting, Street Lighting.

The lessons, questions and references were compiled by commercial engineers of the Westinghouse Lamp Company, Bloomfield, New Jersey, with a view to giving the student essential data needed in every-day customer contact.

Every student receives individual attention during the period of the course. He must answer specific questions with each lesson and then submit them to the Institute for correction before receiving the next lesson. Wrong interpretations are made clear on his papers which are returned. All answers are checked and he is given a percentage rating which is credited to his rating card.

Gentlemen:

It was just a year ago today that the first ULTRAPHONE installation was completed and inasmuch as every installation since that time included the Wright DeCoster Reproducers we felt duty bound to write and let you know how well satisfied we were with your product.

In going over our records, we find that your speakers and No. 9 Horns were used in every one of our 132 installations in theatres throughout this northwest territory and in addition, we have placed 42 of your speakers with theatres having other equipment than ours, but who decided to improve the reproduction of their equipment by installing Wright DeCoster Speakers.

We might also add that during the past year we have experimented with and tried out approximately 10 or 12 other makes of speakers, some of them selling for two or three times your price, but after each test we found your Model 107 Speaker superior in every way.

We take this means of thanking you for your splendid cooperation and sincerely trust that the use of your Reproducers will always continue to give us the same satisfactory results.

Yours very truly,
ULTRAPHONE, INCORPORATED.

New Sign Mixes Light Like Paint

Electricity used like paint is the basis of a new type sign developed by Arnold Kirk and Edward Bonns, in charge of exploitation for Warner theatres. It is the Kirk Color Control, and is first being used atop the new Hollywood in New York in what is claimed to be the largest sign in the world. Kirk Color Control now is marketing the invention.

In constructing the sign, the electrical engineer has mixed his electricity just as a painter does his paints. The primary colors are selected and blended into the tone desired for a scene. The sign has a cellular steel face, studded with invisible lamps. Each of the letters is eight and one-half feet high. Pastel shades, never before available in electricity, can be used, it is claimed. Any design, any scene, can be produced in natural colors, as in color process printing or painting.

The colors flash across in such frequency that it practically becomes difficult to follow the cycle effect.

Board Is Bank of Cells

The display board appears as a bank of cells or compartments. These cells can be of various shapes or sizes; squares, triangles, hexagons or circles, depending on the purpose for which the sign is to be used. In each cell there are three colored lamps: red, green and blue, but the cells are so constructed that these lamps are not directly visible to the observer. This cell arrangement permits mixing of color in the desired range and removes the spotty effect of single lamps. Each lamp is controlled separately, so that it is possible by turning on the three lamps individually, or in combination, to get the full range of special colors.

32 Different Designs

With this arrangement any desired design in color can be flashed on the board and with the control mechanism 32 different designs can be flashed at desired speed, from one change an evening to the complete cycle in a few seconds, before the sequence is repeated. Thus, it is possible to change the layout, or copy, on the display board without the necessity of changing the outside lamp bank in any way, all of the changing being accomplished in a short time at the control mechanics or flasher.

Both the lamp bank—the display board—and the control mechanism—the flasher—have been standardized in units that will permit any size board to be built.

Also for Auditorium Use

These units can be used in many ways, both inside and outside, as decorative architectural elements and as sign displays. If desired, glass or a translucent face can be placed over the cells, in this way allowing them to be used for panels in the theatre auditorium, foyer or stage. If this construction is utilized, color sequence can be obtained that could be timed to fit with any requirements.

The color control is made up of cells, or "pigeon holes," and the cells slant downward on floors and ceilings as they extend to the back wall of the pigeon hole. On the backwall are the three lamps, red, green and blue. Cells ranging from 2" x 2" up to 8" x 8" are made and, in special cases, irregular cells may be built.

8 Colors with Two Adjustments

When each light has two adjustments there are eight colors: (1) off, (2) on. Thus, with two adjustments on each light, and three lights available, the total number of colors obtainable becomes 2 raised to the third power, or 8. Twenty-seven colors are obtainable when each light has three adjustments; (1) off, (2) 1/3 on, (3) 2/3 on, (4) full on. Similarly 64 colors are obtainable when each light has four adjustments: (1) off, (2) 1/3 on, (3) 2/3 on, (4) full on. Other subtle colors are obtainable when dimmers are hooked up with the color control mechanism. This allows each incandescent lamp to be dimmed from full strength down to "off" and vice versa without percentable jump.

A flick of the control mechanism wipes the slate clean and new pictures, new word messages, new color effects, new stunts, are available merely by setting up any desired action on the control mechanism.

An Electric "Eye"

Lighting control and the ringing of burglar alarms are theatre applications for the new "electric eye," developed by Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Co. The photograph shows this new equipment which recently was placed on the market.

Builds New Theatre Right Over Old One

Tampa—Building a new house without disturbing the operation of an existing theatre is the unique achievement of Butler Gore, who operates the Garden here.

Gore had been enlarging from time to time until the building inspector said enough. Gore had to have more room and the only way he could get it was to build a new house. He could not see his way clear to stop operation while the new one was being built and drive his patrons elsewhere, so he decided the only way out was to build his new house right over the old one.

Starting the new walls on the lot line, which gave him several feet extra width, these new walls have now been built and the new roof is being erected right over the old building. When the new roof is completed the old house will be removed and new seats added in the additional space. All this is being done, and has been done, without interrupting a single performance.

Vallen Modifier For Wide Screen

Akron, O.—Consummating two years of experimental and development work, the Vallen Electrical Co. has developed and now is marketing the Vallen automatic screen modifier for changing the screen surface in connection with large pictures.

At the present time the market for this modifier is being experienced in conjunction with Magnascope projection. The modifier also is designed for use in connection with Grandeur film.

The modifier consists of a metal screen frame, rigidly designed, but not excessive in weight, and inside of which the screen is laced. To this frame is attached the equipment for handling the black velour curtains which modify the screen surface in any desired direction and any desired extent. Of vital interest is the fact that no additional space is required beyond size of the frame. The device is a complete unit. In other words, the various parts are all attached to and a part of the metal frame. Without change, the unit can be made to "fly" when desired.

All driving, or movement, is accomplished by means of chain, which is declared to eliminate possibility of slippage or irregular modification of the screen surface. Operation may be manual or electrical.

Say Sirocco Blower Will Aid Acoustics

Another step toward better acoustics is the new Sirocco blower recently developed by the American Blower Corp. The air capacity of the new fan has been increased so that, running at low speeds, it is said to provide the same amount of ventilation formerly procurable with high-speed fans. Mechanical hum and vibration have been entirely eliminated according to National Theatre Supply Co., which distributes this equipment. The new Sirocco is designed for silent operation in sound houses.

New Speaker Claims Cycles Up to 8,000

Chicago—New auditorium speakers, styled the "860 Series," have recently been placed on the market by Silver-Marshall, Inc., prominent manufacturers in the radio field.

The speakers, according to the company, reproduce a pitch as low as 30 cycles (the lowest C on the piano), and as high as 8,000 cycles (the highest note on the piano).

Curves Employed to Avoid Sound Pockets

Lynn, Mass.—Curved surfaces will be eliminated entirely and angles, bevels and breaks substituted, to avoid sound pockets at the new Paramount here, which is slated for opening in July. Floodlighting treatment in the house is planned, with the type of beam of lumens subordinated for the purpose. Reflected lights will give soft tones and can be arranged so as to harmonize variably with the decorative treatment of the different parts.

Data on Talkers Essential-Rider

the manifestations of this force. The sound apparatus merely introduces new fields of utility. Thus comprehension is a matter of interpretation.

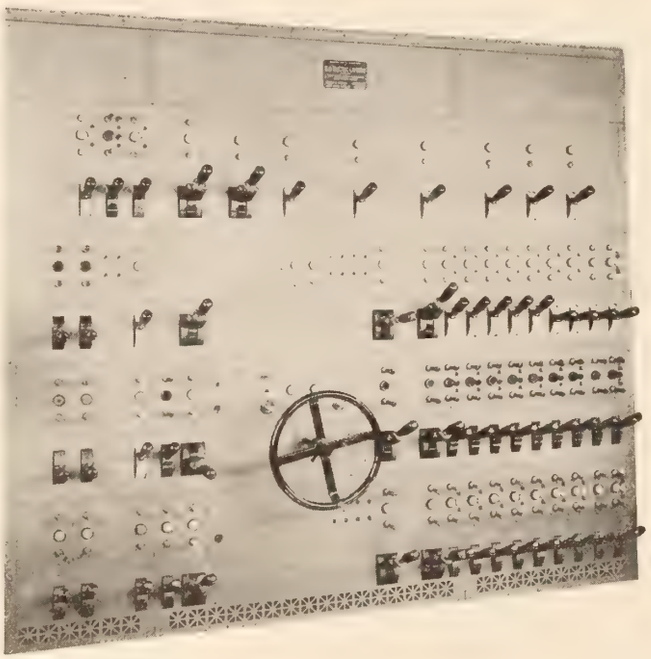
The different fields of study encompassed by the parts used in a sound installation are many. Fortunately the study of these separate fields is not necessary on the part of the operator. He utilizes the findings of others. The chemist combines certain metals of such atomic structure that the atom does not part with a electron with a great deal of ease. Thus, we have wire which offers a great deal of resistance to the flow of electric current. The operator does not concern himself with the chemical composition of that piece of wire. He acquaints himself with the practical application of that wire; with the conditions under which that wire may be employed and to distinguish when it is unfit for further use or if it is being incorrectly employed.

The Problems Are Many

To understand the practical application of a unit and to be able to analyze whether or not that device is being correctly employed, one must be familiar with the principle of operation. This principle of operation should not be misconstrued. The man who is interested in the practical application of a piece of resistance wire learns why wires of different diameter offer different values of resistance to the flow of current; why a wire offers resistance to the flow of current, but he need not study the chemical composition of iron, of nickel, of copper and other such metals. The man who is interested in the operation of a vacuum tube learns why it amplifies if it is an amplifying tube and how to determine if it is amplifying and is in good or bad condition. He, however, is not interested in the grade of manganin or nickel used for the grid or the plate or the exact composition of the filament or the gas placed into a photo-electric cell to increase its sensitivity. He, however, learns why the presence of the gas does increase the sensitivity of the cell.

Comprehension of the operation of a sound system necessitates understanding of the underlying theoretical principles. Maintenance is the practical interpretation of this theoretical knowledge. A theoretical background is essential to the correct analysis of effect. Such analysis is of intestimable value during maintenance. It is a matter of time spent to remedy a defect; whether the correcting action is instituted in five minutes or two hours. A man needs not have a theoretical background to correct a defective condition when the condition and the remedy are stipulated. But how is that man to know when that condition is confronting him? He must first learn to recognize that condition. When that condition is manifest to the ear or to the eye, and one recognizes the state, the remedy if known, is simple. However, the parts of a sound system are so numerous and so many different conditions will manifest themselves in the same way that one must be familiar with the operating principles of each part in order to be able to select the parts which may be contributory or responsible for the manifestation. For example, no sound output from the loud speakers may be a condition, considering the equipment as a whole, yet that condition may be the manifestation of a short circuit in some remote part of the apparatus. The short circuit is a condition allied with the individual part of the apparatus.

Background Held Essential



It is possible to consider the condition previously mentioned and outline a series of routine tests made with special equipment of such nature that visible indications are possible. These indications may be numerical with instructions which designate good or bad according to the numerical indication. The fact that this is true is what convinces many that a theoretical background is unnecessary. That conviction is erroneous. First, because of the time factor. Such mechanical testing necessitates the expenditure of a good deal of time because the man who is making the test fails to recognize that one test proves the correct state of an entire unit. In other words, he does not possess the faculty of analysis because he cannot interpret his observations. Second, many parts of a system do not register their true state with the type of testing equipment suitable for the man who is not familiar with his apparatus. This is most confusing.

We place so much stress upon this theoretical background because we have witnessed the dismal failure of men who believed that a cursory knowledge was sufficient. However, we take this opportunity to state that comprehension of this theory is not an insurmountable obstacle; neither is it an objective which may be reached by a selected few or only after painstaking labor and tremendous concentration. The amount of theory required by the motion picture operator who wishes to understand and know his sound equipment is only a small part of the total associated with the apparatus. As small as it may be, satisfactory progress is impossible without it.

The greatest obstacle in the path of such study is that presented by the individual who is doing the studying. In many cases the man is beaten before he starts. This is true for several reasons. First, the man who is advised that he must study theory paints a terrible picture of what is supposed to constitute theory. His imagination runs rampant. He fancies subject matter of such proportion and of such nature that it requires a degree of imagination beyond his capabilities. Secondly, he imagines theory to be replete with mathematical expressions far beyond his powers of conception. He starts with the idea that his education is not sufficient to grasp the material to be presented.

Such ideas on the part of the projectionist who is interested in the operation of sound

Consult Us Before Remodeling

If you are planning on remodeling your theatre, why not include a complete and up-to-the-minute lighting system controlled by an efficient Hub stage switchboard?

While making other changes, it will be a comparatively simple operation to install a Hub switchboard—complete with footlights for vaudeville and stage presentations, spot-lights, colored lights for auditorium, and any other specifications you might have in mind.

We will gladly give you the full benefit of our extensive experience without any obligation on your part. We have designed switchboards and lighting systems for every size theatre from the largest to the smallest.

equipment should be dispelled. Each and every man who is now operating in a booth is sufficiently equipped to comprehend all of the theory he must know to be able to operate a sound channel to perfection. The theory to be considered in connection with such work includes mathematical expressions. These expressions however are not far-fetched. Neither are they exceedingly complex. While the principles underlying the operation of the equipment used in sound work include higher mathematics, recourse to such mathematics is not required for what we have in mind. Such material is necessary to the man who is making an engineering study of the subject; who at some future time will be called upon or hopes to design apparatus. This series is not intended to produce a design or research engineer. It is designed to give a theoretical grounding to the practical worker.

Course to Be Complete

Mathematical expressions will appear now and then. They are not only necessary but affford a tremendous advantage. Such mathematical expressions are the numerical representations of a formula, which, in turn, is a numerical expression of a certain theory or a fact. We stated that the use of such expressions is an advantage. First, it conserves space. Second, it allows the dissemination of information in a more concise manner than would be possible by a lengthy word description. Third, it allows greater assimilation of the data being considered because its expedites analysis; because it allows transposition of the information whereby it is possible to note the reaction under different conditions. Fourth, it enables deeper study of the factors involved.

It might be well before closing, this, the first installment to state a few facts pertaining to the course. Due to the existing requirments for motion picture operators, we shall assume a certain amount of knowledge on the part of the projectionist. This knowledge is that electircal energy is available in two forms, as D.C. and A.C. Further, we shall assume knowledge of voltage and current and resistance as electrical terms. Because of its importance later in the series we shall start the course with a discussion of bodies which have been subjected to an electrical charge of varying polarity, either positive or negative and the relation between these bodies.

Queries Solicited

Each installment will be complete in itself, covering a certain subject, but the subjects will run in sequence, advancing each week until at the conclusion, the subject of sound projection will have been completed. The selection of subjects will be such as to allow progressive advance through the principles of operation, considered from the electrical angle and not the progression of units used in a sound system.

Each weekly installment will conclude with a number of review questions based upon the subject matter contained in that installment. The answers to these problems will show whether or not comprehension is being achieved. These answers may be submitted to the writer for correction.

Daylight Control Of Lights by Cell

Schenectady, N. Y.—Control of lights and illuminated signs according to the intensity of the daylight is one of the functions of the photo-electric relay, just developed by General Electric. By using the relay, lights can be turned on automatically when the daylight intensity falls below the predetermined minimum.

The operation of the relay is described technically as follows: With a voltage of proper polarity and magnitude applied between the two elements of the photo-electric tube, the current it passes is proportional to the amount of light shining on it. This current (of the order of a few micro-amperes) is amplified by a pliotron. The sensitive relay is connected in the plate circuit and is energized or de-energized in accordance with the amount of light on the photo-electric tube. The contacts of the relay control the coil circuit of the contactor. When the relay in the plate circuit of the amplifier is energized, it will first open its normally-closed contacts and then close the normally-open contacts. This relay, therefore, either makes or breaks the coil circuits of the contactor depending on how it is connected.

When the contactor is de-energized approximately ten watts is required by the device, and when the contactor is energized approximately 30 watts is required.

"On the roof will be situated the tennis courts and the gymnasium, and a public sports club. At the other end of the roof will be an open-air swimming pool which will be run on Continental lines. The bathing pool can be converted during the winter months into an ice rink.

"Space will also be provided in the center of the roof for landing aircraft. Also situated on the roof is a wireless cabin and meteorological office.

"The hotel, which will be constructed on the extreme left of the building, will include on the ground floor a public restaurant. Hotel patrons will be able to pass into the theatre by a private entrance.

"The sources of revenue from a building of this description will be:

"Hotel, public restaurant, bathing pool, ice rink, office rents, dance hall, tea lounge, shops, theatre tennis club, sports club, aircraft landing fees.

"Within ten years I forecast that the present-day theatre will be out of date, for the simple reason that they are all being built on stereotyped lines, as they were in the days of our forefathers."

Ceilings and Walls For Soundings Boards

London—Use of theatre walls as "loud speakers" and ceilings as sounding boards was suggested by Sir Oliver Lodge, noted scientist, at the first annual dinner of the British section of the S. M. P. E. Declaring that many years ago he had made what he called a "shouting telephone"—a microphone cut into a violin sound board—Sir Oliver said that he had often wondered if it were not possible to make the whole of one wall a loud speaker, with moving coils arranged at intervals behind the whole surface so that the entire wall vibrated.

"Theatre architects also seem to have neglected the ceiling," he added. "Why should it not be made into a sounding board? Diffused sound is comparable with diffused light."

High praise for motion picture engineers who had wrought the "talkie miracle" was voiced by Sir Oliver. At the same time, Simon Rowson, chairman of the British section of the S. M. P. E., announced that Isidore Ostrer, chairman of the Gaumont British Corp., had offered to contribute $5,000 toward the cost of establishing a trade research laboratory.

In an appeal to others to bring the amount up to $25,000, Rowson declared that the time had come when it is essential that the trade should be enabled to refer its technical problems to its own reserch department. In the meantime, he said, the trade should make increased use of the National Physics Laboratory and the university laboratories.

Replying to the toast, "Science and the Film Industry," Sir Oliver declared that he was "lost in admiration of the motion picture engineers whose methods had hurried up the progress of evolution so that the marvelous growth of the film industry had taken place within my own life-time."

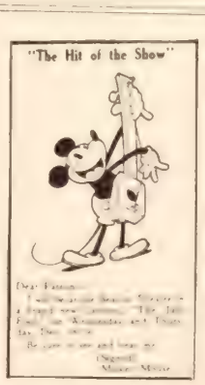
"The combination of the phonograph and the kinematograph in the talking picture is a miracle," he said. "The public does not appreciate what a difficult problem had been solved."

Showmanship Dictates Shorts Be Given Break and Sold to Public

Managers' Round Table Has Plenty of Evidence to Show Real Dough Can Be Made with Shorts

By Charles E. Lewis

Editor, Managers' Round Table Club Section of Motion Picture News



IT IS rather unfortunate that so many showmen fail to realize the possibilities presented by the high standard of the talking short subjects on the market today. It would almost seem that they refuse to admit, or recognize, the tremendous improvement the shorts have achieved with the success of talkies.

Citing concrete examples is always far more impressive than reciting your own reactions, and so I call attention to a recent incident, when, together with some friends, I attended a neighborhood theatre on upper Broadway. After we thought we had seen the show and were getting ready to leave the theatre, one of our party exclaimed, "What's this going on the screen? We didn't see it."

So we all settled back in our chairs and, as I recall the incident, we saw a talking short comedy which undoubtedly saved the show. And this one case is by no means the only one of its kind. On many other occasions, I well recall witnessing shows where the shorts were, by far, superior to the feature.

If we want to take these different incidents as a basis to impress you with the importance of this part of your programs, then we, at least, have something to start on. But the important point we set out to tell you about was the possibilities offered by shorts in the line of exploitation. If you think, for a moment, that such possibilities are limited you are making the mistake of your life.

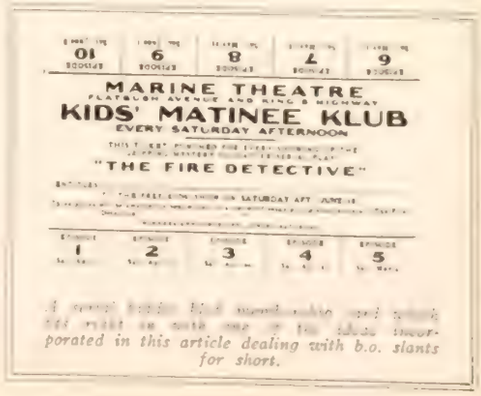
It all simmers down to plain showmanship and your own ability to recognize the value of the different pictures booked into your theatre with the idea that you want to give patrons an entertaining and satisfactory show.

Just a suggestion based on what is set forth in the accompanying story.

This is how J. Barbour Russell billed his shorts in Maysville, Ky.

It was not so long ago that we ran a story in the Round Table section (Page 91, issue of Dec. 7th, 1929) about a well-known showman, Colonel J. Barbour Russell, of the Opera House, Maysville, Ky., who tempered the variety of his shows by running a short subject program once a week for one day. He not only played it up strong in all his advertising, but he made sure that when he booked his program that all units combined to make a most interesting and "different" show. The idea went over so big that Russell continued the stunt until a fire closed the house. To showmen who may want to try a gag of this kind, we would emphasize the importance of assembling the proper kind of shorts, both from the entertainment, as well as, the publicity angle.

The back of the program reproduced herewith shows how he played up the show from this one angle. We distinctly recall some clever newspaper advertising and other medium employed by Russell to help insure some measure of success for the opening "Novelty Program." What he has done, you can do. It's simply a matter of going over your own individual situation thoroughly and analyzing every angle to best decide whether your patrons would enthuse over a different kind of a show occasionally. Maybe it will flop entirely. And then again, maybe it will go over big and bear repetition.



Then again we have concrete evidence of wide-awake showmanship in the selling of shorts, from many other live-wires. On page 998 in the issue of Sept. 14, 1929, Manager McGeachie of the Algoma in Saulte St. Marie, Ont., Canada, showed us how he played up his talking comedies through the clever use of triangular signs under his marquee. This gave added importance to this phase of his shows and resulted in much favorable comment and interest from his patrons.

Along the same lines, we have published innumerable photos showing how many managers played up their shorts by giving them prominence on their changeable attraction signs, naturally adding to the value of their programs. Others used cut-outs, special banners and different kinds of lobby displays, all for the purpose of impressing the patron with the fact that they were not going to see "just another comedy" but really an added "feature" of the theatre's entertainment.

Bill Smeltzer of the Riviera theatre in San Francisco, sent us his popular monthly program calendar. You will find the reproduction of it in the issue of August 10, 1929, on page 616. If you will refer to the story and cut you will notice the footnote emphasizing his short subject attractions. Then there was Manager Schade in Sandusky, Ohio, who thought enough of his talking shorts to use a street ballyhoo in the form of a truck, similar to the idea used so often by showmen for their features. Which again opens a door to dozens of angles along the line of ballyhoos in connection with short features.

The Eckel theatre in Syracuse made it a point to play up every outstanding short talkie through the use of a special hanging sign under their marquee. Considering the fact that this stunt was worked back in acceptable pattern which shall cover the whole ceiling.

Distributing the absorbing material in strips or patches has the added advantage of reducing somewhat any echo that may exist, as the reflected sound is thereby broken up.

The application of this absorbing material will reduce the reverberation time for full audience to within the allowable range, though near its lower limit.

In the above example it will be noticed that all of the added absorption was placed in the auditorium and none on the stage. Experiments conducted by Watson indicate that both speakers and musicians prefer reflecting surfaces about them to intensify the sound while the listeners prefer absorbent material in their neighborhood.

It is generally considered that the reverberation time is independent of the positions of the absorbing material and of the source of sound. In general, this statement is true, but there are some important exceptions. For instance, if the absorbing material is placed back under a balcony or in some other place where the sound intensity is low the absorbing material will not be as effective as if it were placed where the intensity is greater.

There are also some cases where between large parallel non-absorbent surfaces the sound may be reflected back and forth for a longer time than is to be expected from Sabine's formula. The sound in this case does not resemble ordinary reverberation but may be described as a "flutter," and is heard only when the listener is between the parallel surfaces. Exceptions of this kind are rare, but must occasionally be dealt with.

Planning an Auditorium

In planning an auditorium we must consider three factors—shape, size, and interior finish.

As stated in discussing echo, the design of an auditorium should avoid curved walls or ceilings. An attempt to introduce such features for their artistic effect is almost certain to be detrimental to the acoustic quality of the room. Auditoriums of a rectangular shape have been the most uniformly satisfactory.

Prior to Sabine's work there was current an idea that there should be a certain ratio existing in the dimensions of the room; just what ratio no one seemed to know certainly. Sabine quotes several different recommendations. Modern opinion regards such a ratio as immaterial unless, of course, it be carried to an absurd extreme, such as a very long and narrow room.

The question of size must be determined principally by the purpose for which the room is to be used and not by considerations of space available or seating capacity desired. True, modern amplifying practice makes it possible to use a very large auditorium for speaking, but the present discussion is limited to the consideration of natural features and characteristics. The alteration of quality and the noise introduced by amplifiers are such that they will require much improvement before they will be acceptable for the rendition of anything in which artistic quality is a prime requisite, and for this purpose unassisted auditoriums will for a long time, perhaps always, be the rule.

Volume of room	Number of instruments
50,000	10
100,000	20
200,000	30
500,000	60
800,000	90

Generally speaking, a theatre must be moderate in size, while an auditorium for musical numbers, such as orchestral or choral performances, may be much larger. Such performances usually include several vocal solo numbers and this rather limits the size of the room.

Experience with existing auditoriums leads to an empirical rule connecting the volume of the room with the maximum number of orchestral instruments suitable. This rule is expressed in Table 4. No distinction is here made between wind and string instruments, which are supposed to be present in balanced quantity.

In case the orchestra is reinforced by the organ due allowance must be made. The new music room at the Library of Congress is a case in point. Its volume is about 100,000 cubic feet. At the opening concert there was present an orchestra of 26 pieces, which, with the organ, produced an excessive reverberation perceptibly spoiling the effect of sudden pauses after a loud chord. The indicated limit for this room is, perhaps, 12 or 15 pieces with the organ.

As to interior finish, this should be planned with both echo and reverberation in mind. A liberal use of coffering on ceiling and sloping upper walls should effectually prevent echo from this source, and the interior finish should be calculated to give a reverberation time as indicated by the average range in Table 1, using panels of absorbing material in such quantity as may be necessary to reduce the reverberation time to a suitable value. Such materials, of several kinds, are now available commercially.

is introduced it may produce glare. This can easily be overcome by lighting a surface from two different angles, particularly if the surface is somewhat broken up with reveals or details in relief.

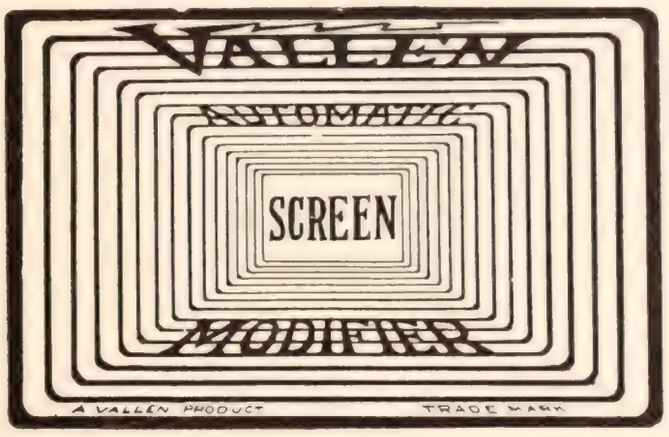
"In using colors for lighting buildings, illumination from two angles and the use of complementary colors will produce striking effects. Here again visibility must be carefully considered, as in all color lighting. Until such time as we can successfully produce an artificial light resembling daylight, the best effects in floodlighting will be produced by using two colors as already outlined. However, when we do produce an artificial light more closely resembling daylight, we shall be able to light a building so as to exhibit all of the lights and shadows which appear in a building during the day and which were uppermost in the mind of the designer while planning the structure.

"In designing floodlighting systems, great care must be taken in locating the floodlighting units so that the desired effect of the gradations of light on the surface will be obtained. This also involves the necessity for careful analysis of the light-absorbing and light-reflecting qualities of the material, and the distance and angle from which this surface is to be lighted. The use of set-backs in modern American architecture serves admirably the purpose of floodlighting in that it is much easier to locate the units properly, and it is also true that present-day architecture nearly always embodies some motif which should very properly be brought out by night illumination.

"In addition to what is commonly known as flood lighting, many striking forms of illumination can be produced. For instance, towers of light with light on the inside, such as the ball of light atop the Paramount Building in New York, afford possibilities of floodlighting. Another scheme is to throw floodlight on smoke or steam coming out of an orifice from the top of a building, either in a single color or in a combination of colors. Still another possibility is that of constructing a large shaft equipped with mirrors and having colored light thrown on the mirrors from various angles, as well as the possibility of lighting the water in fountains, using varying colors.

"Other notable examples of the floodlighting of recent buildings, in addition to the new Paramount Building already mentioned, are the "Times Square," B. F. Keith theatre and office building in Cleveland, and the new Rialto Theatre, Joliet, Ill. These three buildings illustrate the use of different systems of floodlighting. Architectural floodlighting is more or less governed by the actual composition and design of the building which is to receive this lighting effect. It is the writer's opinion that lines that form an integral part of the composition of the structure should also play the same part when the building is illuminated at night; in other words, the structure should always be the same in composition, both night and day, and the flood of light should tie in and be part of the design of the building.

"On the Paramount Building the floodlighting is arranged to light all of the setbacks above the 19th floor, and an added effect is produced by having a large amount of light contained in the glass ball surmounting the apex. A notable contrast is provided in this lighting by having stud lighting on the hands and the minute points of the large clocks on the top of the structure. In the Keith Theatre in Cleveland, it was desired to accentuate the large arched window decoration at the top of the building. In the Rialto Theatre at Joliet (as will be the case with the Press Club in Washington) floodlighting consists of lighting the large entrance niche in three colors —red, green, and blue—controlled by the operation of an automatic motor-operated dimmer, which produces a very striking effect in the semi-domical niche.



The writer is of the opinion that the light can always be so arranged as to emphasize motifs of design. Modern floodlighting has this advantage and has ceased to be a mere throwing of light on the face of a building.

May, 1929, the theatre is deserving of even more credit, because mighty few showmen then gave the short subjects any attention at all.

The "Kiddie Klub" Slant

Another slant for stimulating business through talking shorts and serials, is the formation of kiddie klubs, under various titles and ideas, tying in with some particular series or serial. Leonard Freund of the Marine theatre in Brooklyn gave us the opportunity of showing a cut of the Kids' Matinee Klub card and if you will turn back to page 1204 in the issue of April 13, 1929, you will see exactly how he handled this fine idea. Charlie Maxfield in Hartford, Conn., boosted his b.o. business to the tune of several extra hundreds per Saturday matinee via the same thought. And we could cite many more along these lines, but, surely, you, as a progressive showman should recognize the tremendous value of this one idea alone, providing you want to seriously think it over.

With very few exceptions, most theatres find that serials are fine business builders with both adults as well as children. Fashioning these "klubs" after the name of a new serial lends added interest every time. It will keep their interest keyed up constantly by the use of added slants according to the nature of the particular serial you are getting ready to shoot with. This will eliminate, to a certain extent, the danger of the idea going stale, but like everything else, a lot depends on your judgment and showmanship to make the kiddies look forward to the weekly meetings of the "klub."

Tie in Schools

You can inject community singing for fifteen minutes before the start of each "klub" matinee. You can give them little novelties every other week or two. You can give them a little entertainment on the stage, utilizing the many youngsters' talent, either in the "klub" membership or through a local dancing school arrangement. These are but bare suggestions, but surely they will hold weight with showmen who want to capitalize on b.o. returns if handled right.

And on the subject of the serial angle, we would suggest that you look at page 62 in the issue of March 29, 1930, and read the details of how F. S. Maxey, of the Arcadia theatre out in Maud, Okla., put over a marvelous business builder in a penny serial matinee. It will clearly demonstrate how effective such stuff can really be when handled in a showmanlike manner. There is no questioning the fact that Maxey handled his that way.

It is now almost history, recalling the gag engineered by Larry Goux of the Alta at Pendleton, Ore., and his Mickey Mouse Club. The story appeared in the March 22, 1930 issue on page 62. But if you think that an ordinary cartoon series cannot be turned into real cash, then you're getting into a rotten rut and should pull out of it "toot sweet." We set forth, in detail, all the dope on Larry's stunt and it would more than pay you to look back over it, especially the wording on the Membership Card which helps it along tremendously because of the parents' approval slant. Look it over. Try to work it into your own community. Cash in on an idea that has brought results and increased business in hundreds of theatres and besides created a bond of goodwill between the theatre and the adults.

A Photograph Stunt

Of course, this, like every other gag, offers many other highlights if you want to take the trouble to work them out. But here is a thought that may appeal to you: Why not secure several thousand miniature pictures of the various youngsters on the screen and use them for free distribution to the kiddies. If you can get enough of a variety you will be making the kids anxious to get the whole set. You could even work it out so that after the complete series have been distributed, the youngsters presenting the whole set would be entitled to one free admission.

You could work the same gag in connection with line cuts on cards with good copy selling the subjects, to be worked out on the various cartoon series so popular with the children. There is Mickey Mouse to start with and, of course, every other series of cartoons carries some sort of cuts that would, undoubtedly, work right in with the plan. There are so many angles to these business builders that to try and set them all before you in this way would require entirely too much time and space. Why not take these suggestions in the spirit in which they are offered? Showmen of long experience and live-wires of today are finding them all worth while. Think it over and you will find that you have much to gain and mighty little to lose.

In mentioning the Mickey Mouse gag, we don't want to pass over the great work put over by Bill Levey at the Beacon in Port Washington, L. I. Bill, as followers of the Club pages well know, is our opinion of a live-wire, and we don't mean perhaps. He has the whole doggoned town talking about the Beacon and not the least of the various reasons, is the "klub" stunt. You'll find out all about it by digging up the issue of January 11, 1930 and turning to page 94 in the Round Table Club section.

Of course, the old chestnut about leading a horse to water but not making him drink, can apply to this whole story about showmanship and shorts. But if you're alive to the possibilities of the short subject angle, then you'll "drink" and enjoy it, too. If you've decided, "I've done all there is, there 'ain't' no more to be done," then that's that.

What About These?

However, we must get back to the gist of this story before we start digging at your ribs and making you all "hot and bothered." So continuing the topic under immediate consideration, let's dwell for the moment (not a bad line for a hard boiled story) on the further possibilities of the talkie shorts. For example, you will find, just the same as in feature pictures, angles for window tie-ups, co-operative pages, merchants' displays, etc., and if you keep your showman's eye wide open, it won't be much of a task at all to get the best slant the particular picture offers and work it up to create loads of live interest. If golf is the theme or basis of the plot then go out after your sporting goods shops, men's wear—for the golf clothes display—local golf and country clubs, and right down the line wherever you feel you can work something out with such merchants or organizations.

On Educational's recent laugh-fest, "He Trumped Her Ace," many live showmen took advantage of the bridge angle and worked out bridge matinees, bridge teas, and played all of their activities up strong in their local advertising. In other words, they did not depend on just a gag to put over the idea that this comedy was unusual; they made sure that the customers would understand that point by stressing it properly all the way through.

Harmonica Contests

Another stunt which has been used by many managers to good returns, was the harmonica contest. As a matter of fact we happen to have the dope on one of these contests right before us. It should make its appearance soon. Perhaps within the next week or two. If you like the way that one sounds, okay. If you can't wait for the details and the story, just shoot us a line and we'll cheerfully accommodate you with all the information desired by return mail.

From our own viewpoint, we would certainly suggest that if, by any chance, you have been overlooking the great, money-making angles of the short subjects now being made, then you are letting some real dough get away from your theatre. Thousands of showmen all over the world can't be wrong if they found it profitable to play up the shorts as important parts of their theatre's programs, so why not look into the reasons for their so doing? If you give the matter the consideration and attention it deserves, you, too, will soon be giving your shorts the break they are entitled to and then you will find, from your own audiences' comment, that they look for the billing of shorts with almost as much interest as they do for the feature attraction.

interest in children. The motion picture plays so great a part in the development of the modern child, that no one can overlook this responsibility. By sharing the responsibility with parents, the motion picture exhibitor can give invaluable help to this phase of child welfare work. The director of public relations is the logical head for such creative help, and it is impossible to foresee the opportunities and possibilities for increasing good will and understanding, which such cooperation can mean to Fox West Coast Theatres and to the public.

With a sympathetic understanding and appreciation of the individual manager's problem, you eliminate the bugaboo of circuit management. There isn't a manager in the Fox West Coast Theatres organization but what knows that the door to my office is open to him and his problems—be these problems personal or business. The same spirit prevails with our division managers.

A spirit of co-operative good will is built through division managers meetings. The men know, and understand, their chief—they know, and like, their fellow managers—they are members of one great fraternity.

Friction! Politics? There is none. We understand each other. Our paper, "NOW," carries the message of each man to the other—all work together for their common good.

OAKLAND, Calif.—Paramount-Publix has notified tenants of buildings on Broadway, between 20th and Hobart Sts., to vacate within 30 days to make room for its new theatre.

MEDFORD, Ore.—Work on the Holly, being constructed by L. Niedermeyer, is nearing completion.

GRANGEVILLE, Ida.—The new Blue Fox was opened here with gala ceremonies.

HAMILTON, O.—C. W. and George L. Rapp, Chicago architects, have completed plans for the new Paramount here. The heating capacity will be 1,809.

FRESNO, Calif.—Plans for the construction of a new Fox theatre, with a seating capacity of between 2,500 and 3,000, are being discussed by the heads of that organization, according to Division Manager A. M. Bowles.

COLFAX, Wash.—G. A. Pehrson, Spokane architect, is preparing plans for a theatre to replace the Rose.

OSWEGO, Ore.—Mid-June will see the opening of a $50,000 theatre and roadhouse here, the plans for which are being drawn by J. W. De Young, Portland architect.

LOS ANGELES—The Wm. Simpson Construction Co. has the contract for the erection of the Pilgrimage theatre, to cost $60,000. William Lee Woolett is the architect.

WENATCHEE, Wash.—George C. Fasken, owner of the Royal at Cashmere, and Charles G. Greime, his partner in the Mission here, have completed plans for a $75,000 Wenatchee house. It will be known as the Vitaphone and have a seating capacity of 850.

NEW YORK—A new Loew's theatre, to seat 3,000, will be completed in Astoria by Thanksgiving, razing of structures on the site now being under way. The location is two blocks from Loew's Astoria Theatre.

Clarostat New Motor Control

Elimination of any trouble experienced in the starting of projectors is claimed for the Super-Power Clarostat, evolved by the engineering staff of the Clarostat Manufacturing Co. of Brooklyn to insure the slow and positive starting of the motors.

The clarostat is a giant adjustable resistor providing a wide range of resistance in several turns of its knob. Employed as a series resistance, it may be set for any satisfactory value to insure the proper starting of the motor, thus minimizing the strain on the projector and associated sound equipment.

A three-point snap switch is employed for turning the current on and off and inserting or eliminating the clarostat resistance from the motor circuit. Once the satisfactory resistance value is determined by actual test, with the particular motor to be controlled, the clarostat is left alone, maintaining that resistance setting with the certainty of a fixed resistance. Meanwhile, the 250-watt capacity of the device is claimed to be more than ample to dissipate the heat generated. Both map switch and clarostat may be mounted in an iron box, or the device itself may be mounted in a separate box.

Plan Improvements for Brookland in Richmond

Richmond—Robert C. Coulter, vice president of the Coulter chain, has been been supervising a number of improvements being made in the Brookland, Richmond's first suburban house, which was built by Charles A. Somma and his former partner, Walter J. Coulter. "Bob" Coulter has been acting manager of the Brookland since William S. McDonald, formerly of Seattle, Wash., relinquished the position of head of the house. The interior of the theatre is being beautified and renovated.

Model Theatre As a Showroom

CHICAGO—Utilizing the maximum value of a commodity through the development of by-products is said to have originated in the packing houses of the Chicago stock yards, where there is a commercial use found for every property of the commercial hog except its squeal. Petroleum refineries, collieries and numerous other branches of industry have followed the lead to such an extent that many of them now find that the market value of their by-products or incidentals exceeds that of the original commodity.

It has remained for C. H. Fulton, president of the E. E. Fulton Co. to apply the idea to theatre business. He has achieved this through the medium of an institutional theatre which, unlike others of its kind, is not satisfied with being merely a projection room for occasional picture screenings. Instead, it has become a faithful and attractive replica of the perfectly equipped and tastefully appointed theatres of the country, and in so doing it achieves for itself a further utility: that of a showroom for theatre equipment that is in no wise different from the actual theatre.

Show Window for Equipment

Fulton's Model Theatre, as this institutional showroom is known, had a conventional origin. It was designed by E. E. Fulton merely as a convenience for local exhibitors interested in previewing the latest pictures. In this respect it was no different from any other projection room. It served a single utilitarian purpose in which projection machines and a screen played the major roles and incidentals were not noteworthy. This new institutional theatre lends as much import to details as it does to essentials. It is the proving ground and demonstration room for every kind of major and minor equipment which, in any way, relates to auditorium, stage and projection room.

Plug Vending Machines

CHICAGO—Here's something new in theatre circles. The Chicago Publix-B & K. houses are using trailers to call attention to the vending machines now to be found in abundance in most of their larger houses.

The approach to this model theatre is through a corner of the Fulton salesroom set aside for the display of lobby advertising equipment and furnishings. Posters in their attractive frames are systematically arranged, and adjoining these is a comfortable lobby reproduction. Comfortable, overstuffed furniture, potted palms and other appurtenances of the modern theatre lobby are arranged about the carpeted space exactly as they would be in the Main Street theatre. And the miniature marquee over the tiny entrance completes the exterior illusion.

Inside, the decorative scheme commands first attention. The color combination is restful and subdued, and rendered more effective by a system of indirect lighting that is efficient without glare. Curtains and drapes lend a luxurious tone without being promiscuous.

Complete Theatre in Miniature

The auditorium itself is fitted with eighty-two overstuffed chairs of the latest type. They are finished in cloth which harmonizes well with the color scheme of the theatre and are models of comfort. Entrances and aisles are carpeted. The stage is fitted with a variety of scenery, and is designed with a recessed effect that brings a high grade screen into excellent view. Stage lighting, in combination with scene settings, is capable of manipulation that must offer valuable suggestions to the exhibitor who views them. There is an additional fire exit at the side rear of the auditorium, equipped with the standard "panic lock." Covered radiators supply heat, while ventilation is by a "forced-air" system which also supplies cool air for summer temperatures. Walls are acoustically treated. A modern theatre organ completes the auditorium equipment.

The projection booth is equipped with two Fulco machines and has, of course, every modern convenience necessary to the finest projection of sound and silent pictures. This model theatre is fire-proofed throughout.

The whole is, in fact as well as in fancy, a complete, up-to-date theatre. It displays and demonstrates the obvious but too often ignored truth that furnishings and equipment are as important as the picture. No visiting showman can view it without taking away with him some practical pointers to incorporate in the outfitting of his own theatre—an outfitting as important to the health of his box-office as milk is to the infant's.

House Up in 90 Days in Winter

Aberdeen, Wash.—The erection of a $200,000 theatre in 90 days, in the face of adverse weather conditions is the speed established here with the Roxy, D. Constanti's fourth house in this state, by the Standard Construction Co. of Tacoma.

The element of time was conquered by working three shifts, much of the work being done under the illumination of powerful spotlights. While the freezing of water in the excavations obviated the necessity of pumping out the liquid, cement could not be poured owing to the cold. This problem was solved, however, by heating the sand and gravel in the bunkers and spreading it as rapidly as possible for the floors.

This large area was then covered with heavy paper, leaving a space of four inches between it and the freshly-poured cement, and a steady stream of hot steam was then shot into the opening. This allowed the cement to solidify without freezing. The weather had ameliorated before the walls were put up.

Where the showman may get first hand information on equipment accessories for their theatres

View of Fulton model theatre from rear. Illustrating new trends in theatre seats and decorations

MOTION PICTURE NEWS Theatre Building and Equipment Buyers Guide, Spring Edition, will feature a presentation of recent theatre works of C. W. and Geo. L. Rapp, Architects, who have designed many of America's most distinguished and successful motion picture theatres. Articles authoritatively describing new creations in theatre design will be illustrated liberally with black-and-white and full-color reproductions of photographs and sketches. In view of the current interest in the works of this prominent architectural firm this announcement carries particular significance for all individuals associated with the building and operation of modern picture theatres. Careful preparation has been made to the end that the tenth edition of this popular and widely consulted source of information vital to the theatre industry will surpass its predecessors in utility as well as attractiveness and timely interest for the trade in general. The forthcoming issue of Buyers Guide will be published in June.

WHAT GOES ON BEHIND THE SCENES . . .

C-H "Simplicity" Dimmer Plates are supplied by leading dimmerboard manufacturers with the board they install. Fig. 1 shows the front of a typical board, Fig. 2 the rear view showing C-H plates and Fig. 3 the complete plate. Dimmer plates are the heart of any lighting control board. Make sure the C-H trade-mark is on your plates for long life, smooth lighting control and low maintenance.

THE audience sees only what goes on "out front". Few know what is going on behind the scenes. They see nothing of the elaborate organization which puts a show across—though the faultless operation of this organization is vital to the success of every show.

The same thing applies to the dimmerboard which controls the lighting effects of your theater. The board is merely "out front", behind are the dimmer plates, the real heart of your lighting control. The dimmer plates determine whether your lighting effects will be "spotty" or smooth.

Most experienced showmen use only Cutler-Hammer "Simplicity" Dimmers for their dimmerboard. C-H Dimmers insure smooth, continuous dimming —from full brilliance to black out. Each plate has contacting surfaces on both sides, permitting more circuits to be handled in a given space. Direct rack and pinion operation prevents any play or backlash.

These are a few features of Cutler-Hammer Dimmer construction which insure their famous "velvet-smooth" control of lighting effects. Thirty years of experience in theatrical lighting, in solving the problems which confront the showman have earned C-H Dimmers a permanent place on the dimmerboards of hundreds of leading theaters.

Ask your electrician or architect about C-H Dimmers. You can have them on any dimmerboard you install and they can be adapted to meet your requirements as you grow.

Convention Ends; United Artists Get Sale Edge

Chicago—With the termination of its three-day territorial sales meeting here, United Artists is the first company under the convention line and, therefore, ready to go on selling for 1930-1931.

Moguls of the organization—110 strong—convened at the Stevens to map plans for the company's new product. The gathering discussed sales possibilities in all territories represented, conditions in those territories and the problems of salesmen working in them. New product and exploitation and advertising were also discussed.

Lichtman Presides

The meeting was attended by salesmen from all territories east of Denver, and by branch sales managers, office managers and bookers. In addition, the following home office and division executives and producers' representatives were in attendance: Al Lichtman, general manager; Bruce Gallup, advertising manager; Paul Lazarus, home office sales department; Earl Dennison, in charge of prints and service depots; Harry Gold, eastern division manager; Cresson Smith, middle west division; Paul Berger, southern division; E. T. O'Leary, representing Gloria Swanson interests; Ben Fish and James Mulvey, Samuel Goldwyn representatives; E. C. Jensen, Inspiration pictures representative, and Carol Trowbridge, Pickford and Fairbanks representative.

The convention completes national sales meetings, having been preceded by a Pacific Coast conference at San Francisco on April 14. Al Lichtman presided at all sessions.

U. A. Convention Sidelights

Chicago—An elaborate dinner and entertainment for the 110 United Artists sales delegates concluded the three-day meeting at the Hotel Stevens.

Doug Fairbanks hopped off the Santa Fe Chief Monday morning and took time out to address the meeting. His remarks, along the line of the company's opportunities and future prospects, were enthusiastically greeted.

More pep was in evidence among the sales delegates at this meeting than has been elicited by any previous one, convention leaders declared. In proof of the interest and enthusiasm shown, they point out that Sunday's all-day meetings drew perfect attendance and that it was voted in the afternoon to continue the meetings Sunday evening.

"The Bad One," Dolores Del Rio's new vehicle, was screened at the United Artists theatre for the delegates.

Meetings were opened in the Stevens tower, overlooking Grant Park and the lake front. Delegates from the wheat and cattle belt exchanges were so intrigued by the view, it is rumored, that subsequent meetings had to be held in the North ballroom near the street level.

All sessions of the convention were "closed." The visitor who couldn't show a United Artists's contract signed by an exhibitor had the "exit" sign pointed out to him.

Monday morning's session was halted long enough for the assemblage to pose for a picture for Motion Picture News.

Bruce Gallup's gag at the dinner finale clicked. Everyone in attendance had been acquainted with the plot of "Bride 66," wherein a miner who is the holder of ticket No. 66 [illegible] Bruce distributed "tickets" at the dinner with the announcement that the prize would be similar to that awarded in the picture. Fifteen specially selected men in attendance were handed tickets bearing the "lucky" number—66. When the wheel stopped and the number was called out a near riot ensued.

One of the company's p. a.'s bungled an opportunity to cut some of the executives present in on the publicity attendant upon Doug Fairbank's arrival in town. The execs were left buried at a business session while Doug's train pulled in at the station and was met by five reporters and an assortment of cameras. "You're a helluva publicity man," commented one of them when apprised of the p.a.'s slip-up.

United Artists Appeal Courts' Ban on "Alibi"

Chicago—United Artists has filed its intention to appeal against the State Supreme court's action in setting aside the injunction under which "Alibi" was shown here. The court's action in invalidating the injunction makes the showing of the film illegal, and if sustained will make every exhibitor who ran the picture liable to a fine for each performance of it.

United Artists, having filed its intention to appeal the decision, has twelve days in which to file its protest, which will formally contest the State supreme court's action on the ground that the City of Chicago is without authority to censor pictures. The protest takes the form of a rehearing of United Artists' test case on the legal aspects of censorship, inasmuch as the State supreme court has previously ruled that the city is within its rights in banning a picture.

Al Lichtman's Go-Getters at Chicago Sales Meeting

The Middle West and Eastern branch managers and salesmen do an about face, to accommodate the MOTION PICTURE NEWS photographer, during the peppy United Artists sales meeting at the Windy City. With Al Lichtman at the speaker's table are: Paul Burger, Bruce Gallup and Paul Lazarus.

High and Low On Music Row

WHEN Pat Flaherty officially opened the Red Star Music Co. last week he didn't overlook a trick when it came to playing host. The guests were entertained by a number of orchestras which broadcast all afternoon over station WOR, with N. T. G. as master of ceremonies. Some of Broadway's favorites rendered songs and two Fox Movietone News trucks took pictures of the event. And, judging by the number of visitors, it looked like "All roads lead to Red Star Music Co."

Among the guests present were Winfield Sheehan, general manager and vice-president of Fox Film Corp., Ex-Gov. Al Smith, Paul Whiteman, Vincent Lopez, Warner Baxter, Marjorie White, Rudy Vallee, Will Osborne, Georgie Price, Gene Austin, Jack Osterman, Mildred Hunt and Harry Richman.

Robbins Music Corp has a great running mate to "Should I?" in "The Moon Is Low," written by Arthur Freed and Nacio Herb Brown for the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, "Montana Moon." Jack Robbins, president, is now in California where he is assisting in the spotting of songs in forthcoming M-G-M productions.

Frank Goodman, president of Handman, Kent & Goodman, publishers to Universal, has returned from Universal City, where he previewed a number of forthcoming productions preparatory to mapping out music exploitation campaigns. "For You," sung by John Boles in "Captain of the Guard," tops the catalogue and has been recorded by every mechanical company. Goodman is considering several offers from European and Australian publishers for the rights to the firm's catalogue.

Jack Mills has just published a new song, "When Vagabond Dreams Come True," written by Lou Herscher, Lew Porter and Mitchell Parish, which looks like a good bet, especially since Rudy Vallee's book, by the same name, has proved a hit. Mills is also publishing "With Pleasure," by Maceo Pinkard, writer of "Congratulations."

Shapiro-Bernstein & Co. has obtained the publishing rights to the musical numbers contained in the Pathe musical production, "Swing High." They are "There's Happiness Over the Hills," "It Must Be Love" and "Do You Think that I Could Grow on You?" Louis Bernstein, president, has returned from the coast, where he attended the banquet of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

Marvin Lee, sales manager for DeSylva, Brown & Henderson, claims that "Cottage for Sale" is one of the greatest songs ever written. After a glance at the list of best sellers we find that the buying public believes the same thing.

M. Witmark & Sons is publishing a new song, "Roses are Forget-me-nots, Reminding Me of You," by Al Hoffman, Charles O'Flynn and Will Osborne. Sam Serwer, exploitation manager for all Warner music subsidiaries, tells us that Witmark has another "Singin' in the Bathtub" in "Mysterious Mose."

And then there's "Suckers' Lament," which goes "Anyone can see I'm broke as can be, buyin' for the gal o' mine."

Competition in Seattle Keen as Pantages Opens

Seattle—Competition here will be increased in the first run field through reopening of the Pantages, which has been dark all season, with a policy of sound pictures and musical tab shows. C. N. Dunn, who operates the Capitol at Portland, is sponsoring reopening of the Pantages. The stage fare will be furnished by Al Franke and his comedy troupe, which had a 102-week run at John Danz's Sterling chain theatres a few seasons ago.

Jenkins' New Television Station Okayed by Gov't

Washington—Federal Radio Commission has approved the application filed by Jenkins Television Corp. for erection of a new television broadcasting station at Jersey City.

A construction permit to erect the station, of 250 watts, was granted with unlimited time as to operation. The permit is for visual broadcasting experiments on the 2,800 kilocycle channel, in the continental short-wave length band, since no regular visual broadcasting licenses, which embraces the field of television, are issued.

French Authorities Okay Showing with Non-Inflam

Paris—Projection booths are not necessary on premises in which Pathe Rural and Cinelux projectors, with non inflammable stock, are used, according to the Minister of the Interior, who warns that all other safety regulations, including those dealing with exits, etc., must be rigorously enforced.

Green Turns Benedict

John W. Green, composer on the musical staff at the Paramount New York studios, was married this week to Miss Carol Falk. After a reception at the Park Lane, the couple left on a honeymoon trip to White Sulphur Springs, W. Va. Green orchestrated the music for "Queen High," which has just been completed.

Robbins on Coast

Hollywood—J. J. Robbins, head of Robbins Music Corporation, M-G-M affiliation in the song publishing field, arrived last week for a brief visit with studio officials. Robbins will confer with M-G-M production executives on plans for musical numbers to be incorporated in film productions of that company for the coming season.

Meyer Returns

Hollywood—Abe Meyer, former musical director at Tiffany Studios, has returned to the coast after a few months in New York to assume the post of musical head of Rogell Productions, Ltd., at Metropolitan Studios.

Before the "Mike" In N. Y. Studios

DURING the shooting of "Animal Crackers," featuring the Four Marx Brothers, under Victor Heerman's direction at the Paramount New York studios, Groucho Marx proved himself to be the possessor of a heart, gigantic in proportions. Not wishing to show partiality, he offers marriage to two of his lady friends. Had there been more ladies on the set, he no doubt would have included them in his magnanimous offer.

Spying Maurice Chevalier talking to Arthur Cozine, Groucho invited Maurice to pose with him for some stills. The staff working on this set was entertained by some impromptu clownish antics by the pair.

Jay Gorney, who has returned from the coast, where he gathered data on musical synchronization at the Paramount studios, has been named musical advisor on "Animal Crackers."

Mort Blumenstock, director at Paramount, has completed the "Mother Goose Parade," series and is preparing to shoot another short entitled "The Mix-up," featuring the team of Raymond and Caverly, who have been vaudeville headliners for the past twenty years.

Earnest Zatorsky, monitor man at Paramount, has earned sound credit on the following productions: "The Letter" and "Jealousy" with the late Jeanne Eagels; "Hole in the Wall," with Claudette Colbert; "Nothing but the Truth," with Richard Dix; "Applause," with Helen Morgan; "Laughing Lady," with Clive Brook and Ruth Chatterton; "The Big Pond," with Maurice Chevalier and Claudette Colbert, and is now working on "Animal Crackers" with The Four Marx Brothers.

They celebrated a Field(s) day of their own at the Eastern Vitaphone studios last week when Lew Fields came over to make his second Variety, "The Duel," and the company buying a script from his son, Herbert. Incidentally, "The Duel" is an adaptation of one of Lew Fields' most successful bits from the old music rall days. Veree Teasdale, who played in "The Royal Virgin," supports Fields.

Olive Shea has become quite a familiar figure over at the Brooklyn Vitaphone studios. Her latest variety, "Boys Will Be Girls," a musical comedy of college life, is her third appearance in less than a month. In this one Olive is the only girl in the cast, which includes 27 college lads. Shea no more.

Trixie Friganza, who is such a wow in "Free and Easy," with Buster Keaton, was signed up and hurried across the Brooklyn Bridge to the Vitaphone lot, where she made "Strong and Willing." She is both.

Clifton Webb and Fred Allen re-enacted "The Still Alarm," their comedy sketch from the Broadway play, "The Little Show," for a Vitaphone variety last week, under the direction of Roy Mack. The variety included the entire personnel of the original cast.

Arthur Hurley directed Gilbert Emery's farce playlet, "Thank You, Doctor," with a cast including John Ravold, Tom Coyne, Eleanor Hicks, Edwin Jerome, Eloise Taylor and Chester Clute.

THE STUDIO SLEUTH.

They say Quaint

WHEN rag time commits sacrilege, then the purists weep or gnash their teeth.

But the word "sacrilege" is bandied about in the musical world rather too frequently at present.

The prevailing fashion of putting famous composers on the stage or writing musical comedies round the themes with which they have supplied the world, gives scope for such accusations, though not necessarily and not by any means in every instance.

So far from being a sacrilegious proceeding, this can even be an act of homage. Coupled, of course, with a keen eye to the business side of the question.

For the writers of good and attractive tunes for theatrical purposes are rare and, being rare, command enormous fees.

The Hirshes and Gershwins and Schwartzes and Irving Berlins are, whatever their claims as musicians, men who can put into a musical comedy a tune which half the world will whistle, a tune which, in itself, can go a long way toward making that piece a success. So they are very rich men.

It was obvious that, sooner or later, the idea would strike some one in the world of the theatre to utilize tunes still better than theirs which have the additional advantage of being free.

What could be simpler than going to the fountain-heads and using Schubert or Chopin or any other long-dead composer to whom checks do not have to be sent?

And why not be perfectly honest and straightforward about it, and say that the tunes are by Schubert or Chopin? Hence, "Lilac Time" and "The Damask Rose"—and the homage.

Quite legitimate move and one that I, for one, welcome, with certain reservations.

In the first place, it is good that a wealth of glorious melody should be made known to a far wider public than that which plays the piano for its own amusement and attends concert-halls.

Secondly, it is a matter of justice and decency that these melodies should bear their right labels, and that honor should be given by that wider public where honor is due, even if the composer died in poverty before our grandfathers were born.

There is no more effective way than this of checkmating the doubtful activities of the class of musical parasite (mostly resident on the other side of the Atlantic), who appropriates the tunes of the great dead, passes them off as his own, and, instead of being shamed of what he has done, is rather proud of himself as the contriver of a slick and lucrative stroke of business."—Philip Page in Evening Standard, London.

Chopping the Fakers

Washington—Reporting the results of proceedings against more than four hundred fraudulent advertisers, most of them in the drug and toilet preparation fields, the Federal Trade Commission states its recent work probably saved more than one-tenth of which it is said the public is robbed each year through false and misleading advertisements.

In filing action against fake advertisers, the Commission also calls in the publishers and advertising agencies who handle their copy.

MILLIONS of foreigners receive their first and only impressions of this country on the motion picture screen. If Hollywood were to play fast and loose with recognized American precepts, the possibilities for spreading false impressions of America would be great. For this reason, it is all the more important that the movie producers clean house.—Pontiac (Mich.) Press.

George Bernard Shaw says "The talking film will kill the theatre." The brilliant old gentleman is mistaken. Newspapers did not kill well-printed books. Talking machines did not destroy interest in grand opera, or in the singers as individuals.

SOME of the Hollywood [illegible] to foster the spirit of sacrifice in the wives of motion picture actors. Too many wives have groomed their sheiks for younger blondes out there. Take the case of one of our virile young stars who rose from the humble station of stoker, carpenter and what not to the exclusive California constellation. He had been literally starving when he got a job in a mediocre theatre as a stage hand. In his weakened condition he fainted the first day on the job and the star, as sometimes happens in story books, took him into her dressing room, fed him and for months groomed him to be an actor.

He had some good breaks in the legitimate and married his rescuer. They went to Hollywood, where the good luck came in big portions. He suddenly decided that it wasn't so good for a young actor to be thought of as a docile husband and when important people went to his house, the helpful wife would act as maid or disappear entirely. In the seasons that followed, she was always working with him, giving him the benefit of her experienced advice, managing the family finances, manipulating things so that he was always advancing. Came the time when he was made a full-fledged star and the tale should end with the wife reaping the benefit of all her sacrifices and service. But that's not the way this story ends—

The woman who gave up her own career and played godmother, wife, business manager and companion to this upstart is now the ex-wife and a younger actress is sharing the glories of success. He often wonders why the old guard in Hollywood isn't nicer to him.—N. Y. Graphic.

that — Quips Lifted and Sifted

SINCE the advent of talking pictures, costs have been increased in every department of the distributing business. It costs the distributor more to sell you film than it ever did before—and it costs him twice as much to inspect that same film—and to replace the damaged portions. This one item alone is reaching into thousands of dollars annually. Replacing torn and damaged film.

In the silent days a print was considered good for at least 40 runs. Today the average is reduced to about 22 runs. This is due directly to damaged film—damaged by some exhibitor before it came to you—and patched and the torn parts replaced before shipped to you.

Who pays for this?

The exhibitor, of course. When a torn or damaged print is replaced, the costs must be charged to some one. And that some one is you—and you—and you. Simply because the operator was careless, in a hurry or downright neglectful.

Torn and damaged prints often cause blow-ups and last minute substitutions. With a little co-operation, with the operator taking a little more care, with the handling of the film and discs a little less recklessly, every one will benefit, longevity will be added to the print and consequently costs will be reduced.

When the costs are reduced for the distributor—they are reduced for the exhibitor. A little more care and co-operation is urged for the benefit of the one who ultimately pays the freight.

That is the exhibitor. He pays the expense. —Motion Picture Journal, Dallas.

The Missing Link

Washington — Leaders representing thirty-three large industries have reported to President Hoover the fulfillment of pledges to expand building and general business activities, made earlier in the year following appointment of a committee by the President to bolster business affected by the Wall Street stock market crash.

The film industry has not made a report, although leaders in motion pictures were called upon by Hoover to join his committee.

EVERY actor, whether male or female, must have a lot of woman in him to be a successful actor. A woman's nature is more fluid than a man's and an actor's must be all fluid. He is positive one moment and negative the next. He must be not one person, but many. Thoughts and emotions must flow through him day in and day out; thoughts and emotions which are always different.

We call them temperamental, meaning that they are changeable. A real actor never has time to develop a positive nature!

A director should remember this every moment. He should treat them much as a kindly father treats a child who has not yet had time to develop his own nature. Harshness has been tabooed as a proper method of controlling children; it should be forbidden for handling our grown-up kiddies in Hollywood—the actors.

The average man does not go through the emotions in a life time that the average actor feels in one picture. Murder and death! The craving for death—for another's death. Those are common feelings in the soul of an actor. They are foreign to the every-day run of human beings.—As told by Gregory LaCava to Ruth Biery, in Screen Play Secrets Magazine.

An Eastern Exhibitors' organization is behind a movement to pass a law regulating the length of pictures. What utter nonsense! What the industry needs is less judicial interference, not more. Pictures are already too greatly standardized without imposing the additional stumbling block of a required number of reels. If such a bill were put into effect, much padding of scenes would necessarily ensue with the resultant loss of entertainment values. As this column has already stated before, some stories require more film and some less in the telling. You might as well try to pass a law stating the number of players, sets, theme songs, etc., as to try to regulate the length of film necessary to successfully portraying a certain story. It would, however, be well for the producers to consider the film length in the selection of stories.—Motion Picture Record, Seattle.

The film colony is interestedly awaiting the outcome of the controversy between Gloria Swanson and Edmund Goulding.

Mr. Goulding directed Miss Swanson in The Trespasser, which has scored such a tremendous success all over the world. The theme song of the picture, "Love," which was written by Mr. Goulding, is acknowledged to be one of the most popular ever to come from the sound studios.

Unfortunately, no provision seems to have been made to insure his individual rights to his song, so the argument has arisen over royalties and what-not. Miss Swanson claims the song to be hers, as part of her picture, while Mr. Goulding insists that the song, as a thing apart, is his and the profits from its sale should revert to him.—Screen Play Magazine.

The persistence of the kill-joy toward Sunday opening becomes frankly irritating, as well as stupid. Richmond—The Virginia State Censorship Board either likes motion pictures or likes to work. On one day the three members, Richard C. L. Moncure, Evan R. Chesterman and Mrs. Emma Speed Sampson, scrutinized 43 reels.

War Films Only Standups in Bum N. Y. Easter Week

Main stem New York exhibs are still squawking about the big Easter Week flop. The holiday period, usually a bromo for Lenten headaches, failed to stack up the big anticipated box-office returns, although the two war films on the street both turned in fairly sensational performances. "U's" new "All Quiet" run is a sell-out in its first week at the Central, and the Tiffany "Journey's End" flicker continues to stand 'em up at the Gaiety, only one short block away from the Central. The latter house had a good take at $20,575.

Warners' Hollywood took the big gravy on the upper end of Broadway, grossing $18,202 in four days, top business for the new house, the opening of which undoubtedly influenced returns at nearby stands. Several other attractions, nearing the end of long runs, tipped the scales away under par for the washup week.

Weather in town was ideal for outdoors, pleasant Spring air inviting many steady picturegoers on leg tours.

Ill-Timed Laughter

By Leonard Hall
("Photoplay")

At the Granada Cafe, in Chicago, a popular vaudeville team has been singing a new song dedicated to Rudy Vallee. It's called "I'm Just a Megaphone Lover." . . . The Roxy Theatre Hospital treated 13,000 cases last year. I hope 12,998 were broken kneecaps suffered by the end-seat hogs who won't get up to let a fellow pass. . . . George Arliss is said to be burning, in a nice British way. A fan magazine printed a reversed picture of him which put the monocle in the right eye instead of the left. . . . Loew's Capitol Theatre, in Atlanta, employs the world's tallest usher—one Henry Mullins, seven feet, six. He is also used to replace burned-out light bulbs in the dome. . . . The latest from Hollywood Boulevard: Hopeful extras stand on the corner of Vine and the Boul' as a New York ham goes by. "Look," say the local hams, "another Broadway actor trying to ritz us. See—he's got socks under his spats!" . . . Strange effect of the Hollywood climate on the human race. A middle-aged lady did solitary singing and dancing for six hours on top of the Hollywood Dam, in the hills above the town. What would a casting director be doing on the Hollywood Dam? . . . "Variety" reports that the veteran, William Collier, was acting with a whole bunch of young stars in a new talkie. They had dozens of lines—Collier had two. The director noticed that Will didn't have his part in his hand. "Where's your part, Mr. Collier?" he asked. "A moth ate it," answered the grand old man.

Arliss on Top With $5200 Take In Okla. City

Oklahoma City—There were no kicks in this town over b. o. intakes at local houses, all of which hit par or better in a week marked with excellent outdoor weather.

Arliss in "Green Goddess" finished in first place, grossing $5,200, which means a 125% rating for the Criterion. The other five attractions all clicked at 100%.

Weather: Pleasant.
Opposition: "Under a Texas Moon," Capitol; "Green Goddess" and Madam Elgin, Criterion; "Show Girl of Hollywood," Empress; "Ladies of Leisure," Liberty; "Cohens nad Kellys in Scotland," Fanchon & Marco "Ideas" (4 days), Orpheum; "Prince of Diamonds," RKO vaudeville (3 days), Orpheum.

Withdraw John McCormack Film After 3 Weeks

Los Angeles—John McCormack's "Song O' My Heart" isn't dong so well at the Chinese.

The picture will finish up this week, its third, and "Hell's Angels" has been booked as a successor, the latter switching from the original Egyptian booking.

McCormack was a keen disappointment at the box office here, despite high returns elsewhere in the country. Fox had figured the film for a four months' run at least.

Carthay is hitting highest night business in the history of the house with "All Quiet on the Western Front." "U's" German war film grossed $23,411, rating 187% in its first full week. Light matinees performances are said to be holding down the gross. Nights are sold out ten days in advance. It looks good for a minimum run of 12 weeks.

K.C. Policy Change Boosts Intake of "Calf" to $5,600

Kansas City—Business climbed back to normal this week for most of the first-run houses, and managers were once again in a good frame of mind.

The Mainstreet did slightly better than average (110%) on First National's "Other Tomorrow," enhanced by a stage show which drew in the crowds. Gross was $16,000. Midland reported average (100%) on M-G-M's "Girl Said No," which brought about $15,000. The Newman did fairly good with "Ladies Love Brutes," (Paramount) with a gross of $9,000, or 90%.

The new member of Kansas City's first-run group, the suburban Uptown, reported satisfactory business (100%) on its initial first-run picture, Fox's "Big Party." Pantages, under its new 25c policy, played to big crowds with "The Golden Calf," (Fox) taking in $5,600, or 125% in the rearranged price scale.

The one big flop of the week was "Clancy in Wall Street," which did the worst business in the history of the Royal. Receipts fell to 30%, or $1,350.

Weather: Cool and rainy.

Opposition: "Girl Said No" and vaude revue, Midland; "Other Tomorrow", five acts R.K.O. vaude, Mainstreet; "Ladies Love Brutes", Newman; "Clancy in Wall Street", Royal; "Big Party", Uptown; "Golden Calf", Pantages.

'Sarah, Son' Takes World Out of Red With $9,350

Omaha—World theatre came out of the red for the first time since Publix spotted the house with vaudeville a month ago. "Sarah and Son" (Paramount) hit a gross of $9,350 for a rating of 110%.

Bookers were wrong when they put "Green Goddess" (W. B.) at the State for three days only. It was good for a week, at least, grossing $2,750 on a 110% rating. "Those Who Dance" (W. B.), last half, dropped to $2,250 (90%).

Paramount had another mediocre week with "High Society Blues" (Fox), bringing in $9,960, 10% under par. RKO's "Framed," aided by Esther Ralston in person, helped the Orpheum get another average week.

Weather: Mostly rain.

Opposition: "Sarah and Son," five acts Publix vaude, World; "High Society Blues," Paramounts "Framed," Esther Ralston headlining five act RKO bill, Orpheum; "Green Goddess," State; "Those Who Dance," State.

That Naughty Title

Cleveland—"Her Unborn Child," distributed in this territory by W. N. Skirboll, is booked solid in West Virginia and Kentucky through June and well into July. Four prints of the picture are working all the time. The Ohio Censor Board has refused to pass it for Ohio exhibition—not because of the subject matter of the picture, nor because of its presentation, but only because of its title.

Portland Stands Go in For Sexy Stuff in Big Way

Portland, Ore.—Four frank and dramatic productions not recommended for children arrived simultaneously and vied with another for the adult dollar, with the big competition between Fox and Katz forces, Fox's Broadway took the high mark with $13,450 on a rating of 165%, with Norma Shearer's "Divorcee" pulling heavy influx of cash customers.

Lower percentages hung up by Paramount with "The Texan," featuring Gary Cooper, reaching 140% and $12,875; second week of "Rogue Song" at United Artists, $11,450, 125%; "Her Unborn Child" at "Music Box" pulled heavily with clever advertising ($10,415, 123 %). RKO Orpheum, "Second Wife" (also not for children) took $10,350, 105%.

Weather: Ideal Summer.

Opposition: "The Texan," Paramount; "Rogue Song," United Artists; "Her Unborn Child," Music Box; "Second Wife," Orpheum; "A Notorious Affair," Rialto. (Phil Lampkin and his Paramounteers helped attendance at Paramount, which has been without stage band past year.)

Baltimore Theatres Run Shows on Standard Time

Baltimore—Voluntary daylight saving plan is under way with much confusion resulting in the traffic and school regulations in the morning.

All picture houses remain on standard time but price changing hour of larger houses may be changed from 6 to 5 P. M. All theatres ran trailers telling patrons they would continue on standard time. Some advertised their time of starting in newspaper advertisements.

'Cargo's' 300% Run Startles Chicago Money Grabbers

Chicago—The little 300-seat Castle leaped into the big-money class this week with "White Cargo" (state rights), landing $10,600 (300%) in the till. This represents capacity business for the week at this house, where eleven performances of the feature are shown daily to holdout volume. The pix is in for an indefinite run as a "pink."

"Ladies of Leisure" (Columbia), in its second week at the Woods, was also sensational, taking $25,500. This figure is $4,500 above the picture's first week gross; it betters the mark established by "Party Girl" (Tiffany), the "pink" which preceded it in this house, and is within a few hundred dollars of the house record. Business at the Chicago, Monroe and Orpheum came back to normal after recent recessions. "Happy Days" (Fox) came into the Roosevelt in mid-week to the tune of standout business and appears to be set for a run. House recently has been confusing programmers with run pictures, so needs the biz.

Weather: Fair but chilly.

Singing Gives a Pain

Vancouver, B. C.—Referring to some of the music played in theatres today as "worse than a bunch of tomcats could do on a back fence," Alderman P. C. Gibbons, in the city council, has opened an attack on "canned music" and suggests that steps be taken to remedy the situation.

Alderman Miller said he thought it a matter for the customs department, inasmuch as the music comes originally from the United States.

Mayor W. H. Malkin argued that the music was released the same as motion pictures; in fact, it went with the pictures and was necessary for their successful showing.

After considerable argument, the matter was referred to Corporation Counsel George E. McCrossan, K.C., for an opinion.

Des Moines Fans Fail to Enthuse Over Tibbett

Des Moines—The generally accepted fact that a big "legit" name may be known in large key points, but still fail to draw in minor spots, seems proved again in the box office showing for "Rogue Song," Lawrence Tibbett's operetta. It caused diversity of opinion, Some felt the comedians saved the day, others that they ruined it, but there was a general satisfaction that the hero rode away to his own kingdom rather than ruining the lady's. In spite of the Drake Relay crowds, the Des Moines registered only 80% with "The Rogue Song," while "High Society" at the Orpheum with a week's run scored 160%. "The Rogue Song" was the only picture to fall below par.

Weather: Pleasant throughout.

Pip of a Week in Boston; "Ladies" Takes $36,500

Boston—Every theatre in downtown Boston showed a rapid recovery from a slump and starting with the Patriots' Day holiday April 19th, showed a decided bull condition.

Tiffany's "Journey's End" opened as a road show on Tuesday at the Tremont and did an excellent five-days' business. It is the city's second road show, something that seldom happens in Boston, yet John McCormack's "Song o' My Heart" increased its gross by better than five per cent over the previous week for its sixth week as the second other road show.

Paramount's "Ladies Love Brutes" at the Metropolitan hit the high spot with $36,500, closely followed by Metro's two films at the Loew theatres, "Montana Moon" and "Free and Easy" for $23,000 and $22,500 respectively.

"High Society Blues" at Keith's grossed $25,500 for 115%. Warners' "Mammy" at the Uptown and Olympia, back on the former day-and-date schedule, did $14,500 at the former for 125% and almost as well at the Olympia. "Honey" at the Scollay Square, for its second appearance, grossed $15,000 for 115%.

Weather: rain and cold.

Opposition: "Ladies Love Brutes," stage numbers, Paulist Metropolitan; "Montana Moon" and "Free and Easy," at Loew's State and Loew's Orpheum respectively, the latter showing five acts of vaudeville; "High Society Blues," Keith's; "Lovin' the Ladies," Keith-Albee; "Mammy," Uptown and Olympia, playing day-and-date; "Honey," for the second time in Boston, at the Scollay Square.

Hays Aid Chosen At Star Chamber Session, Charge

Several militant members are against what they feel appears to be Hays' attempt to eventually dominate and control the Academy, using Wunder as his opening wedge. They are said to have voiced their opinion that the entire history of negotiations for Wunder appears to be sponsored by Hays, and that if the inside story got out, the Academy would be immediately branded as a direct adjunct of Hays.

How Wunder Got In

The inside story of negotiations for Wunder claims that Will Hays first placed the idea with William De Mille, Academy president, during Hays' visit to the coast in February. At that time, Hays sold De Mille the idea that the Academy should have "someone who can travel about the country and meet important people in the interests of the organization." Hays assured the Academy president, it is said, that he would see that the M. P. Producers and Distributors Ass'n. would make a contribution to the Academy sufficient to cover the salary and expenses of such a representative.

After Hays had returned East, De Mille called a secret meeting of the Academy executive committee, and passed on the Hays' idea of a public relations contact man. Those present agreed it was a fine idea, and suggested De Mille search for a suitable candidate. This meeting of certain members of the executive committee is charged by others to be illegal under the Academy constitution, as several members had not been invited.

Then De Mille informed Hays by letter that the Academy was in the market for a public relations counsel, as decision had been made to launch such a department in conjunction with Academy activities. Request was made to Hays to recommend someone suitable for the post. Then it is said, Hays, through his assistant, Maurice McKenzie, obtained the recommendation of Wunder from George Eastman, although Wunder had previously been employed for free lance speaking engagements by the Hays association. This recommendation is understood to have been passed on by McKenzie to De Mille, who had several star chamber discussions with certain Academy leaders. Finally, Wunder was invited to make a trip to the coast for conferences with organization executives. He arrived about a month ago, spent three days being looked over and returned East.

Out in the Open

After round-robin talks between De Mille and those members in on the deal, the Academy president finally offered Wunder the newly created post. When things had progressed this far, De Mille, it is said, must have figured it was about time to come out in the open and explain the entire proposition to those Academy executives kept in ignorance of what had transpired. A meeting of the Academy executive committee was called, and announcement of the Wunder engagement made. Frank Woods, secretary of the organization since its inception three years ago, got his first information about the deal at the meeting. He immediately tendered his resignation, declaring with much emphasis that he would not be a party to any plot that would "sell out" the Academy to Hays or anybody else and, furthermore, that he was not in accord with secret sessions such as had been held by certain members of the executive committee. Others present who had also been kept in ignorance of the preliminary negotiations for Wunder, also voiced their dissatisfaction in plain language. One is said to have made the statement that the Academy would be branded as a tool of Hays if the inside story got out, especially since Hays had both recommended the man and had further agreed to pay his salary and expenses. The meeting finally calmed down to the point where Woods was persuaded to withdraw his resignation, and decision was made to place Wunder and his activities directly under supervision of Woods.

After the executive committee meeting, news of the entire proposition leaked out to members generally. Embarrassing questions are said to have been aimed at De Mille, who answered every one with the statement that the engagement of Wunder was no indication whatsoever that Hays had gained a wedge into Academy affairs for future domination. De Mille explained the immediate need for a representative of the association who could travel around the country to make valuable contacts for the Academy, and these contacts would pave the way for broader service of the association for the good of both the industry and members.

Keeping Tabs on Wunder

Regardless of De Mille's protestations on the Hays proposition of Academy control, influential members have decided to keep a close watch on Wunder while in the employ of the Academy. If Hays makes any attempts to dig himself into the future affairs of the Academy, he'll find out that the organization will not allow any interference from him, according to one man close to Academy affairs.

After one week of seething, the Wunder situation was finally boiled out at a meeting of the Academy board of directors. At this time, the public relations counsel was introduced to the nine members of the board present. Wunder was asked to leave the meeting, and then a storm broke. De Mille defended his actions in negotiating for Wunder, while several board members severely criticized the methods employed throughout the negotiations. Resolution was finally passed approving the employment of Wunder, but the latter was formally placed under the jurisdiction of Frank Woods, Academy secretary, with the title of public relations counsel. It is understood that the name of Hays and his reported desire to dominate the Academy created some hot discussion, with various members declaring they would not stand for any attempt to "sell out" the Academy to anyone.

'Churchman' Calls Upon Baptists to 'Unload' Milliken

Charges that the Federal Council of Churches, failing to recognize that it is itself on trial, is endeavoring to pussyfoot past the singular situation in which it was placed through the paid connection of its general secretary, Dr. C. S. Macfarland, with the M. P. P. D. A., emphasized by the presence of the Hays secretary, Carl E. Milliken as a member of its administrative committee, are made in an editorial in the current issue of The Churchman, national journal of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

"Instead of acting promptly upon the admitted facts through its regular forces," reads the editorial, "the Council has transferred the task to a special committee. The suspicion that this committee may be given to soft-pedaling is amplified by persistent efforts to soften the attitude of the religious press, including The Churchman. We note that the appeal has been heard by the esteemed Congregationalist, which begs the question in amazing fashion, counseling consideration for Dr. Macfarland, because of his former services to the Council, and quite underestimating the shame he has brought upon the Council itself, or how much its condonation of him will destroy the influence of that body.

The "Movie Menace"

"The Federal Council has in its hands a great opportunity. It can convince the country that it is no longer retained by the baleful influences that stayed its hands in dealing with movie menace. By disengaging itself from Milliken, and dismissing Macfarland, it can give evidence that it is in earnest. It can make plain that the hypocritical association, which has so long prevailed, is destroyed and thereby demonstrate to a public not without suspicion that a religious body of the first national importance is free.

"The unloading of Milliken, who arranged to pay Dr. Macfarland, rests with the Northern Baptist Convention which put him on the administration committee, and which alone can take him off. We hope that this body will have the courage and conscience to act. Dr. Macfarland is, however, entirely in the hands of the Federal Council. For it there is no excuse."

Host to Golf Star

Educational tendered a luncheon Monday to Leo Diegel, U. S. professional golf champion. Diegel, who is co-starred with Walter Hagen in the Educational-Mack Sennett talking comedy, "Match Play," sailed Wednesday, for England, where he will meet Abe Mitchell in a match for the unofficial professional championship of the world.

Lonsdale Writing

Hollywood—Frederick Lonsdale, English playwright, is at work on a Paramount picture. He will write the new co-starring vehicle for Ruth Chatterton and Clive Brook, "New Morals," which will soon go into production.

tinted glasses. Things looked pretty black for the little girl.

"Then it was that Joan showed her common sense. She pulled herself together and gave the picture everything she had. When she finished that picture, the executives were so pleased with the change in her that she was given the lead opposite John Gilbert, in "Twelve Miles Out." Joan realizes that the lesson did her good. * * *

When Hell Began to Pop

"Unfortunately not all lessons have such a salutary effect. James Murray scored a tremendous hit in 'The Crowd.' Immediately afterward he was cast for the hero in 'Rose Marie.' And then the fun began. Really, it had begun sooner, but now, in the vernacular, hell began to pop.

"Murray turned up missing a number of times. He disappeared from the set on other occasions and generally made the life of the director anything but a bed of roses. It was an open secret in Hollywood that Jimmie had never even heard of Volstead.

"Metro-Goldwyn bosses declared time after time that they were all washed up on the subject of James Murray, and that as soon as his contract expired, he would be released. In the meantime they began farming him out to other companies. He went over to Warner Brothers and scored a hit in 'The Little Wild Cat.' Metro-Goldwyn nobly took him back to its bosom, forgave him and took up his option. Jimmie promised to be a good boy and started work on another picture, but went right back to his old tricks.

"They leased him to Universal for the lead in 'The Shakedown,' and he scored a hit. M-G-M again forgave and forgot, and took up another option.

"Jimmie went to work on 'Thunder,' supporting Lon Chaney. All went well for a time—a short time. Chaney was in poor health, and there were several days when he should have been in bed instead of working. But he did not want to hold up production and forced himself to continue. On one of these occasions Jimmie suddenly disappeared from the set.

"That proved to be the straw that broke the dromedary's back. His contract expired about that time and was not renewed. He took a rest cure and cast hopeful eyes at the old lion who sits on top of the studio gates—but the lion gave no sign of recognition.

"Universal, in the meantime, mindful of the work he had done in their picture, were watching to see if his cure was permanent. Nothing untoward happening for a couple of months, they decided to give him one more chance, and cast him as the hero in 'Shanghai Lady.' Like Joan, Jimmie had learned his lesson, and he went marching through that picture like a little soldier. In fact, he soldiered so well that, before the picture was completed, he was given a five-year contract.

Knocking Brent from Her Pedestal

"Evelyn Brent, following a flock of good notices for her various portrayals, grew pretty well pleased with herself, so we are told. Wealthy aside from her picture earnings, and naturally independent, she reached the point where the only things she could be depended upon to do were those that pleased her. Warnings having no effect, Paramount executives took more drastic steps.

"She was right on the verge of stardom. Indeed, her work fully justified it. But was she starred? She was not. She was lent to Universal for a secondary role in "Broadway.' Merna Kennedy, unknown except for her work with Chaplin, in 'The Circus,' played the lead and Evelyn gave brilliant, though grudging support. She scored a hit in the picture, but her dissatisfaction with the role was evidenced by her refusal to attend the premiere. As a result of her displeasure, she made life anything but easy for the gentlemen who dealt with her at the Universal studio.

"Paramount, convinced that she needed more disciplining, took her home and gave her one of the most negligible roles they have handed out in a year, in 'Why Bring That Up?' Miss Brent woke up. You can't butt your head against a wall indefinitely without feeling it. And Paramount, sensing, probably, that she was convalescent, but not cured, gave her one more dose. They cast her as the heroine, a small role, in 'Fast Company,' in support of Jack Oakie and Skeets Gallagher, two players not nearly so well known as la Brent.

"By the time that picture was completed, Miss Brent had learned pretty much what was what, and she was finally starred in 'Darkened Rooms' and 'Slightly Scarlet.' But evidently all did not go well even then, for her option came up about that time and her contract was not renewed.

And Kitty Goes A-Fishin'

"Universal comes in for its share of trouble also. The beauteous Kathryn Crawford made her bow to Hollywood in the stage production of 'Hit the Deck,' and knocked the spectators for the well-known loop. She was signed by Universal and publicized as the find of the year. First thing we knew, Kitty was taking the publicity seriously and believing it.

"Universal, thinking to get a jump on the other studios when it came time to present the annual series of 'Miss Blank catches first trout of the season,' sent Kitty and a camera man up to the mountains for the photographs. Kitty had to have this and she had to have that sent along to insure her comfort. Arrived at her destination and away from the eagle eyes of the studio, she developed a very bad case of temperament.

"She wouldn't get up before ten o'clock and breakfast had to be served in bed. When she finally stuggled out of her tent, she mustered up energy enough to pose for twenty quick shots, and declared that enough was enough. Twenty pictures were more than they would need, anyhow, and she was going back. Moreover, she would be prostrated by the heat, in going across the desert, although she had managed to survive it on the trip up, so they would have to send her back in an airplane. Her fare was charged up against the publicity department's appropriation, and what the director of publicity said when he heard about it is not in the book of etiquette.

"Ever since she came to pictures, Nancy Carroll has had the reputation of being one of the hardest actresses to handle who ever walked across a lot. It was said that Fox did not take up its option on her because they couldn't be bothered with her. Be that as it may, she has made life far from pleasant for the people who have worked with her in the Paramount studio.

"Recently the publicity department tied up with one of the large fur companies of Los Angeles, for ads to be illustrated with a 24-sheet poster of Miss Carroll swathed in pelts. When the painting was finished what Miss Carroll had to say of it is not taught in finishing schools. Her hair was not reproduced to suit her, neither were her eyes, her complexion, nor anything else.

"Before the smoke from that battle had cleared away, she was cast to do a number with Charles Rogers, in 'Paramount on Parade.' But did she? She did not. They started rehearsing and although she had exactly as much

Stork Stuff

Amos, of Amos 'n' Andy, became the father of a baby girl last week, and no doubt he was regusted because it wasn't a boy.

"Things were finally ironed out, and work started on her starring picture, 'Honey,' with Lillian Roth playing a small role. One morning Lillian appeared on the set in an ultra-smart black-satin dress, wearing a new-style coiffure and looking like the proverbial 'million.' Nancy took one slant at her and the air started smoking and crackling while she requested executives to make Lillian don another frock and arrange her hair another way. When they turned a deaf ear, Nancy faced the assembled group and demanded, 'Who is the star of this picture anyhow?'

"Finding herself unable to have Lillian's hair redressed or her chassis reclothed, Miss Carroll took other steps. Ever since she has been in pictures Nancy has been putting on her own make-up. Lillian, being new to pictures and not having a typical camera face, has a girl to put her make-up on. Miss Carroll suddenly found herself unable to get by any longer without the assistance of a make-up girl and, oddly enough, no make-up girl in Hollywood or environs would do but the one who plies her art on Lillian.

"These studio papas don't use oil or slipper to discipline refractory children, but they have other means equally as effective, and none of the kids are too big or too old to get a dose when it's needed.

"So, if you have a problem on your hands in 'how to handle Sally,' just follow Horace Greeley's advice and send her West. You won't know the little dear when you get her back again!"

Song of the Flame

(First National—All Dialogue)

Jailed for the Dough

(Reviewed by Walter R. Greene)

WITH the Russian revolution serving as the background for a musical operetta, First National presents a gorgeous spectacle in color and music. Although there is a slight plot, sustaining interest is not secured through development of the story.

On account of its splendid music and spectacular sequences in color, "Song of the "Flame" will stand up for good business in the week run spots and succeeding bookings. Lack of story build-up, necessary in practically all filmusicals, plus absence of picture "names" of draw strength in the cast, keeps the production out of long run classification.

The launching of the Russian revolution which overthrew the Romanoff regime, provided plenty of opportunity for the Reds to vocalize. Bernice Claire carries several song numbers to particular effect, especially the oft-repeated and stirring revolutionists' song. Alexander Gray, as the aristocratic prince who falls in love with the girl, has individual and duet numbers. Noah Beery, gruff and effective "heavy," delivers a drinking song to good advantage, while Alice Gentle's fine vocal talents are limited to one number which goes over excellently. Chorus ensembles are outstanding.

The success of "Song of the Flame" on the stage was undoubtedly due to the colorful music of Arthur Hammerstein II and Otto Harbach. In picture form, the operetta secures the further advantage of sweeping action and scenes in Technicolor. These factors alone assure acceptance of "Song of the Flame" as good entertainment, regardless of its unmovable story structure.

First sequences show Anuita, stirring the peasants into revolt through her inspired song. Konstantin, a revolutionist, uses the girl to fullest advantage to ferment the uprising against the royalists. Swinging to episodes following the fall of the Romanoffs, Konstantin becomes a leader of the Reds, makes plans to secretly "get his" and jump the country.

Seeing the effects of her song through the Red rule, Anuita returns in dismay to her home in the south of Russia, where the devastation of the Red army has not yet touched. Here she falls in love with the prince of the province, amid gay scenes of the harvest.

Konstantin and a Red battalion eventually push on to the southern province to bring its people under the wing of the new regime. Arriving in the village, he recognizes Anuita, and forces her to incite the villagers into an uprising against the prince. The Red chief then makes her lead the peasants against the palace. The storming of the fortress is a particularly fine piece of direction in grouping and handling of the mob.

In return for her assistance, Konstantin allows the prince his freedom and has him escorted to the border in safety. Later, Konstantin has Anuita brought to trial for disloyalty, and she is sentenced to Siberia. The Red chieftain, now in love with the girl, has her incarcerated in a prison close by, so he can take her on his dash out of the country. Then the prince returns in search of Anuita. Natasha, knowing of Konstantin's plans to flee the country with the girl, has the Red leader exposed, and he is led to a firing squad. Surprising, but true, the prince and Anuita return to the southern province to live happily ever after as contented peasants.

Bert Roach and Inez Courtney carry the bulk of comedy to good advantage, but both are seen too briefly. Gray, Beery, Miss Claire and Alice Gentle have the main acting and singing roles, and each gets over satisfactorily. Miss Claire appears to be learning picture technique rapidly, but Gray needs plenty more picture experience to hit the big name class with audiences.

Alan Crosland took advantage of the many opportunities provided for sweeping mass action of crowds in the revolutionary scenes. He, likewise, secured the maximum in effects and gorgeous settings through the medium of technicolor. Photography was particularly clear and of high merit in the color field.

Slapstick comedy with names will assist materially to draw.

Let Us Be Gay

(M-G-M—All Talker)

Excellent Farce

(Reviewed by Walter R. Greene)

THERE is plenty of sparkle and genuine entertainment in "Let Us Be Gay." In fact, from an audience standpoint, it will be rated as one of the best talker screen farces produced to date. It is neither big in production values nor sensational in theme. It is just jammed full of human interest stuff and delightful comedy.

"Let Us Be Gay" will enhance the popularity of Norma Shearer as a big name bet. The star is excellent, and supported by a most capable cast that is well nigh perfection. Direction by Robert Z. Leonard provided a fast tempo, with interest never lagging in the 70 minutes of running time.

The picture is a screen adaptation of the play by Rachel Crothers. Aside from the opening sequence, told in serious vein, the production fairly pounds its title into the audience. There is a steady stream of chuckling and laugh situations that will thaw out the most frigid spectators. Marie Dressler, as the eccentric society matron, provides plenty of comedy, but every member of the cast is represented in the distribution of laugh situations and lines.

At the opening, the story is immediately tabbed as another conventional yarn. Norma Shearer is the devoted and plainly dressed wife of Rod La Rocque. He takes her for granted, and is playing a smarty blonde strong. The latter puts in an appearance at the home, and explains to the wife that she and Rod are that way towards each other. The sequence, fastly tempoed, fades out with Miss Shearer sending friend husband away forever.

Three years later, Marie Dressler, as erratic, scheming and rich social leader, finds her granddaughter infatuated with La Rocque, although the girl is engaged to Ray Hackett. Miss Dressler sends to town for Norma to come out—figuring the latter will take good care of Rod and pry him loose from granddaughter. Idea is planted in dialogue that the society matron got very chummy with Miss Shearer in Paris, where Norma had been successful in her conquests.

Miss Shearer joins the week-end party and agrees to do her best with the problem. After mistaking each man for her prey, Norma finally discovers her quarry is none other than her divorced husband. Her transition is a revelation to him, and she starts upbraiding him for carrying on the flirtation with the young girl. Norma finds herself an immediate hit with all the men, excepting her former husband, while Miss Dressler continually chases the males away so she can swing Norma and Rod together. At times the manipulations are the last word of finesse, while at other times she is very broad in her hints.

The girl finally discovers her grandmother's plot, and says so in front of the crowd. Norma decides to go back to town, but Marie pulls a fast one by sending for the couple's two children. When they arrive, things get rather embarrassing, especially when the kids greet their "daddy" enthusiastically. This ends the girl's romance with Rod, and she turns to her fiance. Rod makes violent love to his former wife, but she turns him down, finally going into the clinch for a quick climax.

Miss Shearer turns in a most excellent portrayal, with a supporting cast of high calibre. Marie Dressler always hits for spontaneous comedy, Hedda Hopper turns in her regulation sterling performance, and the same is true of Gilbert Emery. Tyrell Davis is perfectly cast, while Sally Eilers and Raymond Hackett are both limited footage.

Cartoon and musical shorts will round out program nicely.

Show Girl in Hollywood

(First National—All Talker)

Diverting and A-1 Exploitable

(Reviewed by Sherwin Kane)

UNTIL the back-stage musical theme has run its course, you can be thankful if all those offered you are as entertaining as is "Show Girl in Hollywood." The picture is a diverting programmer which, instead of taking you back-stage in the theatre, takes you behind the scenes in the studio, thereby affording fine exploitation angles.

The flappers nationally should respond to advertising of the "low-down on Hollywood" as revealed in this production. Crashing the studios, glimpses of pictures in the making, Hollywood streets, the homes and gathering places of the stars, a Hollywood premiere and, last but not least, the "yes" men in action in the executive offices.

They are all there, and pretty well told and pretty well photographed, with some of the sequences in color. It purports to tell the story of a show girl who stumbled into stardom, "went Hollywood" after taking her "art" and success seriously, which resulted in her being given the air. When she comes to, things are somehow squared with the producer and work on her picture is completed and given a successful premiere. Obviously, the virtues of the production lie in its authentic glimpses of Hollywood. These should be of real interest to the average audience

No particular ability is required in any role, and no one seemed inclined to exceed requirements. Ford Sterling, as the producer, gives a creditable performance. Alice White is the show girl who skyrockets both ways and finally stays up. Jack Mulhall is Jimmy Doyle, the show girl's boy friend who authors a musical comedy that flops in New York, but makes a successful picture with Alice in the lead. Blanche Sweet reappears in this as an old-time star trying to stage a come-back, with the Doyle musical as her last chance.

Opinions On Pictures

John Miljan is believable as the incompetent director.

Action maintains a good pace throughout. There is some good kidding of Hollywood's foibles and interest is pretty well sustained.

The Sea Bat

(M-G-M—All Talker)

Corking Adventure Yarn

(Reviewed by Walter R. Greene)

M-G-M shows no hesitancy in sending picture expeditions into foreign countries. Whether by good forune or deliberately, each company has come back with a corking fine piece of entertainment. Both "White Shadows in the South Seas" and "The Pagan" were made in Tahiti—quite a long trip across the Pacific. "The Sea Bat" was made nearer home—in Mazatlan, Mexico—but still a daring location for pictures on account of difficulties which were present during production.

"The Sea Bat" is unusual as a picture. Because of its novelty in the adventure line, it should rate as a topnotcher in program classification. Although it will find particular appeal among men and young folks, the women will be attracted through the romance and he-man stuff of Charles Bickford, who is rapidly getting into the matinee idol classification whether he likes it or not.

Story is laid in the Voodoo islands, an isolated outpost where sponge fisheries are the sole industry. Nina is the daughter of Antone, owner of the local industry, and in love with Carl, diver on the schooner. Juan, another diver, displays jealousy over the love affair, and unsuccessfully attempts to displace Carl in the affections of the girl.

While on a sponge hunting expedition, the two divers work in deep water. Juan deliberately fouls the air line of Carl, and when the sea bat approaches, the former escapes to the surface, but Carl's line develops a leak and he drowns before he is finally dragged into the schooner.

With her romance shattered, Nina turns to the voodoo religion of the natives, and declares she will marry the man who captures the sea bat.

Reverend Sims turns up on a tramp steamer, to become missionary in the colony. But Sims is an escaped convict masquerading as a sky pilot to escape detection. During his masquerade, Sims becomes a convert, and also swings Nina into line during development of their romance.

The pair finally decide to elope via a power boat, but Sims first has to beat up Juan, who has recognized him as the escaped convict with a price on his head. At the wharf, Juan makes an appearance with two companions and finally succeeds in knocking out Sims. Then Juan is off with his captive in the boat to collect the reward. Some miles out the monstrous sea bat appears, and Juan attempts a capture to win the hand of Nina. But the animal puts up a heavy fight after being harpooned, and carries the small boat on a wild ride over the sea. Juan's companion goes overboard, being closely followed by Juan and Sims. The latter climbs back aboard the boat as it shoots by—cuts the harpoon rope—and returns to the waiting Nina.

The water scenes and various battles with the sea monster have tremendous appeal to a high point of thrills and excitement. Story pace is tempoed fast, allowing little chance for lagging interest. The Mazatlan location gave plenty of background color for the drama, with photography especially meritorious.

The cast is particularly strong. Bickford delivers a forceful portrayal, while Raquel Torres is appealing as the island hoyden. John Miljan is most convincing in the heavy spot, while George Marion carries the comedy relief through his characterization and dialogue. Nils Asther, missing since the advent of talkers, appears but briefly, getting killed off in the early reels.

Wesley Ruggles directed in a manner that got just about every bit of drama and thrills out of the story and locale.

Here's a good bet for unusual exploitation.

Broad comedy reels will fit well with this one.

Produced and distributed by M-G-M. Story by Dorothy Yost. Screen play and dialogue by Bess Meredyth and John Howard Lawson. Directed by Wesley Ruggles. Edited by Harry Reynolds. Photographed by Ira Morgan. Length, 6,570 feet. Running time 73 minutes. Release date, June 7, 1930.

Swing High

(Pathe—All Talker)

A Showman's "Natural"

(Reviewed by Walter R. Greene)

"SWING HIGH" will be a paradise for smart and alert showmen who delight in getting an exploitation "natural." There have been so few pictures made since the advent of sound with "circusing" deliberately built into them, that this one should be comparatively easy to put over for real business.

All the glamour of a wagon circus of forty years ago bursts forth in this romantic filmusical comedy. Unlike the general run of filmusicals where the story is forced into the background for musical numbers, "Swing High" carries a continually-moving plot developed at fast tempo.

"Swing High" is undoubtedly the best box-office attraction that has come off the Pathe lot in many months. Rightly ballyhooed, it looks like a natural in extended runs at "pop" prices. The same goes for bookings all down the line, especially neighborhood locations, smaller cities and towns.

Although Pathe bills this one as containing 16 stars in the cast—theatre advertising should concentrate the circus angle without playing up the cast too strongly. Half of the sixteen are only seen in flashes, particularly Chester Conklin, Ben Turpin, Sally Starr and Nick Stuart.

Story opens with the traveling circus set up in a small town. Doc May's medicine wagon creates too much competition for the circus and Pop Garner takes over the Doc's enterprise. Fred Scott is the assistant to Doc, and goes into the circus as ticket seller and singer during Helen Twelvetrees' aerial act.

Helen falls for Scott and romantic angle is started. The girl's partner in the act leaves the show, and Bryant Washburn sends for his "sweetie" in Chicago. Dorothy Burgess arrives, very ritzy and sophisticated, and goes into the air act. Scott and Twelvetrees shortly become engaged; but the vamp gets Scott into a rather compromising spot which is caught by Twelvetrees. Her romance blasted, she goes on for the performance, but falls from the trapeze. She is left behind in a hospital, refusing to see Scott or hear his explanation.

[illegible] Washburn and Burgess [illegible] Scott, having him jailed for supposedly stealing the bank deposit of the circus. Doc and his wife, Daphne Pollard, cast suspicions on Burgess, finally bringing back Twelvetrees from the hospital. The girl figures things out, and finally [illegible] Burgess [illegible] in the theft of the funds for a rather spectacular climax, while the pair are doing their act at the top of the tent. Clinch immediately follows.

Joseph Santley, well known in stage circles but new to pictures, directed most capably and transferred plenty of color and atmosphere via a three ring circus onto the screen. The comedy was nicely spotted, with Daphne Pollard carrying off a generous portion of laughs. Stepin Fetchit was a natural as an animal hostler, and was set in two or three individual sequences.

There are also several song numbers, mostly written by Ted Snyder. One in particular, "Shoo the Hoodoo Away," provided opportunity for a negro chorus ensemble by Joe Trent's Jubilee Singers to stop the show. Execution of the number rightly rated applause. "With My Guitar" looks like another popular seller in the sheet music and record field.

Miss Twelvetrees carried the romantic end along in fine style, and Scott appeared more convincing as a singer than as an actor. Others in the cast who carried most of the story included Dorothy Burgess, Bryant Washburn, George Fawcett, John Sheehan, Daphne Pollard, and Little Billy. Each was convincing and most acceptable.

"Swing High" provides all around entertainment including romance, story, color and music. The blending has been deftly handled in direction, story and tempo for the maximum of audience interest.

Talking sketches and sound cartoons would fit here.

Ladies in Love

(Chesterfield—All Talker)

Pleasing Programmer

(Reviewed by J. P. Gottschalk)

A CLEAN and peppy comedy drama, ideal for family trade and containing sufficient of those necessary program elements which go to create favorable impressions on the box-office till in almost any type neighborhood stand.

Unlike the average independent talker, this immediately impresses with its sincerity and naturalness in handling. They don't go overboard in plugging highlight sequences, and, startling as it appears, they have staged a "party" without the aid of gin, and wild women prancing about in "teddys." It's just as effective minus the usual lineup of parlor rot, and has the added advantage of not being repulsive.

The story should not be taken too seriously. It is not a strong number, but the production crew has handled it so convincingly that one overlooks its lightness. Photography is a little spotty in parts. And the line of chatter rattled off by comedy leads, while slangy, will click with the average picturegoer.

Edgar Lewis directed. He is to be commended for intelligently building up a nice little programmer, which, with a few slips, could have easily developed into "just another one of those things." The cast was fairly well picked. Alice Day, while not over-convincing in the earlier reels, redeems herself before the plot reaches the half-way mark. Johnnie Walker, in the opposite lead, is good. They are finely supported by Freeman Wood, James Burtis, and Dorothy Gould. Marjorie ("Babe") Kane, Elinor Flynn, Mary Carr, Mary Foy and Bernie Lamont are all okay in minor parts.

Of course, no talker would be complete these days without its theme songs. In this one, Miss Day sings three numbers. "Oh, How I Love You" is a pip!

The plot: Harry King leaves his fiancee up in the backwoods of New England to try his luck in the song writing racket in New York's "Tin Pan Alley." His one ambition is to have Brenda Lascelle, the big radio personality, sing his number over the air. They meet after several unsuccessful attempts by King to crash the studio gates, and the inevitable love angle develops. King's "rainy day" sweetheart is eliminated when she is discovered to be a gold-digger.

A Notorious Affair

(First National—All Talker)

Good

(Reviewed by Robert Hage)

ALTHOUGH it may be considered too subtle and restrained by the masses who want film passion dished out to them with muscular emotions and breast-heavings, "A Notorious Affair" will appeal particularly to the discriminating patron. Intelligence has been exercised in producing it, the smooth and able direction of Lloyd Bacon being chiefly responsible for its merits.

Billie Dove may get the billing, but it is not the star's picture. The story centers about Basil Rathbone in the featured spot and he captures the footage. He is not an ideal choice for the role of a hero, for his personality is not of the type that wins sympathy, but the role is a difficult one and he handles it expertly.

Located in England and Southern France, the story has a Continental flavor, but it never gets out of bounds. Kay Francis is cast as a conscienceless man-hunter who numbers even stable boys and house servants among her prey if they possess masculine "It," but the situations are so cleverly handled by the director that they are censor-proof. Both she and the star give excellent performances. Montagu Love and Kenneth Thomson round out the cast. Splendid settings and scenic backgrounds embellish the production.

It's the old triangle again, the vampire breaking up the home of the daughter of nobility who married a penniless violinist. He achieves fame and is drawn unwillingly into her net. The wife gamely waits for him to come to his senses, repulsing the advances of an old flame the while, and wins out. Adapted from the play by Audrey and Waverly Carter, it is produced in the stage manner with effectiveness.

The feature is straight drama, so balance your program with comedy shorts.

Produced and distributed by First National. Based on play by Audrey and Waverly Carter. Directed by Lloyd Bacon. Scenario by J. Grubb Alexander. Edited by Frank Ware. Photography by Ernest Haller. Length, 6,218 feet. Running time, 69 minutes. Release date, April 13, 1930.

Around the Corner

Has Its Moments

(Reviewed by J. P. Cunningham)

NOT to be taken too seriously. Book it with your eyes on George Sidney and Charlie Murray for ad plugs. Team work of this comedy duo, while not their best, is sufficient to carry the colors through the parade of average box-office bets for neighborhoods. Sound is a great help to the leads, who use a Jewish dialect and an Irish brogue to decided advantage in another one of those East Side New York stories where Murray is the big-hearted cop and Sidney his old friend—a plot not exactly new.

Overflowing with hokum from the first shot to finis, the director depended largely upon Sidney-Murray comedy to build up entertainment value. The support is fair, and the sound job okay.

Strong shorts will help put it over.

Stampede

(State Rights—Synchronized)

Splendid

(Reviewed by J. P. Cunningham)

ONE of the most human and entertaining jungle films on the boards, entirely devoid of that "hunting big game in Africa" touch which marks most pictures shot in the wilds by camera expeditions. Its authenticity is never to be questioned, although the expert handling in numerous sequences bears all the markings of having been arranged by a Hollywood studio genius so convincingly are they presented.

"Stampede" was sponsored by British interests, who have justification for commanding a much wider distribution in America with this production than is usually accorded pictures bearing John Bull's trade-mark.

Major and Mrs. Cortland Treatt and Errol Hinds filmed the jungle spectacle. What a job! There's a trek across the desert by a wild tribe in search of "milk and honey," showing hundreds upon hundreds of natives, cattle and horses, and which is as impressive as any of its type. And the race from a flaming forest to the safety of a river's edge packs an immediate second wallop. They show wild animals of every sort and description, all used to advantage in story form and not just knocked off by a camera in search of scenic and animal oddities in far-off lands. Life of a wild tribe, with a love angle included, forms the basis for the story.

An intelligent ballyhoo will undoubtedly put it over, and you should not lose sight of a good tie-up with educational interests in your town. Every child should see it to learn of this strange race.

Lighten the bill with a cartoon and newsreel.

Produced and directed by Major and Mrs. Cortland Treatt. Distributed in Great Britain by Pro Patria Pictures, which will state right the production in this country. Length, about 7,400 ft. Running time, 1 hr. and 20 minutes.

Cast entirely composed of natives.

Co-op Buying

Minneapolis—Carrying out the co-operative buying plans of Allied States Ass'n, the Northwest exhibitor unit plans co-operative buying of all theatre equipment. A deal with National Theatre Supply Co. may be negotiated.

Theatre Supply Dealers Unite to Aid Independents

Kansas City—Affiliated Theatre Supply Dealers has been formed by supply houses in a number of key cities to strengthen the position of the independents in this field. The new association will not interfere with the business of individual members, each of whom will continue to run his own business. Clyde Badger, manager of Stebbins Theatre Equipment Co. here, is acting chairman of the new association.

More than 100 equipment manufacturers, according to Badger, have expressed favorable opinion on the new organization and its aim for unified presentation of the independent dealers' position in the equipment field. Karl Brenert, of Brenert Light Projection Co., says he feels the plan is a much needed one, that it will react to the benefit of every member and that he heartily endorses it.

Membership Listed

Members are quoted as saying that there are plenty of good products for the theatre available for distribution by independents.

List of the dealer-members of the new organization, together with the names of individual principals, is as follows:

Birmingham, Queen City Feature Service, V. Harwell; Boston, Independent Theatre Supply Co., A. M. Hosmer; Burlington, Va., H. P. Boardman Co., H. P. Boardman; Charlotte, Carolina Theatre Supply Co., J. U. McCormick; Chicago, Guercio & Barthel, James V. Barthel; Movie Supply Co., M. N. Behrend; Cincinnati, Cincinnati M. P. Co., Clarence E. Week's Shorts Contain Many Comedy Pips

Hello, Baby

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 3041-2—2 Reels)

Eye-Filling

PHOTOGRAPHED entirely in Technicolor and with Ann Pennington featured, this short is packed with entertainment and will click big with theatregoers who like revue and cabaret stuff. The setting is a flood show in a night club, with dress rehearsals going on. It is impressively mounted, has a chorus of fifty good steppers and richly costumed, and it travels at a fast pace. The dance numbers and songs are interlarded with a little dramatic story on the triangle order, with the club owner and a hoofer rivals for the favors of a dancer, but it never gets anywhere, never is taken seriously and is left hanging in the air at the finale. Ann Pennington, whose voice registers better than it ever did on the stage, will make a hit with the boys. There are four song numbers, "Hello, Baby," "Believe Me," "I've Got to Have You" and "Huddlin', but they're all routine tunes that are forgotten immediately. Director, Bryan Foy. Running time, 18 min.

This will help to put over a weak feature.

Rich Uncles

(Pathe-Talker—2 Reels)

Good, Despite Its Age

THEY used little imagination in digging up a plot for this new "Checker Comedy," falling back on the antiquated situation involving the visit of a rich uncle to the home of his newly-wedded niece.

Richard Carle as the old fogy redeems the story failings. He's a spry old duck and is sure to get a load of laughs from patrons who are satisfied with light domestic comedy. Fred Guoil directed. This will get by, but don't bank on it as heavy support. Running time, 20 minutes.

Slipped in with a newsreel, a good cartoon and a feature of dramatic type, "Rich Uncles" will just about hold up the light comedy end.

Ye Hearte Shoppe

(Photocolor-Columbia—1 Reel)

Well Done, but Dull

PRETTY color subject, well directed and acted. The color work is good, but the theme is trite and silly. An old man, running a heart shop, is about to have his mortgage foreclosed by the village skinflint. The latter suffers a heart attack, but the proprietor takes out his biggest one from stock, and the old miser is a changed man. Running time, 9 minutes.

Where short musical novelty is wanted.

Haunted Ship

(Pathe-Sound—1 Reel)

Whoopee, What a Cartoon!

EVERY house in the country should book this Aesop Fable. It stacks up with the best in cartoon comedies—and that's saying plenty. Perfectly synchronized with musical and song gags, the entire reel is just one roar of continuous laughter. Clever comedy concoction. Running time, 9 minutes.

A beaut to lighten a heavy feature.

Congrats!

In these days of clever sound cartoons, it is extremely difficult to single out any one subject having entertainment values above the usual current high average. Occasionally, however, some distributor releases a cartoon which reaches the height of comedy perfection, and Pathe's "Haunted House" unquestionably belongs to that group of a chosen few.

Made by Van Beuren for the "Aesop Fable" series, "Haunted House" embraces a clever concoction of fun synchronized with music and good singing—eight minutes chock full of hearty laughter.

If you're interested in a rare treat for your patrons, book it!

CUNNINGHAM

Land of the Sky Blue Daughters

(Darmour-RKO—2 Reels)

Pip of a Comedy

THERE are plenty of laughs in this new Darmour two-reeler which features Alberta Vaughn and Al Cooke. Although the latter is featured, the top spot should go to Lewis Sargent, who does nearly all the work, and provides the comedy. It's all about a young couple who are broke. Hubby starts home with the rent money, and passes an auction. Upon request of a girl, he bids on a chair for her. She leaves and he's stuck with the chair, finally arriving home with it, after a series of mix-ups. He finds that wifey has been dispossessed, but they laugh it off to the strains of "Funny, Dear, What Love Can Do." Running time, 22 minutes.

Good subject for bill needing comedy relief.

Voice of the Sea

(Pathe-Talker—1 Reel)

Good Entertainment

FAR superior to many of its predecessors. It is obvious that careful attention was paid to backgrounds, all of which centre about "pop" sea songs, sung by James Stanley, baritone, and Margaret Ring, contralto. Miss Ring has little to do as the wife of the old sea dog portrayed by Stanley. The latter's rendition of three pieces clicks as favorably as the convincing shots of an old sea port village. Oscar Lund directed. Music under supervision of Gene Rodemich. A good job. Running time, 10 minutes.

Novel entertainment for light feature material, especially those productions without music.

Streets of Mystery

(Pathe-Talker—1½ Reels)

Unusually Fine Stuff

SECOND in the series of "Vagabond Adventures," this subject surpasses the initial release, which was considered to be top notch entertainment. It has moments more gripping than many high spots in feature pictures.

Tom Terriss, who gathered the material on a round-the-world camera tour, found sufficient interesting situations in India to make a second subject. He reveals the deep black mysteries of the magic land, with its queer superstitions held by millions of natives. A rare treat for patrons in every class. Running time, 12 minutes.

This will go best with a feature comedy.

Handling "Unborn Child"

Philadelphia—A. Lucchese of Gold Medal Film Co. has taken over distribution of "Her Unborn Child" in Pennsylvania.

Big Flop Week In Ottawa, with "Eagles" the Low

Ottawa—There was nothing sensational in box office returns in Ottawa, and exhibitors were more or less disappointed that business did not show considerable life during the Easter school vacation and following Lenten observance.

"Honey" at the Regent, "Young Eagles" at B. F. Keith's and "Sky Hawk" at the Avalon proved to be flops, technical mistakes in "Young Eagles," from a military viewpoint, helping to spoil that air narrative. "Broadway," "Son of the Gods" and "Dynamite" were satisfactory.

Weather: Fair several days cold.

Opposition: "Son of the Gods," Centre; "Broadway," Imperial; "Dynamite," Avalon; "Light of Western Stars," Keith's; "Honey," Regent; "Sky Hawk," Avalon. "Young Eagles," Keith's.

German Exhibs to Fight Government Competition

Berlin—Decision of the city government to produce, and to operate theatres in indirect competition with regular film houses, has been the cause of an uprising in the ranks of exhibitors, who will fight the new plan.

The government contends that its film work will be strictly along educational lines, but past experience with other nearby municipalities who are doing the same thing, is said to convince theatre owners here that the city shows will make inroads on box offices.

Gift and Prize Nights Gag Goes Over Big—But

Local exhibitors who have been going in strong for gift or prize nights in order to bolster up sagging business in the neighborhoods are beginning to look around for a new gag now. The lucky-ticket-number racket was going over big while it was confined to only a few houses in widely separated neighborhoods. For a time it made an appreciable dent in business at the Loop houses and was regarded as one of the major factors in reviving business in the neighborhoods, which was undeniably on the decline in spite of sound installations. Neighborhood patrons were flocking to the house "around the corner" where in addition to sound pictures at cheaper-than-Loop prices, they might come home with anything from a radio to a certificate for a Hollywood trip.

The rub came when the gag began to be used on a city-wide scale. It was only a matter of months until practically every house in every neighborhood was staging a prize or novelty night of some kind either at the same time as its competitor, or a day in advance. The patrons are now getting wise to the wholesale scale of the thing with the result that business in many neighborhoods is sinking back to where it was six months or so ago. The explanation is that the fans have begun to keep calendars of the prize nights and now attend only when something is being given away. The rest of the week the houses are barely in the money, so the worried exhibs do little more than break even on the extra trouble and expense of a stunt night.

Publix-B. & K. made a citywide bid for the kids' trade during Spring vacation week by baiting them with free lollypops and trinkets as well as special lobby acts that included Punch and Judy shows and miniature circuses.

United Theatres Corp. Officers Being Sought

Harry M. Willard, secretary of the defunct United Theatres Corporation of this city, forfeited a $10,000 bond when he failed to appear in municipal court to answer to charges of violation of the Illinois security laws. I. F. Dersch, vice-president of the corporation, also is being sought by police, having forfeited a $5,000 bond last month.

Not So Bad

Irving Mack relates that a local exhibitor who owned a 3,000-seat theatre sold it a year ago and used the proceeds to buy up three 1,000-seat houses. The venture has proved so highly satisfactory that the exhib now desires to trade in his 60-year old wife for three 20-year old ones.

Ushers Bored by Lobby Acts in Empty Lobbies

Loop managers are beginning to scratch their scalps when lobby acts are offered them now. The lobby stuff, once considered essential to some houses, is now, for the time being at least, almost a clear loss. The reason is there have been no holdouts for weeks at any of the houses using the lobby acts. The sole audience for them at one Loop spot recently was comprised of two bored ushers and a dirty-nosed kid with a lollypop.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

A National Association of Showmen Meeting in MOTION PICTURE NEWS
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

Don't Hide!

ARE you, by any chance, one of those men who hide behind the door marked: "Manager"? If so, then take this as being written for your especial benefit.

Unquestionably, a manager must devote some time to the detail work in connection with whatever system his circuit or employers require. And such work has to be done, for the most part, in his office. He must also work out his advertising, campaigns, exploitation and other matters in the same place. But he should draw a distinct line between the hours spent in his office and the hours to be spent around the theatre proper.

Patrons like to warm up to the man running a theatre. They get a kick out of it and it creates a bond of friendship that is hard to compute in dollars and cents. That it runs into "big" money, is the opinion of the better chain executives. And they have doped it out along more than just passing fancy.

Take most any theatre where a manager is popular and respected, and you will be talking about a house that is successful. And you cannot deprive the manager of a house like that, from one iota of credit for no small measure of the theatre's standing in the community.

No matter how efficient your staff may be; even to the point where you can conscientiously leave the house for an entire day off; your presence will be the most important factor in creating so fine an organization. Every employee in your house will perform his or her duties a hundred percent better under your watchful eye.

It's the man who only makes rare and occasional appearances around the floors of his theatre that finds his ushers talking to each other instead of being on the job for which they are being paid. Or the cashier holding "open house" in and around the box office, or the doorman dozing off or pulling tickets out of the patrons' hands.

You can't avoid such things entirely, but you can minimize the chances by being on the job during the time of the day or night when the house is busy. You can give your patrons a chance to say "hello" and discuss the current or coming attractions. They like the idea, it's good for business and regardless of whether you work for a chain or an independent, it will set you right with your bosses.

Avoid that "imperialistic" title of manager between your patrons and yourself, try to cultivate their acquaintance and friendship. It will surprise you to find the many avenues to added receipts such tactics offer.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

EXPLOITATION REVIEWS!

"The Cuckoos"
Radio

Once in every so often there comes in the lives of "us" showmen a picture, so crammed full of exploitation possibilities that we just want to kill ourselves putting it over. You know what we mean. One of those "sweet" babies that just fits into any scheme of advertising and ballyhoo and gets the customers as excited about it as we are ourselves. Well, boy, here she is. And if it isn't the greatest exploitation picture in years—we'll eat our shirt, and we don't mean maybe.

Right from the word "go," you must remember, to get the best results, do everything in a crazy way. How's that for a tip? Crazy teasers, crazy ads, crazy ballyhoo, crazy displays and crazy everything. Do that, and you'll pack 'em in regardless.

Now to stop raving, here's some important meat in a nutshell: It's from the Musical Comedy "The Ramblers." Clark & McCullough were the stars in the show. Bert Wheeler & Robert Woolsey are the stars in the picture. They are a riot in every foot of the film and you are perfectly safe in shooting for the skies when you tell the customers about them. They will more than fulfill your promises and if any of the patrons squawk, then it's high time to find out what's the matter with them.

For street ballyhoo, every crazy notion that ever entered your head, even if you never dared use them in the past, will be OK for this one. A couple of "nuts" dressed to resemble Wheeler & Woolsey and pulling the craziest stuff they (or you) can think of, should give the main streets and intersections plenty to talk about for weeks after. Let them play leap-frog to the despair of all traffic rules. Let 'em get pinched if necessary. It's publicity and if you know your newspaper gang, see that the stories about their arrest refer to them as "Cuckoos." Maybe you can plant the story without the arrest.

A few autos containing some more of these cuckoos will also attract more than passing attention. Place a few of them on your marquee. Have them in the lobby. Dress your ushers that way.

Run your advertising in crazy form. Turn them sideways and upsidedown. Have them read cock-eyed. Run your teaser lines, alternating one word straight and one upsidedown. Then follow it up with lines like: "They'll turn the town upsidedown these 'Cuckoos'." Make up a trailer of all sorts of pieces of film. Run it before your regular trailer. The funnier the stuff you stick into it, the better the gag. They will get the connection when your regular hits the screen.

Turn out a series of crazy notes signed "The Cuckoos" and hand them to the patrons as they leave the theatre. Distribute them from house to house. Send them through the mails. The funnier the notes, the more the interest. Build up everything you do from that angle. That's why we are stressing it so much. Get into the spirit of the idea yourself and you'll be better able to sell the picture.

Tell them: "You'll go home and pick feathers off the cat after you see the cuckoos." "A couple of roamin' ramblers—'The Cuckoos'." "We can't help it folks, 'The Cuckoos' are coming—and how—?"

Load your lobby and foyers with cuckoo clocks (good store tie-ups too) and have them set to go off at frequent intervals. Build a large one over your entrance or in your front lobby. Bang a large gong, let the doors open and out comes a man-sized cuckoo—boy what a riot there ought to be in your town on stuff like that.

Advance teasers like this might appeal to you: "A couple of nuts are on the way." Follow it up with "The Cuckoos Are Coming—Coo-Coo—Coo-Coo." Get the idea? If you do, keep pounding the thought home until every living soul in your town will be sitting on pins and needles waiting for the opening day.

Songs? Plenty, and doggoned good too. Let your local dealers play them for you and decide which you want to plug the most. Here they are as near as we can pick them: "I Love You So Much," "Dancing the Devil Away," "All Alone Monday," "I'm A Gypsy," "Wherever You Are," "California Skies," "Goodbye" and "Oh, How We Love Our Alma Mater."

There are no stores exempt from tie-ups. Just get your nut angle into the tie-up Make sure that comedy and crazy slants predominate, both in displays and wording of your copy in windows or stores. Co-op pages should be easy and no question about them being different. It only requires a little imagination plus the help of the advertising manager of the newspaper to put it across.

Maybe a contest with your paper for the craziest story in fifty words. Offer some passes or merchandise. They are talking about a newly discovered planet. Tie that thought into your gags. Tell 'em that "The Cuckoos" have been there and back. Pick every funny gag that the paper or the town is talking about and work it into your stuff. Each day select from the paper the funniest incidents and paste them to a large board in the lobby, connecting the cuckoos with each item.

Maybe after reading all of this you will think we have gone cuckoo too. Well, you may be right at that. But we call this something to go cuckoo over. Listen, boys, we could go on raving for another hour about this picture and its exploitation possibilities, but WHY? If you can't do business with this one, plus the way you sell it to your customers, put up a to-let sign and make a garage out of your house.

"Captain of the Guard"
Universal

If your customers fall for "Million Dollar" pictures, from the advertising and exploitation standpoint, then that's your best catch line. Here is a production that has been made on a big scale, but whether you will be able to sell in an equally big scale remains to be seen and depends, largely, on your ingenuity and ability to play up whatever angles are presented by a picture of this type.

John Boles by this time, should be a fairly well-known name to your patrons, either by reason of his recent work in other pictures, or because they have heard about him from your surrounding towns and cities. Play him up because he will more than please them in this one. Remember he made quite an impression in "The Desert Song," and since then has scored nicely in other productions. Laura LaPlante may be a. b. o. star in your house; if so, don't let her play second fiddle. Give her as much play as you give Boles. The balance of the cast won't start your house on fire. Not that they are below par; on the contrary, they are O. K., but their names won't help you much.

For ballyhoo purposes your best bet should be an impressive period coach, drawn by four or more horses and with the flunkies all dolled up in costumes of the picture's background... Do your darndest to get hold of one of those coaches. You can add some good looking women inside the coach, also in proper costume. My own suggestion and warning would be to keep away from anything undignified in connection with your ballyhoos or any other part of your campaign.

Furniture stores, featuring period furniture, should fall right in line for this one, but make certain that your house gets the right kind of a break on the copy used in conjunction with such tie-ups. Jewelry stores, antique jewelry and anything else among the lines of antiques, all lend themselves to this one. A local costumer should be mighty interested in furnishing dummies dressed in gorgeous costumes for the credit card that goes with such gags. Have a display of this kind, consisting of groups of figures, in your lobby or foyer lounge rooms.

Catch lines along this thought: "See the Rise and Fall of an Empire," "Thrill to The Strains of 'La Marsellaise'." Push and plug "The Torch Song" number. It's a fine tune for plugging purposes. Try to interest all your local song shops to come in on a special page in the paper playing up the song angles. The appeal along this slant should be for the better music, not jazz or hot ditties. Play up, via your organ, radio stations, local orchestras, etc., the theme song, "For You."

Decorations lend to this one better than a circus picture. Plenty of banners, and particularly flags of America and France. Drape your front, marques, lobby and foyers. If you start your pictures off with the aid of any effects, Brenograph or otherwise, blend the colors of the two countries or use slides of their flags. Surround it with as much of this atmosphere as you possibly can. It will all help considerably.

A suggestion for house or street distribution might be the purchase of a large quantity of cheap pearls, as large as possible. Tie tags to them with copy along these lines: "Were this pearl worth a thousand dollars, it would represent but a small part of the cost to produce and bring to you "Captain of the Guard," playing at the Blank Theatre." Gags along such lines, when not overdone or used too often, generally react favorably and create interest that should coincide with your other teaser or advertising copy.

Lead up to your opening announcements with stuff like this: "The Romantic Hero of 'The Desert Song' and the lovable Magnolia of 'Show Boat' meet for the first time in 'Captain of the Guard.'"

Costume pictures, according to general reports, are doggoned hard to sell but you must admit that the market is not swamped with them; therefore you should be well able to create enough "different" stuff in selling this one, to make 'em want to know what the production is all about. Everything about the picture is BIG, so gauge your own activities along just those lines; Big-BIG- B I G. Pound that thought home, but do it in such a way that your other angles should not be lost. A good many sight of important factors in their exploitation when they hit upon some one point which happens to appeal to them for selling gags.

Since the picture IS good entertainment and as such you need not be afraid to try for anything that will bring them into the picture. They will like the story, the stars and the music. So keeping these few pointers in mind, get busy as soon as it dates in and try to make it really outstanding. You won't be sorry.

"Young Man of Manhattan"

Paramount

As a darned good story, this one has had all New York talking long before they even thought of making a picture of it. So if your community has raved about the book, you have a decided advantage, in selling this picture, right from the start.

As a newspaper story it immediately offers possibilities of local paper tie-ups. They will surely cooperate on this one because they will like it immensely themselves. Every gag that works in with such connections should be utilized for all it is worth.

Selecting some of the highlights of this production for exploitation purposes, we enumerate the following:

1. The story, by Katherine Brush.
2. Cast, Claudette Colbert, Charles Ruggles, Ginger Rogers & Norman Foster.
3. Sports: Baseball, Football, Prize Fights, Bike Races, etc.
4. Typewriters. Portable included.
5. A few good songs.
6. G. E. Refrigerators.
7. Kitchen utensils and equipment.
8. Railroad trains.

These represent just a few thoughts picked up while pounding out this little bit of "info" about the production. There may be some that we have overlooked, but with the eight we list above you should have plenty to start working on without much trouble.

Hopping back to the cast, it is well to remember that although Norman Foster plays the male lead with Miss Colbert, he is practically unknown to the screen. In New York he has scored quite a success in the stage show, "June Moon," but that will mean mighty little to you out in the spots where the play and young Foster are of no advertising value. They will certainly like him and his work, but that will be after they see the picture. You have almost the same condition with Ginger Rogers, except that she has appeared in shorts, etc., and has a name you can play around with, but as b. o.—I doubt whether she will mean anything—yet. That leaves you with Miss Colbert and Ruggles, and you will have to play them up, particularly from their previous pictures. Ruggles, especially, should be plugged as much as possible, calling attention to his fine work in whatever other pictures he played in at your theatre or in your community.

The picture lends itself to some good teaser and advertising angles due to the theme which brings out the old idea as to whether a young couple ought to keep on going out with friends after they are married. Whether they ought to be parted for weeks at a time because of the fact that they are both working—and most important of all: "What would you do if your wife earned more money than you?" In this picture the wife starts out as the better of the two in earning power, while Toby, the sports writer husband of the movie column writer, Ann, is always "intending" to write fiction and put to use his, supposedly, fine ability in other directions. Not until the story reaches a climax does he finally get around to doing any of the things he was intending to do. We tell you this much so as to give you a chance of working out possible stunts in connection with your exploitation and publicity. You might try for a two hundred word contest for the best exlanation of "The Gilded Child."

Other thoughts, at random, would be lines such as: "Cigarette me, big boy," "Learn how 'The Gilded Child' almost broke up a happy home." Stuff along this vein should provide you with excellent copy for every advertising purpose. Trailers, house ads, advance teaser ads and current advertising should play up, first—the story; second, the cast; third, the story angles. Localizing all of your campaign if it is at all possible. The writing contest, the explanation of the various catch lines, essays, sports stories, movie reviews, etc., etc., are all feasible for this picture. Work them out to suit your particular conditions and you ought to create interest and business for this picture.

Front displays ought to include cutouts of the stars, the book and good copy that will make them want to know what it is all about. Benefit shows might be possible if there are journalist organizations anywhere in your community, writing clubs, etc. Outside ballyhoo should be confined to playing up stars and story together with some good catch lines. Plenty of sports and movie tear sheets from your own local papers can be put to good use for special displays or for the ballyhoo. You have lots of angles for the female appeal, family squabbles and sweetheart gags.

"Congratulations are in order for . . . . the new section, 'Exploitation Reviews.'

"Plenty of headaches would have been spared us if this had been started long ago.

"Clippings from 'Exploitation Reviews' go into this writer's files from now on, along with the other valuable aids in the 'Managers' Round Table Club' department.

"The Ship from Shanghai"

M-G-M

The title of this one is something to conjure with, especially if you have a good imagination, plus that something called showmanship. By which you can begin to understand that we think rather well of this production from the exploitation angle.

Starting with the star angles, you have: Conrad Nagel and Louis Wolheim, supported by Kay Johnson, Carmel Myers and Holmes Herbert. Wolheim, undoubtedly, walks off with the acting honors and should, therefore, be played up as presenting one of the greatest acting roles of his career. Maybe there will be some who might question such a statement, but he DOES put over some great stuff in this picture and stands out above the others.

The atmosphere of the picture might lead you to assume that it is Chinese, but while the start of the story is laid in a Shanghai night club, the rest of the picture is on board of a sailing yacht. It is therefore advisable that you do not lay too much stress on the Chinese slant. Keep to the sea and ships in your displays, advertising, etc. Appropriate marquee stunts can certainly be used to mighty good advantage by arranging cutouts of large sailing boats, or perhaps you can promote a real large replica of such a vessel and fix it up so that (at night) it is properly, and effectively, illuminated by blue and red spots and white lights showing through the portholes, etc. This should prove unusually good and if you can create a sea-sky background by a piece of painted beaver-board, then it will become even more attractive.

"The story of a madman who ruled a ship," conveys one of the most important slants of this picture. "Coming—'The Ship From Shanghai,' crammed full of romance and danger," "The voyage of horror," "Five passengers ride the sea of despair aboard 'The Ship From Shanghai'." Such lines can be utilized and worked out to suit your own idea of how to create interest in this production. Teaser lines along the same slant can also be used. Advance boxes, starting with one column by about two inches and graduating up to your big opening announcement can be put over, with the first box showing a sailing vessel as small as possible. This should be increased in size as your campaign gets going. Add a good teaser line or two as the boxes increase in size.

Theatres located in cities and towns, where there are any waterways or seas, might even use boat ballyhoos, and if such ballyhoos can include sailing yachts, it will be all the more impressive. This suggestion is based on the thought that gags of this type will be seen by prospective theatre-goers, so treat it accordingly. Built vessels on flat trucks constitute fine street ballyhoos and if it fits into your scheme of things, work it for all it is worth.

Since the dramatic treatment of this picture is unusually heavy, its advertising should be handled accordingly. Especially since Wolheim plays so many comedy roles. Don't let them get the impression that they are going to see some sort of a story with comedy. Plug it as "a dramatic sensation," "A Storm Driven Thriller Of The Ocean," and other along such lines, so they will know what to expect and won't feel bad if they just happen to take a dislike to this film.

E. E. Whitaker Put Anniversary Over Very Successfully

E. E. Whitaker put over many stunts in connection with the theatre's third anniversary at the Publix-Carolina Theatre, Charlotte, N. C. "Sarah & Son" was the feature film attraction the first half and "Burning Up" the second half.

For one week in advance a guessing contest was conducted in the inside lobby. Merita, a local bakery, furnished the theatre with a cake weighing 501 lbs., 12 oz., and this cake created quite a bit of excitement when it came to guessing its weight. Over 12,000 estimates were placed in the ballot box. These slips were saved for a mailing list.

One thousand pieces of cake were furnished by the American Bakeries; each cake having a strip about them with copy reading, "Sample Merita cake—Baked for Carolina Anniversary." The cakes were passed out to the Monday night patrons.

Roses were also given to the ladies attending the first six o'clock show of the week. These roses had a tag attached to them giving credit to the florist with his compliments to the Carolina Anniversary.

A full-page co-operative page was sold; Firestone tires taking one-half the page. This page appeared on Wednesday afternoon and only cost the theatre six passes; the passes to be given to the lucky persons owning the automobile with the license numbers appearing in one of the three ads. This page was very neat, contained everything co-operative, a nice cut from the picture and an attractive layout.

A four-page section was sold to the merchants in the same block with the Carolina Theatre. This section was sold from the point that the Carolina had made a new business block for Charlotte. And streamers across the top played up the Third Anniversary of the Carolina Theatre and Charlotte's newest business block.

If you take the trouble to analyze Whitaker's campaign as outlined above, you will find many slants that should prove of tremendous value to every live-wire showman who claims to be and really is on the alert to inject some novelty and pep into his various exploitation and advertising campaigns. Practically all of the stunts he promoted on "Sarah and Son" and "Burning Up" can be worked out to fit any number of other pictures, providing you are willing to take the trouble to do it.

Many thanks, "E. E.," and shoot along some more stuff as soon as possible.

Membership In The Local Lions Club Aids L. O. Mumford

Located in small communities, a good many showmen have found it very profitable, both to their business and themselves to enroll in any local organizations which the town may contain. And to show you how profitable such an enrollment is, let's cite the case of Leon O. Mumford, managing director of the Roth-Strand and Lyric Theatres in Summit, N. J.

By becoming a member of the local Lions Club, Leon found that the organization was a great aid to him in selling his show and making both houses real "town institutions." In fact, we know that he thinks so much of the town that he tries to give it as many boosts as possible in all his advertising. From one of the local papers we learn that he has been accorded the honor of representing the Summit Lions at the International Convention in Denver which is being held early this summer.

Here is something that will really help, and it's a cinch that it won't hurt you to join in with your local organizations. If you are located in a community, then hook up with your patrons in this manner. Let them see that you are one of them. Not somebody who hides behind the door marked "Manager." Glancing through his local newspaper, we find that Leon receives plenty of free publicity through this source. And judging from what the paper gives him you can imagine the pull he must have with the rest of the merchants in town.

If you haven't joined your local organizations, then set out a few lines and let them know you are agreeable. It's a safe bet anyway that they will ask you to come in, since a theatre manager, if you'll pardon our taking a bow, is an asset to any community. For, haven't we stated time and again that where there's a live-wire town, you'll generally find a live-wire showman.

We want to hand Leon a little tribute for the genuine interest he takes in the affairs of his community for we know that it more than re-acts at the box-office. Good work, Leon.

C. J. Latta Sold All New Haven On Cohens And Kelleys

Here's a couple of samples of the way C. J. Latta, managing director of the Roger Sherman Theatre in New Haven, Conn., put over his campaign on "The Cohens and Kellys in Scotland."

As a starter for the campaign he made up a trick herald in the form of a card measuring 3½ by five inches and printed in green ink on white cardboard, that because of its novelty had the whole town talking. There was a line-up of numbers on the card and a note stated that the first 50 persons adding up six numbers to total twenty-one would receive tickets to witness the picture. We intend to reproduce this herald on our pages in the near future as we feel that it will be found useful to many of our members and can be worked with any picture.

We are reproducing a number of the newspaper ads he used during the campaign. The one in the middle is a contest he ran in one of the local papers whereby cash prizes were offered for the best joke submitted to the paper and published Over two thousand replies were received. The ad announcing it was free. The other photos we are showing below depict a street ballyhoo on the picture. Two boys, dressed in Scotch costume walked around the streets carrying valises which bore copy, "We have a bag full of laughs—meet us at the Roger Sherman Theatre." This gag attracted a great deal of comment, particularly as the boys stopped in the busiest centers of the town and placed the valises right where people would read the copy.

He tied-up with the New Haven Times and secured their co-operation. Two men were dispatched about the town. One was named B. U. Cohen, the other, R. U. Kelley. The front page of the newspaper announced that anyone seeing either of the men on the street, and disclosing their identity would be rewarded with ten dollars in gold. Every day during the run of the picture, Latta secured front page stories on this stunt and the house came in for a lot of publicity. In return for the courtesy shown him by the newspaper he invited all the kiddie members of the Junior Times Club, sponsored by the paper, to witness the picture.

Of course, Latta used all of his regular routine angles to boost up the picture but since we haven't the space to record them all here we have again resorted to our method of presenting only the highlights. Thanks a lot "C.J." for keeping us posted and especially do we want to thank you for that very neat campaign book and tell you that it was certainly a pleasure to work from it.

Check These Off!

If you have started to prepare for the warmer weather, then take a pencil and check off any item that you have taken care of. The others should then serve as a reminder that they are still to be done:

1—Check up on ventilating equipment.
2—Your heating plant to be put in shape for a summer of idleness.
3—Front and signs to be cleaned or relamped.
4—Arrange for greens and flowers for your lobbies and foyers.
5—Interior lighting should be changed to cool green or other appropriate colors.
6—Get your doorman and ushers into summer-looking uniforms.
7—See that your house and other advertising features "Cool and Comfortable."
8—Create some "breezy" gags for your lobby and put some cheery pep into your staff.

Don't wait until the customers favor the opposition before you get your house in summer regalia. Do it now and beat the opposish to it.

This Showman Is Always Striving For Novel Angles

With Ray S. it looks as though the city is going to witness some high powered exploitation. And just to show you that we aren't making an idle boast, here's a couple of stunts he recently engineered.

He used a number of special auto door hangers on "Officer O'Brien" which were made up in a form resembling a summons, with the copy working into the picture. He also invited the police department to be the guests of the theatre on opening night. On the picture "Second Wife," he made a tie-up with one of the largest and most established furniture stores, and procured a number of pieces of furniture which were placed in the lobby of the theatre to make a display. He also arranged a window tie-up in the furniture store and we are glad to say that since this was the first time the store had been prevailed upon to tie in with a theatre, it was certainly a feather in Ray's cap when he learned that business at the furniture store had jumped.

On a tie-up with the Grand National Bank, he arranged for the printing of a number of little books which were distributed at the bank and around the town. The back of the books bore copy which stated that if the number on it corresponded with any of the numbers posted on a bulletin board in the bank, the bearer would have one dollar credited on a new account. In addition to this offer, free tickets to the theatre were also available to holders of the numbers. The copy also carried the week's picture plug at the theatre

By using an ordinary calling card, printed with appropriate copy, he effected some excellent publicity for "Party Girl." Four girls, beautifully gowned, with masks covering their eyes, went about restaurants and hotel dining rooms handing out cards which bore copy on one side reading: "I am the 'Party Girl,' Miss Diane Hoster." And on the other side, in script type: "Meet me any afternoon or evening at the "Blank" Theatre. You won't be sorry." At night the girls distributed the cards at supper clubs and night clubs, with the stunt going over great. Incidentally, as they traveled from place to place they were transported in a sport model Willys Knight, which had a big sign on the back reading: "I'm the 'Party Girl'."

Well, Ray, from the way you seem to be covering all the angles there's no reason why you shouldn't hang up a couple of new records for big biz. So with this in mind don't keep us in the dark concerning your future work.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

YOUR PROBLEMS AND MINE!

Answering C's Problem!

C. was unable to secure the co-operation of the local newspaper and police department. Story published in March 22nd issue.

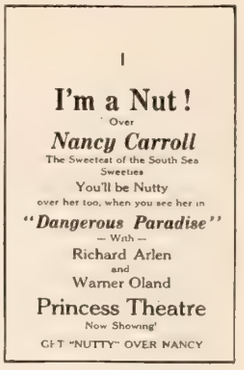
F. B. H. Says:

For three years I had the same trouble here with the police force. They refused me co-operation, ruled my ballyhoos off the streets, and forbid my posting placards. I finally got angry and did what I pleased. Sometimes I got away with it. Often I didn't. At last a new police chief was appointed.

I made him a personal visit and sold him on the asset a theatre is to any community. I told him what he meant to the community. I stressed the fact that everyone living in town should try to get people from other towns to shop and visit here. He agreed. After I had him warmed up, I brought up the matter of exploitation and pointed out its value. To drive home my point, I showed him some figures relating to the drawing power of a theatre which appears in the Motion Picture News some time ago. The figures convinced him. He agreed to co-operate.

As a measure of good-will I pointed out that it wouldn't hurt either himself or his men to drop into the theatre every so often for a little relaxation. He tried out my plan. As a result, he's in there every night for an hour or so. He also permits his men to drop in occasionally. I have worked out a call system to inform the men whenever they are wanted at headquarters. What a hit this made with the Chief. They now help me in every possible manner and I help them—even to the extent of donating a hundred bucks toward a fund the department was endeavoring to raise. That hundred will be more than paid back in good-will.

Concerning the other problem confronting C, may I state that he should use the same methods on his newspaper editor. Point out the advantages for both. Arrange tie-ups that will be of mutual benefit. Point out that by refusing to co-operate with the theatre, the paper is blocking the progress of the community. They'll listen to logic and come across. If they won't, line up the merchants and ask them to make a protest against the blocking of the community's progress.



Above all, I think C. should stick to the old saying, "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again." And, as a personal tip, since every angle in the world enters into this kind of thing, may I say that C. should delve a little into the religion of his newspaper editor and Chief of Police.

"TWO THOUSAND HEADS ARE BETTER THAN ONE!"

F. C. Croson Has A Stunt That Will Fit Any Picture

When this showman was located in Fremont, Neb., we recorded some very fine accounts of his activities. Now that F. C. Croson is managing the Princess Theatre in Sioux City, Ia., we expect to record many more, for just the reason that we know he applies showmanlike angles to all his work.

On a recent picture of Nancy Carroll, he showed how easy it was to make a gag work for any picture by using a card on the style we are reproducing. Just examine the copy and no explanation will be needed. The top of the card, where the hole is punched, bore a shelled peanut. If you are looking for a novelty herald here is one you can use. The card measured 2¾ by 4½ inches.

Among other of his activities was the printing and distributing of a number of bookmarks which were placed in the libraries. The stunt helped a lot towards putting over "Mysterious Island," since the bookmarks were attractively done and printed in orange and black. He also worked a gag similar to one used by Ellsworth Hamer, which we showed here recently, by presenting every stranger who came to the city with a card, greeting him and requesting his presence as a guest of the theatre.

Another angle he is finding useful is the kiddies' matinee club, which he inaugurated at the Princess. To secure members, he made up a circular, bearing a coupon requesting the name and address of every kiddie desiring to join. Some of the inducements the club offered is free birthday tickets, free tickets for new members and free tickets for every ten admissions. The kids took to the club immediately, and as a result Croson has jacked up his matinees many dollars above the average, besides securing the good will of the kiddies' parents.

The few accounts we have set down here are but a small part of the many things Croson uses to sell his shows, but we know that the future will bring us more. Thanks, "F.C.," we're glad to see that you are continuing the same brand of live-wire showmanship you displayed at the Fremont, and so long as you keep that up there's no need for any worry about the old b. o. doing a Steve Brodie.

Gerald Gallagher Sold Town "Honey" By Fine Exploiting

For the engagement of "Honey" at the Fort Theatre, Rock Island, Gerald Gallagher arranged a number of co-operative advertising ideas that netted him ample publicity for the motion pictures:

Two girls distributed 2,500 sacks of candy on the streets of Rock Island, two days in advance of the picture's opening, and on the opening day. The candy bags bore the theatre's printed message about the attraction and credited the confectioner supplying the sweets.

A co-operative window display using a six-sheet cut-out of Nancy Carroll was effected with the confectioner.

Three music store windows advertised the records of the song hits heard in the picture, and the picture itself.

Although this is the first contribution that we can recall from Mr. Gallagher, we have a feeling that it won't be the last, and we look forward with great interest to his future activities, and since his is a new name to the Club members and readers, we hope he will favor us with one of his own photos and a little tip on his past experiences in the show business so that we can give him a more intimate introduction on these pages.

Gift Week Proved Good Biz. Builder For Bolivar Hyde

Bolivar Hyde, Jr., put over a merchants' week that was in reality "gift" week for the patrons of the Polk Theatre, Lakeland, Fla.

Hyde secured seven prominent merchants in different lines of business to sponsor this particular week and to sponsor one night individually—giving away three prizes from their stock of merchandise.

The cost of the three night prizes cost each merchant from $20 to $25.

Each merchant displayed his three prizes in his window one week in advance with large card explaining Merchants' Week at the Polk as well as listing the attractions for the entire week.

Trailer copy was used for two weeks in advance advising the patrons of Merchants' Week and that three big prizes would be offered each night from the stage at 9 o'clock. The awarding of the prizes each night was determined by drawing the stubs from a barrel placed upon the stage.

The stunt not only meant valuable advertising to the merchants, but it proved a veritable business builder for the entire week at the Publix-Polk.

It is a good thing that Hyde passed this dope along to us, because we were starting to worry about his whereabouts. But now that we know, we shall watch each day's mail in the hope that he gets back into the active membership class, by reason of sending us the details of his various interesting campaigns.

And Now We Have A Fortune Teller In Theatre Lobby

Slightly reversing the order, Manager B. W. Bickert used a lobby stunt that sold "General Crack" in advance when playing at the Palace Theatre, Marion, O.

Instead of having the Gypsy girl in the lobby during the run of picture, Bickert found it more advantageous to have her for the four days in advance of play date.

For each pair of tickets purchased in advance for "General Crack," the Gypsy girl gave a free reading.

The Gypsy sat outside of a specially arranged tent that lent the proper atmosphere. An art card alongside of the tent carried copy reading, "Know Yourself! Your fortune told by Madame Hazelle free to the purchasers of a pair of tickets to see 'General Crack.'"

The lobby stunt derived more than the usual amount of attraction for advanced advertising.

And since this is something decidedly different from the ordinary, we recommend it to every one of our members and readers wanting to take advantage of good stunts. We happen to know that Bickert has been engineering some unusually fine stunts out there in Marion, and we are only sorry that we are not a little closer so that we could get him to shoot them in as fast as he puts them over.

Harry Browning Knows Plenty Ways To Get Publicity

That publicity man who never seems to stay still, our good friend "Tod" Browning, of the Metropolitan Theatre in Boston, Mass., again scores with us.

This time he has prompted an "air party." Through the co-operation of the Jordan Marsh Junior Aviation League, an organization sponsored by the Boston Traveler, he tied in the members of the group with his feature "Young Eagles." All members of the air club were invited to be the guests of the management at a special morning showing of the film. This group of air minded students numbers quite a large attendance and the publicity value of "Tod's" stunt can be seen in the subsequent publicity he secured in the newspapers. A large number of heralds and cards were also distributed.

During the run of the picture an attractive display was arranged in a prominent part of the theatre, which featured parts of airplanes, together with maps and charts, all of which tended to attract the gaze and make a person go over and look. This angle has been found an excellent good-will builder for the house and as much advantage as possible is taken of it. Along with the photo showing the display, we are also reproducing an example of a tie-up "Tod" made with a local drug store whereby the store, through a tooth paste company, agreed to plug Pepsodent and the picture.

To give you a little idea of the way his tie-ups are made, we are showing above three samples of "Tod's" copy and we feel that if you look at them carefully you will see how easy it is to make excellent tie-ups providing you use the old "bean." The photo shows a coffee tie-up, an electric clock tie-up and a tie-up with a tooth paste manufacturer. We want also to tell you about the spring garden show "Tod" is promoting in conjunction with the Boston Post.

All of the local florists were invited to put their products on display in the Metropolitan Lobby where the contest is to be held. Need we say that this is certainly an ace move on "Tod's" part? Just imagine your theatre, filled with the most beautiful blooms procurable in New England. And better still imagine the publicity he is going to get for the house. When the garden show is completed we will no doubt have pictures of it and a more complete idea of just how it was handled. So now we'll have to sign off on "Tod's" always welcome activities, until we hear from him again. And don't make it too long "Tod."

Conrad L. Holmes Dressed Ushers In Atmospheric Garb

Conrad L. Holmes created a lot of talk for George Arliss in "The Green Goddess," playing at the Kettler Theatre, West Palm Beach, Fla., when he had his ushers dressed in attire similar to that worn by Arliss in the picture.

In addition to the Arliss' ushers dashing here and there in rendering Publix service, Holmes also had a man on the streets dressed in a similar costume. This man passed out cards, about the size of a calling card, on which was printed, "George Arliss (Star of 'Disraeli') in 'The Green Goddess'—thrilling talking melodrama—Kettler Theatre."

The Arliss costumes caused a lot of talk and made much publicity for the public.

There has been a sort of lull in the atmospheric costumes for ushers used in connection with a picture ballyhoo, so this little incident was received at Club headquarters with a hearty welcome. Incidentally, Conrad is another new member, whose activities grace our pages, and if we can only talk him out of one of his photographs, we would like to have him "meet" the rest of the boys through a more intimate introduction.

How about it, Holmes? Gather 'round the "Round Table" and sit in with the rest of the crowd.

Most Popular Song Gag Clicked With Ashton's Patrons

H. B. Ashton cooked up an excellent idea in popularizing "Song of the West" playing at the Rex Theatre, Greeley, Colo.

On the daily radio broadcasts for one week in advance of play dates, Ashton put on a contest in the form of an organist plugging seven songs pertaining to the west.

Everybody was urged to cast their vote for their popular national song of the west; the song getting the most number of votes was declared the winning song. And all those voting for the winning song was each entitled to a ticket to see "Song of the West."

The song contest proved a very popular medium and greatly helped to publicize "Song of the West" to splendid receipts and "H. B." certainly deserves credit for adding this little gag to his campaign, which resulted in such excellent returns at the box office for this attraction. Incidentally, Ashton, is by no means a new name on the CLUB pages, having been represented here through his various activities at frequent intervals in the past.

Here's hoping he continues his fine work.

Swanke Celebrated First Anniversary Of "Talkie" Policy

Anniversary time is the one time of the year when a theatre manager, in order to put across a campaign successfully must work harder than usual. In the past it has been our great pleasure to record a number of these campaigns and we feel sure that they served to help our fellow CLUB members when the time rolled around for them to celebrate the house's birthday. But now, instead of celebrating the theatre's birthday, a live-wire manager down South decided to have a celebration in honor of the "talkies."

Arthur Swanke, manager of the Strand Theatre in Anderson, S. C., recently pulled this novel slant, which, being the first time engineered in the town met with favor. The merchants were more than eager to co-operate and came through wonderfully. A cake was donated by the local bakery, which was to be cut and served to all attending the opening matinee. Through a tie-up with a local jeweler, a beautiful wrist watch was donated to the theatre. The watch, according to the ad run by the jeweler, was awarded to the person guessing nearest correctly the theatre attendance during anniversary week.

To show you how strongly he pulls with the merchants in the town, we are reproducing a cut of the front page of the second section of the newspaper, which shows the way the dealers congratulated Swanke by running their ad along with the special section and tying in the current picture at the Strand. Though the activities we have recorded here form only a small part of the campaign they are nevertheless enough to sell the stunt completely, so you see it is almost needless for us to say that the affair went over with a bang.

We want to thank Swanke for letting us see how he put over this great angle because we feel that it is an idea of value that will be useful to many of his brother members. Let's hear from you again real soon, Arthur, so that we can pass along some more of your work.

Weiss-Perlberg Co. Puttin' On The Ritz At The Box-Office

Weiss-Perlberg & Co., of the Florida Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., tied up with a bathroom fixture company that resulted in lots of publicity for "Puttin' on the Ritz."

At their own expense, the fixture company printed 10,000 cards containing copy, "Puttin' on the Ritz"—Harry Richman, Broadway's Playboy, in his first spectacular talkie. World Premiere Theatre showing of "Color in the Bath" (display in grande foyer). They'll thrill you at the Florida beginning Monday, March 31st. Horne-Wilson, Inc."

The fixture company mailed these cards out to a preferred mailing list; enclosing them in pink-colored envelopes on which was printed in small type, "Why put on the Ritz in the living room and be commonplace in the Bath?"

The fixture company also arranged for fifty co-operative window displays in which was shown process cards carrying title of attraction, theatre and playdates, as well as running two quarter-page ads.

To top off the tie-up, the fixture company equipped the outer foyer with fixtures resembling a modern bath room in color.

A news article about the lobby display also said, "Color in the bath, stressed by the leading manufacturers of plumbing fixtures, already has impressed itself on home builders and owners of this section that during the first week of the display at the company's show rooms and the theatre lobby that half a dozen bathrooms in color were ordered."

Chalk up another good one for Weiss, Perlberg & Co. and rest assured that every time you see their name in the table of contents you can lay odds that it is going to be a good one. What about taking some of this stuff that they have so successfully used and working it into your own activities? It should certainly click for you as much as it did for those boys down in Jacksonville, Fla.

So long for the present, and remember us to the rest of the Publix boys down your way.

"The Safety Club"

With outdoor weather coming on us, or already here, we ought to make some attempt to co-operate with local organizations, police departments, etc., by forming, with their aid, Kiddie Safety Klubs for the youngsters, with the idea of keeping them from playing in the streets and exposing themselves to dangers from autos and trucks.

Stunts of this kind always react favorably to the theatre getting behind the idea and plugging via their screen, program or advertising. It also offers the possibilities to plug the lines about "Keep off crowded street," "Play in the playgrounds," "Look up and down before crossing streets," and last, but not least, "The Safety Klub Meets on All Rainy Afternoons at the Blank Theatre."

If the suggestion holds any value to you, or if you can work it out to best suit your local conditions, it may be well worth trying. Handled in the right way, you will get yourself in solid with most of the parents in your community.

Bergmann Effected An Excellent Stunt With Local Tie-Up

W. H. Bergmann, manager of the World Theatre, Kearney, Nebraska, bombarded the residents of his town with advertising matter for the William Powell picture, "The Street of Chance."

Four hundred die cut card board heralds pointed towards Kearney and were displayed on all roads leading to the city. The lobby of the theatre was decorated with 1,000 regular playing cards, and two 10-foot beaver board playing cards were mounted on the canopy. The tie-up was made with the White Eagle Oil Company whereby their six delivery trucks were bannered with copy reading, "Don't drive on 'The Street of Chance;' use White Eagle Oils." Each of their filling stations displayed a printed card with a similar announcement. A half-page cooperative spread was arranged under the caption, "Central Avenue is not a Street of Chance, but an avenue of real value."

The radio dealer bought 3,000 exchange heralds in return for an advertisement on the back of the herald. These heralds were distributed from house to house and in the theatre.

For a street ballyhoo he arranged for a sandwich board consisting of two huge playing cards. This was carried about town all day Saturday to catch the visitors in Kearney.

It has been a little while since we heard from our friend Bergmann, but we knew he was right on the job and plugging like the dickens to keep the old cash register clicking at the World Theatre.

Here's hoping that he won't keep us waiting too long for a tip on his next campaign. How about it, "W. H."? Will you come through, or will we have to keep after you?

The Contest is Over!

If you ran Columbia pictures during the month of April, then you should be represented in the Prosperity Month Contest. See that all your material is dispatched at once to Columbia Contest Judges, care of Managers' Round Table Club, 729 Seventh Ave., New York City.

The deadline for receiving all entrees is May 15th. Don't wait until it is too late, as your material may be in one, or more, of the prize-winning classes.

Watch for announcements of the winners, as well as the reason for their material being judged as outstanding enough to warrant the decisions.

"Chick"

Portable Victrolas Plugged Song Hits In Hicks' Picture

One of the many fine stunts executed by Robert E. Hicks in his campaign on "Vagabond King" playing at the Paramount Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., was a tie-up with Philco radio. They donated a radio ($265 value) to be given to the holder of the lucky number coupon of those attending one of the showings of "The Vagabond King." The stubs were deposited in a ballot box in the inner lobby alongside the model to be given away.

The drawing for the radio was made at the evening performance on the Monday following the engagement of "The Vagabond King." Although it wasn't necessary for the person to be in the audience at the time of drawing to be entitled to win the radio, this drawing, however, attracted a huge throng—all anxious to know if they or their friends had been the lucky person.

3OM roto heralds with ads on back page were given house-to-house distribution. The local dealers paid for the heralds and printing—and the theatre assumed the expense of distribution.

A little stunt that got more than ordinary attention was two girls dressed as "vagabonds" milling through the shopping district playing "Vagabond King" records on a portable victrola. This stunt was used for a week in advance of play date and greatly helped to popularize the attraction.

We have already passed along some mighty fine campaigns on "Vagabond King," which should certainly give you other fellows many leads in preparing your exploitation and advertising campaigns. Another thing that you want to keep in mind if you have already played this attraction is that you can take some of these same campaigns and switch them around to fit any other big attraction which you want to prepare for a big splash.

This One Clicked For Euring; It'll Work For You Too

It has been some time since we recorded any of the activities of Lee J. Euering, manager of the Chakeres State Theatre in Greenville, Ohio. But we are happy to report, at this time, that Lee has certainly been "stepping on the gas."

It has been some time since we recorded any of the activities of Lee J. Euering, manager of the Chakeres State Theatre in Greenville, Ohio. But we are happy to report, at this time, that Lee has certainly been "stepping on the gas."

His Chamber of Commerce in an effort to promote more business in the town, recently staged a banquet and invited over two hundred and fifty farmers from the outlying districts. The farmers had previously been a bit antagonistic towards the merchants, but this move on the part of the Chamber set things right.

Attending the banquet, Lee saw an opportunity to put in a couple of plugs for his theatre, so he invited the entire group to be his guests, later, at the show. The farmers accepted and went home that evening well pleased. In fact, they were so well pleased that the next week they brought over the graduates of the high school and the junior class, the party numbering sixty in all, and attended the theatre. After the show they went to a local restaurant and by doing so they helped Lee on the good-will angle.

A little while ago Lee put on a "Gala Movie Week" that clicked very well with the residents of the town. He decorated his lobby with confetti, balloons, etc., and everything that could possibly be used was called into play to plug the week. We'd like to tell you about a little stunt he used that went over big.

He made up a trailer containing fifteen caricatures of stars. The drawings were numbered from one to fifteen. As each patron entered the theatre he was presented with a form, of the type we are showing. The gag was to guess the star and name a recent picture in which he or she appeared. As an award he offered a six months' pass, a three months' pass, and a dozen double passes. The total cost of this contest was very small considering the valuable good-will and publicity received. The pencils were promoted from a local wholesale house, so all that Lee paid for was the trailer and the cost of printing the "Guess Who" forms.

If there's a spot somewhere in your compaign that needs bolstering up, it wouldn't hurt at all to try an angle of this sort. It might even be possible to have your newspaper publish the forms, a week in advance of the contest, and in that way you'd derive a lot of valuable publicity besides the good-will of the paper. But then that's up to you. We don't know local conditions and we must publish accounts just the way they are handled, and we think Lee sure put his gag over fine, as there's no doubt but that by tying it in with "Gala Movie Week" it was a great help.

Thanks, Lee; we're very glad to see that you are still displaying the mighty fine showmanship you are capable of and we want you to know that we're more than happy to pass along to the rest of the Club all of your live-wire work.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Stearn & Robinson Still Displaying Fine Showmanship

We could probably label the heading on this story, "A Study in Showmanship," for it certainly is a "lulu" of an account of the way Harry D. Stearn, manager-director for the Wilmer and Vincent interests, and S. G. Fleet Robinson, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Reading, Pa., merchandise their attractions.

Their work has been so wide and varied, including so many pictures that we have decided to present the highlights from each film they went to work on and before we start we would like to state that you, too, can accomplish what Mr. Stearn and Mr. Robinson have done by not holding to the idea that every stunt will work only for that especial picture. Take advantage of this angle and profit by it.

One of their first steps opening the Reading Campaign was to erect a twenty-four sheet on the roof of the theatre. From the roof to the marquee banners were strung announcing the picture. Under the marquee a huge electric sign was erected. The sign measured thirty feet in length and from thirty-six to forty-eight inches in height, and was made up of beaverboard, braced in back with a strip of batten board. Cut-out letters painted plain, or sprinkled with metallics, were used. An arrangement of this sort permitted the use of any number of lights and colors, and the work created a lot of comment and aroused more than just a passing interest in the theatre's attraction.

Through an agreement with a number of music dealers, standing tie-ups were arranged for all the theme songs in the productions playing the house, with the local orchestras also co-operating. A novel gag was used in the music stores. This consisted of a miniature twenty-four sheet and frame in which space was left for the title of the picture, songs and stills to be placed. The baby twenty-four was electrically lighted. Cut-outs and one-sheets were also furnished the dealers for their windows. Through a tie-up with the local radio station, the broadcasting company passed out popular music, furnished by the theatre, to all orchestras broadcasting, and in return the orchestras announced the name of the picture and theatre.

On every show playing the house, an atmospheric effect is achieved, with the ushers being uniformed according to the locale of the picture or type of plot. On "Rio Rita" and "Delightful Rogue," Spanish costumes were used. On the "Isle of Lost Ships" and "Hit the Deck" sailor suits were the vogue. Another angle used on the picture, and one that to date is still causing considerable comment is the little gifts which are distributed to patrons.

For the "Vagabond Lover" pictures of Vallee were presented to the ladies. On "The Isle of Lost Ships" the boys were presented with miniature models of ships. The gag used on "Painted Angel" was excellent with girls being given a mirror. "Cameo Kirby" was the means for the distribution of lucky pennies to everybody. The boys, on "Delightful Rogue," were presented with masks, and on "The Sky Hawk" with glider airplanes. As an institutional plug, a telephone diary was passed out to everybody entering the theatre. The front page of the booklet contained advertising relating to the Capitol and State Theatres.

The photos we are running in conjunction with this article will give you an idea of the effectiveness of the cut-out letters which are used under the marquee. Incidentally, we want to tell you about a photo we were unable to reproduce, since it was too dark to "take." This photo showed a searchlight, erected in front of the theatre, through the courtesy of the local anti-aircraft battery. The light was used to pick up planes at night and contained thirty billion and a half candle power, being visible for a distance of twenty-five miles. When this light was turned on at the opening of "The Sky Hawk," many people were so surprised that they called up the newspaper office to inquire its purpose. This stunt certainly let the theatre in for a lot of publicity

Another novel gag that secured both publicity and good will was engineered by Stearn who made arrangements with some of the foremost pre-eminent artists for the display of various prize winners, done in oil. The display was shown on the mezzanine floor of the theatre and consisted of seventy-five of the best oil paintings obtainable in the country. In fact, the original "Golden Arco" that graced the front page of the Literary Digest during the week of March 3rd was represented, besides numerous prize winners from the Sesqui-Centennial and various Eastern art exhibits. Here is an angle worth considering and seeing that Stearn thinks so much of it he is going to work it again, it will pay to follow it further.

Before closing this article we'd like to say a few words about the excellent newspaper advertising turned out by these two live-wire showmen. It is very impressive work and ranks with some of the best we have seen. We are in receipt of a number of ads but lack of space hinders us from using them at this time. However, we are sure that in the near future we will be able to let you look them over, and by then we'll probably have a couple of more new angles to present since these live-wires never seem to stay still for long.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

INTRODUCING THE JERSEY DIVISION OF FOX METROPOLITAN PLAYHOUSES!

100% Showmen—100% Round Table

THE CHIEF

MORRIS KUTINSKY. Division Manager for the entire Jersey Unit and a showman with a wide and varied career which more than qualifies him for the important post he now occupies. Mr. Kutinsky built up a large and successful circuit of his own prior to joining the Fox organization and this accounts, in no small way, for his ability to understand the average manager's problems as well as the happiest way to deal with every situation which may arise. As an executive and a leader of men in the show business, Mr. Kutinsky rates among the best of them.

SECOND-IN-COMMAND

HAL SHERIDAN. District Supervisor of the Jersey Division and a fit "second-in-command" to Mr. Kutinsky. "Hal" happens to be one of those real, honest-to-goodness supervisors with a knack of making the "gang" work to keep the division right up among the leaders. There must be something to his methods when every manager on the circuit always has a smile and kind word when they talk about him.

Show us a division with a group of managers and executives working in perfect harmony and we'll place odds that such a division is up on the top most of the time.

Such is our own candid opinion of the Jersey Division introduced one hundred per cent on these two pages.

From the Division Manager, right down to the reel boy, this entire unit functions as only a perfect machine, with each and every part properly geared, can function.

Our hats are off to this peppy group and we predict many advancements for most of these boys. They know their stuff and they are doing things that would put far older outfits to shame.

"Chick"

PUBLICITY and EXPLOITATION

JACK HOBBY. Was promoted from the ranks to his present post as Director of Publicity for the division, and, considering the fact that he has gone through all the ropes involving theatre management, he is well equipped to handle this job. And he's doing it, too.

SPENCER SLADIN. With more years in the show business to his credit than he may be willing to admit. As Director of Exploitation, he makes a perfect teammate for Hobby, and they are certainly doing great things over there.

THE MANAGERS

CHARLES MANN is the manager of the Pascack Theatre in Westwood, N. J. A showman of vision with the ability and experience to engineer and successfully execute some marvelous stunts that are working wonders for his theatre

J. NELSON BRYANT has his hands full managing the Cameo Theatre in Jersey City, but despite various handicaps, etc., he is succeeding in keeping that house where his superiors want it. Keep up the good work Bryant.

E. U. CADUGAN heads the Rialto Theatre in Jersey City and finds plenty to do with that house. Unless somebody has been kidding us, Cadugan has been responsible for some fine work in the Rialto. What do YOU say yourself?

A. J. SHELDON, is another man of wide experience and is now busy managing the Queen Ann Theatre in Bogota, N. J. When we solicited some information about him, we received the following answer: "Sheldon is a real showman." Nuff sed!

WILLIAM W. MADDEN handles the Capitol Theatre in Jersey City, and possesses all the necessary qualifications for that job. He reached his present post after many years of plugging on various angles of the show-game.

DAN E. LEE manages the Brook Theatre out in Bound Brook, N. J., and we doubt whether anybody in the film business, around the Metropolitan area, can honestly say that they do not know, and like, Lee.

M. NEARY, manager of the Tivoli Theatre in Jersey City, and a hustling go-getter when it comes to boosting business and his theatre. Here is another showman whom everyone has a kind word for. Who else can claim that distinction?

FRED SCHROEDER finds plenty to do in looking after the Plaza Theatre in Engelwood, N. J., but perhaps one of his most outstanding achievements, is his ability to win his way with the local organizations as well as the patrons of his house.

JOHN DUNNE is the manager of the Apollo Theatre in Jersey City and if you can get him in the proper mood he can relate some mighty interesting experiences covering many years of activity in the show world.

CHARLES LITT keeps himself occupied running the Leonia Theatre in Leonia, N. J., and from all reports and indications he is doing a fine job of it too. Seems to us that his various activities ought to be on the Club pages.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Organs and Organists!

Just because we stopped referring to the fact that you should use your organ as long as its in the house and cost so much to purchase, is no reason why you should get the impression that the suggestion was not favorably received.

In glancing through some fifty odd letters, before filing, we find that over a dozen showmen thought enough of our suggestion to not only put it to good use, but to make it a regular feature of their programs.

Why not dust off the console and try a good organist for a few weeks, giving him, or her, a good send-off via peppy advertising. Maybe even you will be surprised to find that the patrons like it. We're not asking you to go out and buy yourself an organ. If you have one, don't let it rot away. Use it and make it pay for its keep and the organist you use.

Free Coffee Added To M. Rosenthal's ShowMerchandisin

Here he is again. And we are bringing Morris Rosenthal, manager of the Lyceum Theatre in Duluth, Minn., back to the front because of his little lobby stunt that is causing a great deal of comment out in the wild and wooly west.

Morris's gag was a coffee serving service, which he made possible through a tie-up with a local coffee manufacturer. Patrons entering or leaving the theatre were treated to a cup of coffee, with no cost to the house other than a credit sign for the manufacturer in the lobby.

By looking at the photo closely you may be able to discern a healthy looking, smiling gentleman, arrayed in a "tookseedo," The gentleman is none other than Morris himself, who believes in showing how good the coffee is. Even he drinks it.

All kidding aside though, he received a lot of very valuable publicity through this tie-up. The coffee people paid for the girl who distributed the cups of coffee, and also gave him a break in over a hundred local stores that featured the product. In addition to this they plugged the theatre's attractions over their radio hour.

The gag did a lot to further the good-will which forms so important a part of any house. And knowing Morris and his eye towards business we can only say, Oak. And wait for more news of record breaking.

P. S.—Love to Mollie and the "Babies"?

Hostler's Ability As An Artist Is Again On Display

Another showman who is quite handy with the brush is Alvin Hostler, manager of the Strand Theatre in Altoona, Pa.

Alvin's capabilities as an artist have drawn lots of comment from the patrons and so now we are reproducing a photo of one of his fronts so that you can obtain a first hand view of his work. The large banner in the foreground, which was strung across the front of the theatre was made of pink sateen with black cut-out letters. The letters were outlined in various shades of metallics. The two beautiful figures of Marilyn Miller were made from cut-outs, and were also attractively dressed in sateen, studded with metallics.

In the regular frames, one and three sheet panels were placed, while the front of the theatre was devoted to a display of three and six sheet cut-outs, which were mounted against attractive backgrounds. The entire display was very well done and no doubt did a lot towards selling the picture to the town.

A good many managers we have found are able to wield paint brushes with the dexterity of finished commercial artists and we must say that Alvin is right up in front when it comes to turning out work that will sell, and we want him to know that we are very glad to pass along these other phases of his showmanship so that the rest of the Club may see what he is doing.

Here We Present More Accounts Of ClydeWinan'swork

"Color Is King In Peoria!" Such was the caption of a full page cooperative newspaper ad in colors, used by Clyde Winans, city manager, in connection with the Palace Theatre's showing of "The Vagabond King."

The Peoria Transcript has a week-end special edition which includes a special color supplement of syndicated feature material. The entire eight page section is in color and only the back page remains for advertising, which is more often in one color, since it needs must be printed by the paper itself with no color equipment. Winans remembered that color was one of the big talking points for "The Vagabond King" and sought to tie-up with the paper.

The result was that the paper conceded the space to him providing he could sell the space. The special requirement that Winans had in mind was multi-color printing, however.

Accordingly, he arranged with paint dealers, "Yellow" taxi companies and others to "ride along" with him on a full page multi-color advertisement. Excellent cooperation was received and as a reward for his aggressiveness, the newspaper gave the Palace their space gratis, and in addition paid for the special printing job itself. Let's hear some more from you. We always get a kick out of your stunts.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Plenty of B. O. Hope In O. Accorsini's Hope Chest Stunt

Whenever he starts out to sell an attraction you can bet that Olinto Accorsini, manager of the Academy and Isis Theatres in Lynchburg, Va., tackles it from every possible angle.

We are showing below a corking window display he conceived and executed for the showing of "Honey." By examining the photo closely you can notice the many highlights of the layout. He used a beautiful cut-out of Nancy Carroll, the star of the film, that worked in well with the display, since the pose she uses is ideally adapted for it.

The window was secured from one of the leading furniture stores in town and it's a safe prediction to state that they too were benefited by the tie-up. On the cover of the hope chest he used a still of Nancy Carroll which blended well. You will probably wonder what the sign "Free" is for so we'll tell you. He persuaded the furniture store to offer the hope chest to the first couple married during the run of "Honey." And that, if you ask us is darn fine showmanship. About the display he has grouped a number of eight by tens and eleven by fourteens that do a lot towards completing the selling effect.

And to see what else he did to make this tie-up a success just look at the ad the furniture store ran for him. You will notice that right at the top he is getting in a plug for one of the theme songs, "In My Little Hope Chest." What a natural that one is for a furniture store. By giving away one hundred and fifty copies of the song, the store obtained a lot of good-will, since no purchase was necessary to procure a sheet of music. The whole ad is a walkaway for the theatre and you can bet that this kind of publicity meant a whole lot.

We would like to state at this time that since we are located in New York and cannot be present on the various fields of operation, that the only way we can tell the merits of a showman is by what we see. So, judging from appearances, though Olinto might not be packing them into his two houses, we're ready to stand back of our statement that he's certainly on the right track to big business and by continuing to display the fine showmanship he has in the past there's no question about the houses showing profits.

The Battle Rages!

(Don't blush, H. W.)

A certain theatre manager in an outlying town has asked us to inform the rest of the showmen that the rumor circulated about that a man had dropped dead in his lobby and lain undiscovered for three days is false.

"However," he says, "it is a fact that they shot a letter-carrier there thinking he was a CONFEDERATE SOLDIER."

Teaser Herald Was Good Exploitation Stunt For Vincent

A. H. Vincent found out that the distribution of 1,000 teaser heralds aroused more than usual interest for "Honey" playing at the Sterling Theatre, Greeley, Colo.

The heralds consisted of a small piece of white paper on which was written in longhand, "Bill: Want a swell date? Call 84 and ask for Honey. Boy, she's a pippin. Clyde."

These heralds were distributed in downtown office buildings, department stores and passed out to men on the streets.

The above is rather short, but "sweet" and "A. H." again demonstrates his ability to put over a short and snappy stunt that attracts so much attention to a coming attraction.

We have a copy of the note which is explained above which appears to be written in shorthand, and even though the prospective customers guess what the gag is, it nevertheless does not detract from the value of the idea itself.

Shoot us some more like this, Vincent, and we will be glad to let the rest of the boys take advantage of your fine stunt.

Harry Marchand's Postcard Plug On Picture Was Good

Harry Marchand of the Saenger Theatre in Mobile worked an excellent stunt on "Anna Christie" that brought him not only newspaper publicity, but sold Mobile on the fact that Garbo "talks." . . . .

Through the newspapers, on the screen and in the lobby, Mr. Marchand offered a few passes to the one that could write "Garbo Talks" on a Government postal card the greatest number of times. This stunt was started a few days before the opening of the picture and closed on the opening day. Mr. Marchand received approximately five hundred replies.

The stunt is very simple, but costs practically nothing.

But that should not detract one iota from the effectiveness of the gag itself and with this little preliminary introduction, we want you to know that Harry Marchand displays all of the signs of a live-wire showman, which is all the more reason why we want him to join the army of showmen who are constantly making these pages so interesting and valuable wherever MOTION PICTURE NEWS is read.

"All For One And One For All"

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

John Martin has Started Promoting From Local Stores

Though he has been up in Watertown, N. Y., only a short time, John Martin, manager of the Liberty Theatre has started off well and from indications it looks to us as though some good show merchandising will be forthcoming from that section in the near future.

On a recent tie-up in conjunction with his showing of "The Big Party," Martin arranged to distribute a number of cards, in the form of an invitation, which bore copy reading "You and Your Friends are Cordially Invited to Attend 'The Big Party' at the Fox Liberty Theatre." The cards then went on and described the zippy tunes, etc., and gave the playdates.

They were very attractively printed in blue type on good stock manila cardboard. The printing and distribution was done at no cost to the theatre, since two local dealers bought space on the back of the cards and also passed them out at their stores. This little stunt served to bring in some goodwill to the house besides the added revenue derived from the publicity.

We want to thank Martin for passing this on to us as a sort of acknowledgment that he is getting the feel of things up there and we know that in a little while we'll have lots more to record about him. So keep up the good work John, and don't forget we're always glad to hear from you.

Jerome Zigmond Is At It Again; Look At His Latest One

Jerome Zigmond put a local touch to his trailer on "Song of the West" playing at the Avalon Theatre, Grand Junction, Colo., that resulted in many favorable comments.

Instead of putting the trailer on in the usual way. Zigmond built a little sketch as a prologue—using two local High School favorites who put it over in splendid fashion.

The action of the skit involves the telephoning of a boy to his girl friend for a date. The girl has other arrangements, but when the boy tells her that she can go to a dance most any night, but can only see "Song of the West" for four days, she is finally persuaded to break the dance date and see the picture.

The sketch is quite intimate as well as being interesting to the patron. And it also brings out the bigness of the picture through this little telephone skit that doesn't always appear in the trailer itself. After completion of the sketch, the trailer appeared on the screen.

The sketch ran one week in advance at every night performance and proved to be one of the best sellers of a picture that has been used in some time. At any rate, it has something different and people started talking about the uniqueness of the presentation.

This is certainly adding a decidedly new slant to an advance plug on a picture and should prove of tremendous value to other live-wire showmen who want to take advantage of tried and successful gags of this type. It doesn't require anything but a little forethought and planning, but it is bound to result in unusual interest on the part of your patrons. We are very grateful to Jerome for passing this along, and we hope that we will have more to say about him in an early issue.

Boos Used A Stunt That You Can Work To Good Advantage

A novelty in window displays was turned out recently by Louis Boos, managing director of the Park Theatre in Boston, Mass., in conjunction with his showing of "The Melody Man."

Through a tie-up with one of the largest stores in Boston Boos secured a spacious window for the display of sound apparatus which was featured under a catch line "What makes the movies talk?" In addition to giving an explanation about the sound, the display also plugged the technicolor scenes in the film.

By examining the photo we are reproducing you can see the novel effect he achieved by using a background of enlarged technicolored film, that got in plugs for the stars and producing company. The stunt drew a great deal of attention from passerbys and crowds gathered often in front of the window, studying the equipment. The newspapers gave it a great deal of play and one of the papers broke with a big spread on it.

Here's a display that will fit in with almost any picture you have and it's a safe thing to state that you could secure any sort of a window with it. And if you have any technicolor scenes in your picture it will be of all the more benefit. A stunt of this sort would fit in well with a campaign such as is put out on the bigger productions and just as a suggestion, you could sell almost any school on the sound angle by arranging to demonstrate it in the auditorium for the pupils and teachers.

At This Time We Present Some Art Work from Houston

More evidences of beautiful art work may be seen in these few photos we are reproducing. The displays are the work of Homer McCallon, publicity man for Loew's State Theatre in Houston, Texas, and are really his own creations.

The first photo will give you an idea of how beautiful the display he arranged for "Devil May Care" must have looked with all its striking colors and novel touches. Since this production called for some special art, a dignified touch was added to the work and some excellent effects were achieved.

The other photo shows the front used to sell "The Bishop Murder Case." Simplicity, it seems to us, is the keynote of Mac's work but it is a safe bet to say that it more than simply attracts. Little touches here and there add to the attractiveness and ultimate salesmanship of the picture. Unfortunately the photo we had on hand was a little blurred and so we were unable to get a clear reproduction of the large arrow he had painted to the bulls-eye in the center of the display. The arrow, carrying copy "Who Killed Cock Robin," as a catch-line, was hung under the marquee and anyone passing by and noticing it found his attention attracted to the bulls-eye and then the display itself.

We want to compliment Mac for the plug he gets in for his stage shows which photo though, we were unable to use. He achieved a great effect in it and we don't doubt but that this angle sold them completely. We'd like to hear more about this young man's work and we hope that the future will bring other accounts that will prove as interesting as these. Incidentally, Mac, how about the rest of the angles that you cover in your daily show selling. Let's have some of those, too.

Fred Hornscheidt Made a Good Tie-Up With Local Stores

Instead of using the ballyhoo record as a lobby stunt, Fred P. Hornscheidt, Manager of the Rialto Theatre, Chicasha, Okla., used the record in various stores to advertise "Sally."

Enough co-operative tie-ups for records were obtained to have them placed in several music stores Thursday, Friday and Saturday before play dates and throughout run of picture. This record not only helped to publicize the picture but also helped the merchants to sell the song hits from the picture.

Hornscheidt got another good break when the merchants were holding their annual Spring shows in their respective stores. Each one of the stores furnished music by using a victrola, so the Publix manager talked them into using the "Sally" ballyhoo record at intervals to sort of break the monotony of continuous music. It was surprising to notice the number of people listening attentively to this ballyhoo record. Cards alongside the victrola announced the picture, theatre and play dates.

50 process cards and 50 window cards were placed on laths and inserted in flag pole holes on edge of sidewalk. Cards were also tacked on poles along the more prominent streets leading from the residential section to the business district.

Looks like this is "old home week" in Publix with all the new members we have, but the more the merrier, boys, so come on along, Hornscheidt, and send in your contributions with the rest.

"Spilt Milk"

Why cry over spilt milk . . . the cow . . . in the meadow . . . contentedly chewing her cud . . . doesn't give a darn what happens to her milk after the farmer gets through . . . she goes right on . . . grazing . . . filling the old storehouse for to-morrow . . . and that's what you should be doing . . . if yesterday's business was bad . . . or last week's business was worse . . . what do you care? . . . forget about it . . . start building to make up for those losses . . . and you can't build a house without having the material . . . so get it . . . sit down and dope out what the trouble was . . . ask yourself . . . did I cover this angle thoroughly? . . . did I work that slant the way I intended? . . . did I have those pictures in the paper on time? . . . shouldn't I have spent a little more time laying out that campaign? . . . am I showing the same pep that I displayed when I put over "So and So" to a new box-office high? . . . don't analyze how bum the business was . . . that's not going to help . . . find out why the business was bum . . . anybody can say in a report . . . "well, the weather hurt us" . . . or "the picture wasn't so hot" . . . but it takes a man to say . . . "I laid down." . . . Sure it will hurt to make that statement . . . but it'll never hurt as much as the thrust the G.M. will give you when promotion time rolls around. . . . Tom Blank . . . the live-wire in the next town . . . gets the assignment you coveted . . . and might have had . . . but you laid down . . . he didn't . . . his was all cream . . . not spilt milk . . . when he had a bum week . . . he analyzed himself . . . when you had a bum week . . . it was three weeks before you got over talking about it. . . . Blank gets a thrill as well as a bit of dejection out of a failure . . . why . . . because it spurs him on to bigger things . . . opens the door to greater possibilities . . . he suddenly discovers that there's more ways than one to sell a picture . . . he sees how wrong he had been . . . he sees where he had made a mistake . . . and that's where the thrill comes in . . . so he turns in a record-breaking week on his next picture . . . and his percentage at the end of the season is pretty close to a hundred . . . then he's promoted . . . promoted to a job you might have had . . . to a job . . . you could have . . . a job you want and know you can get . . . but every once in a while you decide that . . . business is punk . . . then you say . . . "the heck with it." . . . "I'll wait until a good picture comes along and give it a plug" . . . Are you nuts? . . . don't you know that the man occupying the exec's chair probably went through just what you did? . . . he knows how tough it is at times . . . he came up against the spilt milk proposition more than once . . . but he didn't cry about it . . . if he did cry . . . he cried for more . . . so that he could get to the reason for the bum business . . . he never yelped when they handed him a piece of trashy film . . . he went out and sold it the best possible way . . . don't forget . . . in his day they didn't have many specials . . . they didn't have sound . . . they didn't have "talkies" . . . his day was the day when the movies were in the making . . . and had to be sold to a suspicious public . . . when he got six reels of blood and thunder . . . he had to sell it . . . and he did . . . then . . . came his big fight . . . he had to acclimate himself to the new order of things . . . trade in a Barnum for a Harold B. Franklin . . . no more blood and thunder . . . class . . . that's what the public wanted . . . class . . . they had to have it . . . and they got it . . . the G.M. grew with the racket . . . then it became an industry . . . and because of his work . . . he was given his present position . . . so after all . . . his case was tough . . . yes . . . but he looks back and smiles now . . . but he smiles knowingly . . . there's nothing you go through that he hasn't undergone . . . so if you think you're putting anything over on him . . . again we state . . . you're nuts . . . and listen . . . before we go any further . . . when we talk about a G.M. we mean a real, honest-to-goodness showman . . . not some of these addle-pated, scatter-brained ham and eggers who flounce in and out of theatres . . . don't get us wrong . . . but you won't . . . we don't talk about inflated dummies . . . we talk about real showmen . . . so listen, boy . . . just do your darndest and if a picture doesn't click . . . and you can look back and honestly say . . . "I did my best" . . . then the G.M. knows it, too . . . and you're not crying over spilt milk.

P. S.—Maybe YOU have something you would like to say on the subject. The meeting is open and suggestions are in order. BUT try to inject some constructive suggestions when you do express yourself because we don't want any one of our members or readers to get the impression that our arguments are one-sided. Oak?

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Showmanship Of Walter Decker Is Still In Evidence

Take a tip from Walter Decker, manager of the City Opera House in Frederick, Maryland, and give this slant a break on your kiddie business campaign.

The photo on the left shows the "Free Movies Peep Box" he used to ballyhoo "The Mounted Stranger." The box is easily constructed and cost practically nothing. A four-inch roller is contained in each end of the box, with 8 x 10 stills mounted on muslin attached to the rollers as a belt. A crank handle was used on the top roller and by turning it a panorama of photos appeared. The interior of the "peep-o-scope" was lighted by a forty watt lamp.

The other photo shows an excellent display for the "Gold Diggers of Broadway," in the form of a shadow box. The work was all done in gold glitter and though the photo doesn't show any of the beautiful details we feel sure that the miniature cut-outs of the stars he used and all the little niceties that went into the make-up helped considerably to sell the picture. Decker's ideas are carried out by his carpenter Hiram W. Heck, who enjoys the enviable record of having worked around Fredericksburg, and the theatre, for over forty years.

We'd like to call your attention again to the fact that the little stunt Decker used to plug his westerns would fit in nicely for your house especially on your kiddie business. If the kids pass the theatre on the way to and from school, what better natural advertising medium could you ask for? So if you think you have room for it, give it a play and we'll guarantee that the novelty alone will sell it.

We want to thank Walter for shooting this one along to us and we'd like to have him know that it will certainly be well appreciated and meet with a hearty reception. Let's have some more of your showmanlike work "Deck", so that we can pass it along to your brother members.

"Bunny" Bryan has Done Some Hopping In Show Business

With so much of his activity apparent around Rhode Island and Southern Mass., it is only fitting and proper that we should tell you a little about Bunny Bryan's career in show business up to date.

As Bunny himself puts it, "After majoring in football, baseball and track at various colleges, I finally finished at a School of Journalism. Took a publicity gathering and dispensing position in Central America and contracted so much malaria that I returned to the States and took a job as a song plugger, until I hooked up with a vaudeville act. From there it was hop, skip and jump, going out ahead of a dog and pony circus, selling banners and handling press stuff on anything and everything, in the meantime newspapering all over the country.

"Tiring of all the jumping, I became an agent for vaudeville acts and found that I was kept on the jump more than ever. And then I landed with Publix, working the Sound Train in New England as my original assignment."

Here we cut Bunny off, since we know the rest of his story. His fine work was recognized and he was made publicity director of Rhode Island and Southern Massachusetts, which position he now holds, and we want to remark, hold capably. We've recently come across some excellent examples of his work around the division and we know that the future will bring some nice accounts. Welcome into the Club, Bunny, and don't forget, we're depending on you to bring home the bacon for your district.

Dan O'Keefe Is Back In Harness As Norwood Mgr.

Again we were wondering what has happened to one of our veteran CLUB members and he suddenly turned up. This time it's Dan O'Keefe, who we have known for a good many years.

When we first met Dan he was managing a house in Clinton, Mass. A short time after he moved over to the Met., in Leominster, and it was a little later that we lost track of him. Now we find him managing the Norwood Theatre in Norwood, Mass., and doing a fine job of it.

With a beautiful theatre like the Norwood under his care, it seems to us that Dan is going to return again to the active fold, and now that all of his many friends and fellow CLUB members know his whereabouts we feel that he will want to be represented frequently. So what do you say, Dan, let's start plugging.

Hendricks Decided To Plug Organist And Biz. Boomed

In connection with our recent chats on the use of organs, even though you feature a sound and talking policy, we have received a few examples of the way showmen make use of them. One of our live-wire members, William L. Hendricks, general manager of the Capitol and Olympic Theatres in Steubenville, Ohio, uses some novel slants.

Through a tie up he made with the local radio station he was enabled to broadcast an organ solo daily at 10:30 A. M. and in addition, as an added attraction secured the services of the announcer, who is very popular with the residents of Steubenville. The announcer made a personal appearance on the stage of the Capitol on Saturday evenings and conducted the broadcast.

Hendrick's stunt went over wonderfully well with his patrons and he took care to let them know that he would have the announcer appear again at the theatre. We want to hand him a little compliment at this time for the very nice ad which we are showing that he used to announce the special broadcast, by featuring a cut of the announcer at the "mike" in a little box along with his regular picture plug. The organ broadcast is a very good means of securing publicity for your house and if there is a radio station located in your town it would pay to try and hook up with them. And even if you haven't a radio station, there's still no reason why you can't make up your solos in the form of a broadcast, by placing a dummy mike on the organ, or if you have an announcing set, hook into your horns.

There are many different ways in which this angle can be worked out and any showman should be able to find them. When you feel that your audience needs something, or that something's missing in your program, try an organ solo, but put it on in a way that will be a credit to your showmanship, and not just another rendition of music.

If You Have Space To Park Cars, Orr Gives the Lowdown

Remember the gag we showed you not so long ago, which informed you of the way Jack Albertson, of the Indiana Theatre, built up goodwill for his theatre by supplying free parking space for the vast number of cars arriving for the evening performance?

Another up-to-the-minute showman has adopted the same plan and it is helping his business a lot. We refer to H. S. Orr, manager of the Colonial Theatre in Winston-Salem, N. C., who through a tie-up with a local garage was enabled to effect an angle that is proving very valuable.

The garage paid for the printing of a number of cards, which read,

THEATRE PARKING

GUEST CARD—VALUE 25c

You are cordially invited to park in our convenient, modern garage as our guest without charge on any EVENING before May 1st, 1930.

DOWNTOWN GARAGE

Located directly back of the Colonial Theatre on Main Street

This card will be accepted by the cashier in lieu of the customary parking charge

PLEASE WRITE NAME AND ADDRESS ON BACK

You will notice on the bottom that Orr took the precaution to make sure that he received the name and address of any one the card was given too, and in this manner the theatre and the garage as well were enabled to get a list of names that could be used for mailing purposes. Incidentally the garage also agreed to feature the picture playing at the theatre in their newspaper advertisements.

Now that Orr is using this angle and finding it to be worthy we feel that perhaps there might be a number of members who will be able to effect a similar tie-up, so we are passing it on in the event that it find a place in your activities. Thank you "H. S.," for keeping us wised-up on your work, and don't forget we are always glad to receive accounts of your showmanlike activities.

Worth Looking Into!

At this time of the year, many street and outdoor events are staged by schools, high schools, local organizations, etc., and if you are on your toes you ought to arrange to "shoot" as many of those events as possible.

You know you can take regulation standard film yourself and save the expense of a cameraman, especially if you are located where it is hard to get a good man. So there is no reason why you should not take local pictures of events bringing out large crowds, or of parades, etc. (especially Decoration Day parades), and if you use a car, have appropriate banners or signs telling the crowds when and where they can see the pictures.

Don't overlook the spectators at such events. Get slow panorama shots of them; they'll surely want to see what they look like. All representative groups attending these outdoor rallies should also be taken separately. Order yourself some titles and then you have a good bit of "vegetables" to serve with the "roast."

Another good stunt is to tie up with all outdoor events (when possible) so that in case of rain the event should be staged in your theatre during the morning. This angle presents many good-will tie-ups. It's hard to set them forth in detail because they are mostly a matter of local nature and you should best know the way to tackle them.

Please Take Note

THE pages of the Club are open for the publication of photographs from both members and readers. These photos may be of theatre managers, theatre fronts, marquee displays, lobby settings, etc. Due credit will be given those sending photos to the Club, providing they attach the proper description and their own names and theatre addresses.

WILLIAM SPRAGG is the manager of the Stadium Theatre in Woonsocket, R. I., and from what we have heard of his work we are sure we have acquired another showman who is going to be very active, and if he is as "live" as the rest of the R. I. showmen, why we can't ask for any more. Listen, Bill, how about a photo of yourself, and if you see Bunny Bryan shoot some "pep juice" into him and tell him we're waiting to hear from him.

JOE KOEHLER manages the Idaho Theatre in Twin Falls, Idaho. Joe is no stranger to the Club, since they all know of his recent activity at the local radio station. So now that he has been introduced by these always necessary paragraphs, we believe there's many pleasant surprises in store for us in the way of novel slants on show selling.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CARL B. SHERRED is the manager of the Mishler Theatre in Altoona, Pa., and from what we know of his past experience in show business we can look forward to hearing some mighty fine accounts. What do you say, Carl, let us in on the know.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. CLAAR is the Assistant Manager of the Fairfax Theatre in Miami, Fla. Since Mr. Claar is working under the showmanlike wing of Earle Holden we will have to wait awhile and see how he turns out, because with Earle as a teacher he should be ready for a manager's position before long. However, Claar, why not send us in a letter telling us what you are doing down there to help Earle put his shows across?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. N. BROWELL manages the Park theatre in Palmerton, Pa., and since we ran a little story and a picture recently of him we feel that no other introduction is necessary at this time. As you know, "J. ———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WALTER LEACH is the Assistant Manager of the Rialto Theatre in Newark, N. J. From what we know about Walter it appears as though he is going to make good in the show game, since Charlie Brennan, the live-wire manager of the Rialto, gives him a send-off that is certainly fine. We want to welcome you into the Club, Walter, and express the hope that in a little while you'll be a full fledged showman and manager.

In Step With the Times

THE trend in marketing today is to concentrate—to localize—to do intensive work where most sales can be made at a profit. Sales cost less and more goods can be sold!

In no other publication can you get localized advertising messages, localized editorial service—yet a national medium!

Here is a national service of 10 separate non-duplicating publications maintaining 10 strategically-located publication offices and in addition 21 field editorial representatives.

In each of these 10 different publications the advertiser can run a different advertising message, localized to the special needs of his different trade territories. Local copy in a national medium! A number of the largest national advertisers are taking advantage of this localized service.

The Associated Publications offer an unparalleled opportunity for intensive selling—all of the advantages of national coverage, without the disadvantages. No waste.

Editorially, each publication in the Associated Publications Group serves the sectional requirements of its readers in an intimate, practical way, which only a publication with localized circulation can hope to equal.

Now The Independent Exchangeman Can Meet All Competition

The advent of talking pictures has given new and greater opportunities for increased profits to the independent exchangeman and exhibitor who work together——

There will be 250 pictures less on the market this season——

The talkies have proved a "leveller" for all motion picture production——

Quality Alone Counts

The honest, modern, independent showman-producer can give the market product equal to the Best.

Majestic will give you eight outstanding first run productions for 1930-31

—you can Bank on it!

A Rare Opportunity

For Live-Wire Exchangemen

A shortage of good product has been the independent exchangeman's bug-a-boo for years—but not now!

With concentration, identical R. C. A. equipment, an unlimited supply of good stories, free lance players with box office names, able directors and ability to convert "over-head" waste into added production value the independent producer can now produce in competition with the leaders, assuring his exchange associates a consistent program of

Pictures That Merit Showings in the Best Theatres Everywhere

—You Can BANK on it!

THINK IT OVER—
THEN GET BUSY!

You can gain financial independence by absolute control of your own business.

There can be no monopoly of good pictures, players or stories today—An eager public awaits good product—
If you have it you can sell it . . . . .

Majestic Will Deliver
8 Box Office Attractions
You Will Be Proud to Show

Analyzing the situation early MAJESTIC has selected the best of stories for its first year's program and will put real stars in them—

MOTION PICTURE NEWS Theatre Building and Equipment Buyers Guide, Spring Edition, will feature a presentation of recent theatre works of C. W. and Geo. L. Rapp, Architects, who have designed many of America's most distinguished and successful motion picture theatres. Articles authoritatively describing new creations in theatre design will be illustrated liberally with black-and-white and full-color reproductions of photographs and sketches. In view of the current interest in the works of this prominent architectural firm this announcement carries particular significance for all individuals associated with the building and operation of modern picture theatres. Careful preparation has been made to the end that the tenth edition of this popular and widely consulted source of information vital to the theatre industry will surpass its predecessors in utility as well as attractiveness and timely interest for the trade in general. The forthcoming issue of Buyers Guide will be published in June.

Repeating unanimous verdict of New York, Boston and Philadelphia, a chorus of praise from press and public greeted the first showing in Grauman's Chinese Theatre of

in SONG O' MY HEART

In New York:

It is something from which a reporter bounds with glee to write about — a huge success. —Mordaunt Hall, Times

Here is screen progress — thoroughly touching and effective. Next to the star, Mr. Kerrigan is the outstanding performer. —Richard Watts, Jr., Herald Tribune

One of the best stories unfolded upon the screen in many a moon. This picture will bring happiness to millions. —George Gerhard, Evening World

I enjoyed him via the movietone last evening more than I have enjoyed him in the flesh. —John S. Cohen, Jr., The Sun

Rollicking comedy, heart-rending romance and superb singing. —Irene Thirer, Daily News

Noted Irish tenor's screen debut is excellent entertainment. —Rose Pelswick, Evening Journal

Tender in its sentiment and something very near to triumphant in the recording and projection of the voice of its illustrious star. —Quinn Martin, The World

Had audience in high glee. —Regina Crewe, The American

There is no doubt about it — a decided success — and see it you must. —William Boehnel, Telegram

Frank Borzage has done a splendid job. —Bland Johaneson, Daily Mirror

His is a gift to warm the heart. —Julia Shawell, Evening Graphic

The rare and priceless virtue of simplicity is astonishingly evident in John McCormack's "Song O' My Heart". —Robert E. Sherwood, Evening Post

We take off our hat to director Frank Borzage. —Life

In Los Angeles:

"Song O' My Heart" is a genuine accomplishment. There was frequent applause at the opening for the McCormack songs and high praise can be bestowed for both the manner in which they were done and the recording. —Los Angeles Times

If "Song O' My Heart" had nothing else to recommend it, "Little Boy Blue" would make it well worth hearing. The comedy couldn't have been put into better hands than those of J. M. Kerrigan. He and Farrell MacDonald are a grand pair. —Los Angeles Examiner

"Song O My heart" should prove a perfectly fine matinee picture. If you don't like crowds of women, it is just as good at night, for McCormack's voice is one of the rare fine experiences that you will get from the screen. —Los Angeles Record

Rarely does one picture have so many elements that are pleasing. It has heart warming appeal, that charm of direct simplicity in its tender story, and the fascination of sympathetic direction by the man who made "Seventh Heaven" and "Humoresque", Frank Borzage. —Los Angeles Express

'Song O' My Heart" abounds with thrilling surprises for the fan intrigued by fresh faces. Maureen O'Sullivan has a fine future and Tommy Clifford captivated the first night throngs. Farrell MacDonald and J. M. Kerrigan are two of the richest comedians seen here in films. —Los Angeles Daily News

It is written and acted with unfailing good taste and a becoming air of reality and should please all McCormack admirers. —Los Angeles Evening Herald

In Boston:

An achievement of lasting memory. — Boston Herald

As delightful a bit of entertainment as you could wish. — Boston Post

A picture pearl of great price. — Boston Evening American

The faithfulness with which the tenor's voice is reproduced is amazing. — Boston Transcript

A splendid achievement, immense entertainment. — Boston Traveler

In Philadelphia:

The screen has done exceedingly well by Mr. McCormack. — Phila. Inquirer

Mere words of praise cannot commend the great appeal, the charm, the gripping sympathy, the uncloying naturalness, the humanness of John McCormack's performance. —Phila. Evening Ledger

Faithful reproduction of a magnetic tenor voice. — Phila. Daily News

In Foreign Press:

At no time in the short career of singing and talking pictures has one heard a voice so clear and natural as that of the famous Irish tenor. — Jewish Morning Journal

A marvelous talking and singing picture. — Il Progresso

One can well understand why John McCormack is the best loved singer in the world. — Courier des Etats Unis

This film is an unforgettable one. — Staats Zeitung

by

THE ALLIED STATES ASSOCIATION OF MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS

LEE SOMERS, Editor

AN EVENT of importance to the theatrical industry generally will be the appearance in the near future of THE ALLIED EXHIBITOR, a magazine devoted exclusively to the interest of the theater owners of this country.

¶ Though THE ALLIED EXHIBITOR will be the organ of the Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, it will be comprehensive in scope and will emphasize the practical aspects of the motion picture industry. Its policy will be to serve the interests of the whole body of theater owners.

¶ Special attention will be given to organization affairs. The problems of the exhibitors will be dealt with, without camouflage and without rancor.

¶ Its editorial policy will be unhampered, its news unbiased. It will adopt a constructive tone—definite, practical, accurate, helpful. Articles on showmanship and theater management will be prepared by experts.

¶ THE ALLIED EXHIBITOR is intended to supplement, not supplant, the trade papers that have dealt fairly with the theater owners. It will support every constructive movement; will oppose destructive tendencies, politics and chicanery.

¶ Men of long experience in the business have promised their cooperation to attain the primary objective of THE ALLIED EXHIBITOR—to help theater owners to be better showmen and to make a greater success of their enterprises. It will be published monthly—subscription, $3.00 a year. Rate card on request.

"BOTH HELEN TWELVETREES AND FRED SCOTT STEP A LITTLE NEARER THAT MIRACLE—MAKING A TOP LINE OF MOVIE STARS, WHERE FAME AND FORTUNE LIE IN WAIT."
THE COLUMBUS DISPATCH

"Helen Twelvetrees shows the stuff that stars are made of in this film —youthful beauty, charm, a capacity for wooing romanticism or dramatic ardor and a Cordelia speaking voice that would have delighted the heart of Lear"

The Columbus (O) Dispatch

"Fred Scott, with a voice as admirable as any of those heard in pictures, although of a different type than Lawrence Tibbett's, is outstanding"

COLUMBUS CRITICS CHEER!

MUSIC

"Two songs are certain to be hummed and played for the next few months. They are 'With My Guitar' and 'Shoo The Hoodoo Away.' This latter is sung by the Negroes in some superb chorus work, beautifully recorded and reproduced."

The Columbus (O) Citizen

"'Shoo The Hoodoo Away, sung by a Negro chorus and given two excellent atmospheric settings, is another worthy of attention. Its swing and orchestral accompaniment smacks of 'Hallelujah' and the more modern 'Sing, You Sinners.' This isn't to be construed we deem the new song a steal on the others."

The Ohio State Journal (Columbus)

DRAMA—THRILLS

"It has love interest, character development, dramatic episodes. Action is crisp and interesting and the detail is thorough."

The Columbus (O) Dispatch

"A big, colorful entertaining and costly staged romantic musical drama of the circus world of 1875. Here's one circus you can enjoy without thought of rain, dust or buying balloons and pink lemonade, yet it contains all the thrills, faithfully transcribed to the screen."

The Ohio State Journal (Columbus)

"You'll find 'Swing High' a peach of a picture. Joseph Santley has caught the lilt and glamour of the old-time circus day. There's still a streak of the kid in all of us, and personally nothing lifts us up like that rousing rhythm of a good circus band."

Flexibility—
Efficiency PLUS

The flexibility of the circulation of the 10 Associated Publications should appeal to all advertisers. Our plan permits the use of only the publication or publications that best fit particular requirements. For example, a special drive in one particular territory can be made through the publication in our group that covers that particular field—or a special message of interest only in one certain territory may be similarly handled—and thus save the difference in cost between 20,000 circulation and two or three thousand, as the case may be.

There is no waste circulation in the Associated Publications Group—no duplication through overlapping coverage—you can buy complete concentrated coverage of forty-five states down to circulation in only one state. You buy what you want and get what you buy!

Split of 5-5-5 Conference Seen As Allied Demands Apology From Hays

Comparison Note

The fact that tin-pan alley has undergone decided changes is best explained by Eddie Cantor, who said: "A year ago the song writers were searching for a second verse and a chorus—now they're looking for tile swimming pools and butlers."—Harrison Carroll in Los Angeles Herald.

No Units Dubbed Fox for William Via Clarke Deal

Telegrams addressed to William Fox remain unanswered. Harley L. Clarke prefers to say nothing, but the inside of that five-year contract which places the former at the head of a Fox advisory committee will prevent Fox from forming any other companies in this business under his own name. Officially unconfirmed, but persistently reported nevertheless.

The advisory committee, the personnel of which is shrouded with a strange lack of information, may meet. Or it may not. But, at least, there it is for Fox to chairman until 1935. In so far as Clarke is concerned, it is understood he had a battle on his hands before he won the point. Yet he emerged victoriously.

Gossip in the trade has been that Fox will never consent to remain inactive. Which explains the speculation over a new organization bearing his name. On the other hand, Clarke was careful to protect his heavy investment in Fox Film and Fox Theatres to the extent of making quite certain that his companies would have no competition in so far as trade-marks are concerned, at least.

Bebe Out of Musicals; To Make a Crook Melodrama

Hollywood—RKO has decided not to keep Bebe Daniels in fllmusicals too long. The company has purchased film rights to "Within The Law" from Joseph M. Schenck, and will star Miss Daniels in a talker version of this melodrama for next season.

"Within The Law" by Bayard Veiller was first produced in picture form 15 years ago. Vitagraph produced it with Alice Joyce starred in 1917; with Schenck acquiring the rights for a Norma Talmadge remake in 1922.

Exhibitors' Unit Chares He Inspired Defamatory Statements

It looks like tough sledding ahead for the 5-5-5 conferences, for Allied States Association is on the warpath. Unless the Hays association repudiates an article which Allied says contained defamatory allegations and insinuations against two of its leaders, the conferences are likely to hit the rocks so far as Allied is concerned. For Allied charges that this and other articles allegedly attacking the association were "obviously inspired" by the Hays organization.

A vote on the matter now is being taken by Allied. Upon its outcome will depend future participation of the association in the conferences, which are slated for resumption early in June.

But vote or no vote, Allied's committee chairman, W. A. Steffes, has declared he will not sit in on any conferences until the desired repudiation or apology is forthcoming.

Directors Wax Indignant

Three members of the Allied board of directors requested that Allied withdraw from the conferences unless there was a showdown in the matter of the published allegations. In accordance with association rules, the matter then was submitted to the fullboard of directors, but the vote is far from complete.

Directors suggest that every effort be made to obtain satisfaction before final decision is made on withdrawing. All of them express indignation and feel that the story should be denied and responsibility placed.

Steffes' Defi

Minneapolis—W. A. Steffes, general manager of the Northwest exhibitor unit and chairman of Allied States Association's contract committee at the 5-5-5 conferences, insists he will not participate in any more meetings unless there is a repudiation by the Hays office or an apology on the allegation that he "wants Publix to give him a theatre."

That Dry Climate

Hollywood — King Baggott, veteran film actor and director, was assessed $50 by Municipal Judge Parker Wood after entering a plea of guilty to a charge of being intoxicated. Baggott was arrested while seated in a parked automobile, where arresting officers found a gallon of liquor.

McCormick Seeks New Post; Out As Colleen's M'g'r

Hollywood—With divorce action already filed by Colleen Moore against her producer-husband John McCormick, reports state that the latter will no longer act as business manager for the star.

When Miss Moore left First National last summer, it was expected that she would immediately tie up with another large organization, with Paramount and RKO prominently mentioned. It is understood that several companies were interested in her for a star series, but any possible deals were blocked on account of salary quotation of $12,500 weekly on a term contract.

Three months ago, Miss Moore engaged the Selznick-Joyce office as agents to handle negotiations. Since then, it is reported, her asking price has dropped down to $7,500 weekly with an undercover deal at that figure supposed to be on at the present time with Joseph P. Kennedy. If the latter comes to agreement with the star, he will personally produce her pictures on the same basis as the Gloria Swanson series, and route them through a national distributor not necessarily Pathe.

It is understood that a property settlement has already been agreed upon by the McCormicks, and John has departed for Honolulu on a vacation. Upon his return, it is expected that he will seek a production executive post in one of the coast studios.

Series of Shaw Plays as Talkers Planned by RKO

George Bernard Shaw is headed straight for talkers. RKO, tied up with Basil Dean in an English producing unit, is preparing production of a Shavian cycle. Several plays have been under fire for some weeks, with a decision lurking around the corner and threatening to break any day.

Vol. XLI NEW YOFK CITY, MAY 10, 1930 No. 19

THE MUD THROWERS ARE WORKING OVERTIME

THE vagaries of picture minds constitute one of the mysteries of life in the film business.

At Columbus, Sidney Kent rose to his two feet, spoke for an hour on producers and their relations with exhibitors, stole the convention and planted the seed of cooperation which later led to the 5-5-5 conferences. It was a good night's work.

The day following Abe Myers smiled at M. A. Lightman, and Henderson Richey admitted Charlie Pettijohn wasn't such a bad sort. Really, quite an event. Certainly unique.

So into New York the various groups finally assembled to wrangle over deposit clauses, arbitration and the rest of the trade formulas that make up the exhibition contract. Squabbles here and there, but, in the main, everything O. K.

Dirty Linen on the Line Again

Then the dirt began to be dished. Allied was accused of several things; the nature of them doesn't make much difference. An apology was demanded from Will Hays, but Pettijohn is in California. In the meantime, continuation of the 5-5-5 conference stands in jeopardy until something or other is done to clarify the atmosphere.

Which means that the foundation for a closer knit cooperation between the distributor and exhibitor branches of the industry may never have a structure of harmony built upon it.

We are not interested in the right or wrong of the charges. It makes no difference to us whether Hays kicks in with the apology demanded or not. Allied and Hays may both be right or wrong. Either way, it's acceptable to Motion Picture News.

Opportunity Is In Danger

But what this column does realize is this:

Allied is in a strategic position to secure trading concessions for the independent exhibitor. The 5-5-5 meetings so far indicate that. The opportunity is unusual and will become increasingly rare as this business is further and further bitten by the merger bug.

It may be that Allied is right. We don't know and don't propose to find out, for purposes of this argument, because it makes no difference. The entire situation appears to us to be a malodorous political stew developed by one side or the other—perhaps both—for reasons best known to those responsible.

Somebody lurking in the background should have his nose dragged through the mud he is kicking up. The News takes no sides in the matter and will assume that both factions are guilty of a gross misdemeanor until amity is restored and this extremely silly talk about breaking up the contract meetings exploded.

A Bad Case of Political Nausea

To reflect for a moment that the efficient work so far accomplished can or will be threatened by cheap or political byplay is nauseating. There is no reason for it. There is no possible argument to justify it.

We sat next to Myers in the Ohio city where the tri-cornered deliberations gave birth. He was frankly suspicious of Kent, not because of the man but because Kent was on the other side of the fence. However, Myers opened his eyes, exactly as he opened his ears when Kent made that memorably frank address. From that point on, the Allied leader realized he had a real personage to deal with, if he so wanted. Myers chose to and the result is trade history.

Kent and Myers Can Do It

The fastest and most effective way out of the whole ridiculous farce is for Kent and Myers to get together again as they have before. We stand willing to take odds from all comers that when Kent's practicability joins hands with Myers' common sense, the scrap will dissolve into thin air as it must for the common good.

It is our opinion that both men are too well steeped in practical business to pass up the opportunity. Kent, with his slant on service for the industry, and Myers, with his zeal to serve Allied, can't afford to fall down.

Shades of Valentino!

Hollywood—Not a Hollywood star of the days of Rudolph Valentino was in the group of 300 persons who attended the unveiling of a statue to the star's memory. Dolores Del Rio dedicated the bronze memorial. The statue was given space in De Longpre Park, grudgingly, by park commissioners, who contended no other statue of a film celebrity had been erected, that the city couldn't be cluttered up with memorials to picture people and that the matter "would look like publicity." The statue bore no resemblance to the star, which was part of the commissioners' stipulation.

Publix Leases Reade Chain as W. B. Lose Out

They do say that if it hadn't been for a plot of ground purchased by Spyros Skouras, Warner theatre chief, in Perth Amboy the Reade chain today might be nestling comfortably in the Warner ranks instead of Paramount.

When the Fox deal for the New Jersey chain was dropped some time ago, Reade offered the string to both Paramount and R-K-O. There followed some talk and that was all. Then the Warners launched their theatre offensive along the Atlantic Seaboard and, in order to impress upon Reade the diligence with which they were preparing to go ahead, the site in Perth Amboy was secured. It so happens Reade operates in that town and the Skouras move didn't click with him. And so Reade got busy and the result is a twenty year leasing arrangement with Paramount.

The Reade chain in New Jersey is expected to go to Paramount-Publix on a twenty year leasing deal.

Reade's chain includes the Capitol, Trent and Palace at Trenton; the New Boardwalk, Mayfair, Main St. Lyric, Rialto, St. James and Savoy at Asbury Park; Embassy and Strand at Freehold; Broadway and Strand at Long Branch; Crescent, Ditmars, Strand and Majestic at Perth Amboy; State and Rivoli at New Brunswick; Strand, Plainfield and Oxford at Plainfield; and Carlton at Red Bank.

Old Buck Comes 1st, Then U. S. A. In Film Business?

Washington—Uncle Sam has one hundred grand in his kicker begging for someone in the motion picture business to help him spend it. Repeated pleas to the big moguls finds no takers. And here's why:

The U. S. Department of Commerce has been commissioned by the government to produce the life of George Washington—famous author of the cherry-tree gag back in the old days (before Winchells, Hellingers and Sobols started to spring their stuff). The picture, to run from three to six reels, must be authentic, the real goods, and Uncle Sammie has asked certain big guys in the business to make the film. It has been turned down by each and every one approached—and all because one hundred grand is not enough dough to turn out the job. Apparently, the possibility of creating good will by having a company trademark attached to Uncle Sam's picture has been lost sight of. And, perhaps, the same big shots who rejected the assignment have failed to recognize a golden opportunity to get in the good graces of certain Washington quarters where favors may be sought in the not too distant future. Who knows?

The Washington film is wanted for a gigantic six-months' historical pageant to be held in honor of the first prexy in Virginia, sometime in 1932.

An amphitheatre to accommodate 100,000 people will be built where all demonstrations are to be held. The picture will be screened nightly and then kept for showing once a year.

The Golden Platter

A certain big chief of one of the more important producing-distributing companies—and usually friendly to Republican administrations—was first approached by the government on the film proposition. It sounded okay until they talked about money. When he heard that only $100,000 was to be spent, he frowned heavily and stated "it would take a half million before a camera was turned" (a la Von Stroheim).

Government Now Secretly at Work on a Study of All Picture Conditions

Unless American companies "play ball" and quit their allegedly selfish "grab-all" policies in distributing and exhibiting U. S. product in Canada, they will be faced with a quota law governing the importation of films, much in the same manner as in European countries.

Motion Picture News has been informed by an official, high in government circles in Canada, that a quota law will be in operation within two or three years, if the dollar grabbing tactics of U. S. companies continue.

He pointed out that the Paramount-Publix—Famous Canadian stock mess added considerably to the flame of agitation which now threatens to blaze out in the open.

Women's Clubs Agitating

Several important clubs and societies in Canada, particularly women's organizations, have on numerous occasions in the past, presented resolutions adopted at meetings urging the enactment of quota legislation.

A quota measure of any type may be avoided, it was said, merely by spending production money in Canada. If each company were to make only two features a year, not only would they solve a complicated economical problem now confronting U. S. distributors needing quota product for England, but it would also bury all attempts to regulate picture importation or exhibition, it is said.

Canada, it was pointed out, also feels that American pictures take away considerably from its manufacturers by creating a demand for U. S. merchandise through films made in this country.

Reissues, Film Ads and Admission Clauses Out

Toronto—Clauses on feature reissues, advertising in films and minimum admissions are omitted from the new standard contract for Canada, drawn up by M. P. Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada. These clauses were dropped as superfluous, the admission stipulation at the suggestion of exhibitors. The agreement calls for compulsory arbitration, but no penalties are provided for, the awards to be enforced in court in accordance with British procedure.

Again the Silents

"The White Hell of Pitz Palu" all but justifies the return of the silent picture, in the opinion of Edwin Schallert, special editorial correspondent in Hollywood for Motion Picture News who reviews the picture on page 53.

The Insiders' Outlook

TIP-OFF number three.

The biggest combine of them all is still in the works. Corralling hundreds of millions in assets in one bag is a tough enough job. Trying to make a dozen or more different personalities, basking in years of publicity sunlight manufactured by their press agents, fit into the same set-up, is another job. And the bankers are finding it out.

But they're not discouraged. After all, the dollars that make this business go 'round come from the Wall Street canyon. In these days of heavy public financing, without which no company can expand, banking syndicates are pretty much in a position to tell those who sit behind the mahogany desks what to do and when to do it.

Midnight Oil Burning

Knowing this as they do, the giants downtown continue to pour over balance sheets in an effort to work out their pet combine idea. Imagine, if you can, the leading factors of the business controlled by one holding company, parceling as they see fit the theatre business of the nation. It would have struck you as highly fantastic two years or so ago. You may react that way today.

But if you are sufficiently interested in getting at the root of the matter, you will discover that about a dozen men—big money powers—and all friendly enough to realize that business strife doesn't help dividends dominate the amusement company. And they are not the names snap judgment might dictate. Now, if they can get together and stay together long enough to determine what they think should be done about pictures, the story will have been told.

The pictures, as painted on canvas now, would maintain the identities of individual organizations under the one financial sceptre. Maybe spectre. The purpose of that is obvious. Ostensible competition must obtain to placate the title officials of the Department of Justice and Federal Trade Commission. But the working chart will be clearly defined and the operating scheme outlined with each complementary company functioning as the moneyed generals down in the Street dictate.

Stifling the Individual

The bankers, constituted as bankers are, expect the individuals making up the business to fall gracefully into line. And presumably the individuals will, having little opportunity to do otherwise. But how the creators of pictures in Hollywood will react is something else again. In all of their activities in this business, financiers have never yet learned that they can't catalogue creative power.

They're stubborn that way and have the power of their money bags to back them up. If they do insist upon injecting too much system, the awakening is apt to be extremely rude for them and, of course, for the picture business which, through no fault of its own, would be dragged down as well.

The Dangerous Age

This couple's name is legion. Both prominent in picture circles and have been for years. Both have worked hard, but their rewards financially and in prestige have been considerable. Happly wedded, too.

But a change is noticeable to the insiders out Hollywood way. The woman in the case is indulging in mild flirtations. Nothing serious, you understand, but potentially dangerous. The man is gradually acquiring a new slant on life. He's anxious to play, travel more, gadabout—and is.

Hollywood, or that part of Hollywood which knows its onions, is looking on with much amusement and considerable speculation. Amusement over the fact this ultra-ultra pair has at last condescended to fall to the level of its compatriots. Speculation over where it will end up.

Kaleidoscope

Restless old business, this. In the background and well hidden from the light of day, boils a situation involving three executives. All of them are big timers. Matter of fact their responsibilities have been added to in the last six months. Openly, everything is serene. On the inside, otherwise. The reason? Because one chap assumed far more authority than he should. The opposing pair doesn't like it and, futures being what they are, will probably win out.

Checked—Out

His position made it comparatively easy for him to borrow dough. A request was pretty much in the nature of an order, for he was a big shot with the company, and his subordinates didn't have much of an alternative.

And so, he was able to play the market and the races steadily, without heeding the consequences. He was into plenty of the boys, but it didn't bother him. One killing would wipe the slate clean, so why worry. But the killing didn't come; the big boss was wised up and the habitual gambler was out like a light.

Toby Takes Bow

The cartoon family has a new pet in the fold. His name is Toby, the Pup, and his dog biscuits are supplied by Winkler Pictures.

Toby is the central figure in a new series to be released via R-K-O. The first, monickered "The Museum," is a delightful bit of nonsense, ingeniously animated by Dick Huemor, who lives up to what his name implies, and Sid Harris.

25 Millions for Non-Theatricals

Owen D. Young, it is understood, is at work on a plan to develop a nationwide interest among schools and universities in non-theatrical motion pictures.

Young would build up a trust fund from the interest of $25,000,000, which sum he expects to recruit from his millionaire friends, using the interest to establish a gigantic educational film movement through a special company which his plan would create. All films will be made available at the low figure of five dollars per reel.

Contract Respect Being Secured by Legal Bureau

Respect for contracts in the settlement of disputes between distributors and exhibitors has been an almost immediate result of formation of the central film league bureau, organized by Louis Nizer, secretary of the New York Film Board. Immediate settlement of 99 per cent of the disputes is being effected, Nizer asserts.

Under the plan, the bureau institutes suit against any contract violator who ignores exchange's efforts to settle a dispute. Action is brought for the amount of the claim, costs and interests.

Retiring or Retired, As You Like; Vilma Quitting

Hollywood—The film colony looks upon Vilma Banky's retirement announcement with just a wee bit of doubt. Vilma says from now on she merely wants to be Mrs. Rod La Rocque, and while portions of Hollywood appreciate the homing instinct, others say talkers and the Banky accent had considerable to do with the step.

As a matter of fact, Miss Banky admitted to an Associated Press reporter that the advent of talkers influenced her in her decision to retire. Beyond that, nary a word.

Christies May Make "June Moon" in Columbia Deal

Al and Charles Christie's deal with Columbia has been extended to embrace three talkers, in place of the original two. As noted, the first will be "Charley's Aunt," for which efforts are being made to secure Bert Wheeler from RKO. The second will be "The Street Singer" and the third perhaps "June Moon."

Carewe's Garbage

Dallas—A contract for exclusive rights to buy all wet garbage collected by the city has been awarded to Edwin Carewe, director. Carewe will start work soon on a $175,000 reduction plant to convert the garbage into animal food and other products.

Roxy Break With Fox Held Certain; Feeling Bitter

The lawyers are at it now. Roxy, with an R-K-O contract to manage the proposed Rockefeller theatre in his safe, denials notwithstanding, has about two years to go under his $3,000 a week contract with Fox.

He is doing no talking, but the lowdown is that he would have no aversion to breaking with the Roxy theatre in a hurry. How the Fox group feels hasn't been made public, but there has been little love lost between both camps for some time past. At the minute Roxy is reported angling for a settlement on the unexpired portion of his contract.

S. R. Burks, vice-president and secretary of Fox Film and Fox Theatres, has been elected to similar posts with the Roxy company, while W. J. Michel, vice-president and treasurer of the Fox organizations, moves into the Roxy organization in like capacities. They are directors as well.

Lines Drawn in Battle For Canadian Chain

Toronto — Strength between opposing forces in the battle for and against sale of control of Famous Players-Canadian Corp., to Paramount-Publix is expected to be indicated here next Thursday when a general meeting of shareholders is scheduled.

The May 15 meeting was called by Arthur W. Roebuck, who styles himself attorney for minority shareholders. Roebuck is allied with N. L. Nathanson and wants shareholders to decline Paramount's offer of four shares of Paramount to each five of Famous Players, insisting that control should be kept in Canadian hands.

Meanwhile, Paramount apparently is optimistic over the outcome and already has made application for listing of its shares on the Montreal Stock Exchange, so that there will be Canadian trading in the stock in event the deal goes through May 26. Another indication of Paramount's confidence in the matter is the naming of J. J. Fitzgibbons, of Boston, to be managing director for Paramount-Publix in the Dominion.

Documents Hint Amtorg Corp. Connected with Conspiracy

Russian pictures shown in this country will come under the scope of the investigation of all Soviet activities under way by Police Commissioner Whalen of New York, according to John D. Flynn, secretary to the commissioner.

The New York police head recently made public documents purporting to show that Amtorg Trading Corp. is connected with a Soviet conspiracy to foment revolution in the United States. This has precipitated a quarrel with Amtorg, which vehemently denies the allegation and brands the documents as forgeries. A congressional investigation of the Whalen charges is slated in the near future, it is understood.

Russian films are distributed in the United States by Amkino, American representative of Sovkino. A number of them have been shown in New York and elsewhere. The Cameo, New York, and various "art" theatres have been consistent users of the Russian films.

Commissioner Whalen has refused to furnish Peter A. Bogdanov of Amtorg with the alleged incriminating documents, asserting that he could not do so because the investigation is not completed.

Warner Semi-Annual Net Nearly $3,000,000 Up

Warner Bros. net for the six months ended March 1, 1930, was $10,092,109, after depreciation, Federal taxes and other charges, the company announced Thursday. This compares with a net of $7,254,570 for the six months ended March 1, 1929.

"U" Still Interested In 150 to 160 Houses

Universal still is operating or interested in between 150 and 160 theatres, according to C. B. Paine, company treasurer. Negotiations now are under way for sale of the Shenandoah Valley Theatres chain in Virginia to Warners.

Young with Columbia

Hollywood—Lon Young has succeeded Alex Moss as director of studio publicity for Columbia. Young has been producing independently.

Denies Propaganda

Washington—There is no Soviet propaganda in pictures distributed in the United States by Amkino, L. I. Monosson, company chief, told MOTION PICTURE NEWS during the S. M. P. E. convention here. Therefore, he said, "there is no reason why the United States government or any other agency should take action against our concern."

Fear Theatres Will Kick Over Traces Looms as the Fly in Ad Code Ointment

Liquor and Headlines

Hollywood—A film writer was called on the carpet to explain his income tax deductions for a certain year. In going over the cancelled checks, the Federal agent spotted one marked "publicity," and questioned it as a legitimate deduction.

The writer hurriedly explained that the check did not cover publicity, but he had written the word on it by mistake. Then the agent stated he knew the bootlegger very intimately!

Coast Mecca of Bands on Trail Of Quick Dough

Hollywood—Nationally known bands and musical aggregations are flocking to Los Angeles to take advantage of the quick money available to radio or record for filmusicals.

At the present time, there are no less than nine big name bands playing in and around Los Angeles in theatres, hotels, cafes and night clubs, which tops every previous total.

In addition to their regular engagements, the bands are periodically called on by film producers to fill in for scenes in filmusicals for one or more dance numbers. Generally the leader makes a deal on a flat retainer basis for himself, with regular film scale for his men. The retainer generally runs well in the four figure classification.

Irving Aaronson and his Commanders have a several month contract at the Roosevelt Hotel; John Hamp and his aggregation play at the Ambassador Cocoanut Grove; Gus Arnheim continues in his long run at the Biltmore; while Ben Bernie and his band have just opened at the Montmartre cafe. Waring's Pennsylvanians head the musical show, "Rah Rah Daze," at the Mason theatre; while Abe Lyman is appearing at the Carthay Circle, having moved over from Grauman's Chinese. Max Fisher, Ray West and George Olson provide the musical entertainment at their own cafes.

The various orchestras make a play for attention from producers and studio executives, for possible picture work. One band leader always plays the picture hit numbers of any studio during an evening when he spots the producing head of that studio in attendance.

Fear Record Number of Dark Houses This Summer

Philadelphia—Many theatres of this territory will close this summer unless relief is forthcoming in the form of increased business and lower rentals. The number of dark houses may set a record, it is feared.

Circuit Houses O. K., But They're Already Asking About Independents

It's going to be a hot and bothersome summer. The weather signs are pointed that way, but that's not all.

Those who know the funny kinks that go to make up this business are already beginning to wonder how the proposed code of ethics governing advertising is going to work out once the Hays association attempts to make it apply to theatres all over the land.

Circuit-controlled theatres, dominated by Hays members, it is admitted, will reach about 3,000 of the best houses in the country and, insofar as they are concerned, the code restrictions whatever they may be, are expected to be observed. What is going to happen with the vast number of unaffiliated theatres many of whom are dodging process servers and to whom almost anything goes—advertising-wise and otherwise—provided it brings in a few extra dollars, is something else again.

Partners May Kick

That's not all of the problem. Many circuit theatres linked up in chains with producers have partners on home territory whose net fluctuates with the gross. Their job, it is admitted privately, is to keep their theatres filled to capacity or as near capacity as they can throughout the year. Many of them, on the basis of past performances, are not expected to overlook a little spice in paid newspaper space if that additional dash of ginger means more do-re-mi at the box-office.

The off-color tone which tinged copy used for "The Love Parade" in St. Louis recently is mentioned as one flagrant instance where a circuit controlled by a national producer and distributor stepped out of line when, it is argued, it should have known better. Proponents of the code suggest that it would be good business for theatre owners to play along for the sake of industry reputation. Not many arguments are heard against that, but there are already a few in the know who are inquiring what machinery will be used to make these showmen toe the mark. They are asking that pertinent question with nobody offering an answer.

The business of refrigerating advertising copy, under Hays mandate, has been placed in charge of a sub-committee composed of advertising men. One meeting was held during the week to draft rules and regulations for consideration to the major committee composed of Hy Daab, (RKO), chairman; Paul Gulick, (Universal), Abe Waxman, (Warners) and Howard Dietz, (M-G-M).

For Family Trade

Baltimore—When J. Lawrence Schanberger, manager of Keith's, attempted to get permission to open his house at 11 P. M. standard time, Sunday, to give a midnight show of "Mamba," which would have been 12 midnight, daylight saving time, the police would not allow it. Consequently midnight shows on Sunday in Baltimore have to take place at 1 A. M., daylight saving time.

F. N. to Release Mackaill; Dick And Alice Left

Hollywood—Dorothy Mackaill's final assignment under her contract with First National will be a feature role in "Little Caesar," an underworld story which has Edward Robinson in the title role.

It has been rumored in Hollywood for several months that all has not been rosy between the star and company. Picture assignments have been switched a number of times, and finally the actress was loaned to Fox for one production. In view of the friction, there will be no contract renewal by either side when Miss Mackaill's term agreement expires next month.

With the expected departure of Dorothy Mackaill from the First National list, only two stars who held contracts with the company prior to Warner Brothers purchase of control are still with the organization. Richard Barthelmess has a two year deal calling for appearances in two or three productions yearly at a reported salary of $150,000 per picture. Alice White, flapper star, is under a long term contract, with present salary rating $1,500 weekly.

The Warner housecleaning on the First National contract list of stars and featured players saw the departure of Milton Sills, Colleen Moore, Corinne Griffith, Jack Mulhall, Mary Astor and Billie Dove.

Reinhardt Signed

Berlin—Curtis Melnitz, Berlin representative for United Artists, who has resigned to head a talker production unit bearing his name, states Max Reinhardt will make the first, Offenbach's operetta, "La Vie Parisienne."

Daniels-Lyons To Marry

Hollywood—An off again-on again romance of the film colony is apparently very much on. Bebe Daniels and Ben Lyon declare they will marry June 14. Ceremony probably at Malibu.

Kennedy Retirement from Pathe Seen As Speeding Reported RKO Merger

Judge Upholds Picketing

New Haven—Striking operators have a right to picket non-union theatres without liability for damages, it is ruled in a memorandum of a decision filed by Judge Carl Foster. It denied the plea of the Strand at Hamden for an injunction restraining union operators from picketing the theatre, plus an award of $1,000 for loss of patronage.

Various decisions have been rendered on picketing of open shop houses. Some have favored the operators, others the exhibitors.

Booking Deal or Merger? Is Query On Columbia Deal

Conflicting reports of the import of the deal under which Radio-Keith-Orpheum next year will play all product Columbia distributes followed consummation of the deal. The 20 features and line-up of Columbia shorts will play RKO houses from Coast to Coast, and will receive representation in any additional houses RKO builds or acquires. Broadway showings will be at the Globe and at the RKO, New York. The latter is to be housed in the former Columbia, which now is being remodeled.

Persistent report has it that the deal is the forerunner of acquisition of Columbia by RKO, but this is denied by Jack Cohn. The report concerned a reputed $60 per share to be paid by RKO for Columbia stock which has a current market value of about $47 a share.

Closing of the RKO deal is understood to mark the end of negotiations which were to have brought B. S. Moss into Columbia as chairman of the board of directors. Moss recently announced plans for a national circuit of theatres.

Brock Making 12 Shorts for Radio

Six "Nick and Tony" two-reelers, in addition to his series of six "Broadway Headliners" series, will be produced by Louis Brock for the 1930-31 Radio Pictures program. He plans to produce at the RCA Gramercy studio in New York. Clark and McCulloch and W. C. Fields already have been signed for the "Broadway Headliners" series.

Torrences Sailing

Ernest Torrence, accompanied by his wife, sailed Friday for Europe.

The First Lesson

John F. Rider's series of articles on sound projection gets under way on page 41, this edition. Lesson Number One will be followed by the second next week and thereafter in every issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS until the course is completed.

Kennedy Move Not Due to Activity In Swanson Firm

Hollywood—Joseph P. Kennedy's retirement from active direction of Pathe was not due to alleged partiality to the Gloria Swanson unit above Pathe, which had its climax in reported tie-up of nearly all Pathe studio stages for "What a Widow," starring Miss Swanson.

Kennedy is not retiring from activity in the Swanson firm. His deal with the star is as personal advisor, business manager and producer. Nearly all other United Artists stars finance through Art Cinema Corp., but Kennedy arranges outside financing for the Swanson films. He has no financial interest, except what he may from time to time invest personally. Kennedy, it is understood, gets a percentage of the net on the pictures.

Warns Showmen To Observe 1 P. M. Sunday Opening

Toledo—Toledo exhibitors who are violating the tacit agreement with churches to remain closed until 1 P. M. Sundays are called upon to discontinue the practice in a letter to managers by Jack O'Connell of the Vita-Temple. He warns fellow managers that unless the offenders are prevailed upon the observe the 1 o'clock opening, they may be forced to remain dark all day Sunday.

O'Connell's initiative will result in a meeting at an early date of the dormant Toledo Managers' Association, which hasn't had an election of officers since 1921. A number of matters are pressing for action by the association.

Bandy Returning

H. A. Bandy, foreign sales manager for Warners and First National, returns to New York from a European trip on the Berengaria Friday.

Successor to Phil Kauffman, general sales manager for the companies in Germany, who has resigned, will be determined after his arrival.

Executive Was Stumbling Block In Long Negotiations Is Rumor

Retirement of Joseph P. Kennedy from Pathe is expected to speed negotiations for merging of the company with RKO, for Kennedy is reported to have been the stumbling block in that deal.

This was due, in part, it is said, to the fact that RKO did not favor any arrangement under which Pathe continue operation under the joint executive direction of Kennedy and RKO officials.

Kennedy retired this week from active management of the company, to become associated with the banking activities of Bancamerica-Blair. Operation of the company is being assumed by E. B. Derr, executive vice-president; C. J. Scollard, treasurer, and Phil Reisman, general sales manager. Kennedy also said he is retiring from active management of Gloria Swanson Prod.

Management of Pathe was taken over by Kennedy at the time the company was in severe financial straits. During his regime, he has brought the firm out of the red, and enabled it to show earnings.

Deal Long Pending

Reports of an impending RKO-Pathe deal have been current for several months. RKO particularly wants the DuPont-Pathe interest held by the company and Pathe News. The ten-year RKO contract to play Pathe product also is an important consideration.

It is known that Joseph I. Schnitzer, president of RKO, has made a personal tour of the Pathe laboratory facilities at Bound-Brook, N. J., and otherwise checked its various physical assets in anticipation of a deal. Further, it is said, the DuPont interests, with a 51 per cent ownership in the DuPont-Pathe Film Manufacturing Co., would welcome RKO's acquisition of the 49 per cent owned by Pathe, since it would give RKO a profit participation in a company from which it could, and probably would, buy its negative and positive raw stock for studio use and prints.

The Blair and Milbank factions, heavily interested in Pathe, are reported to favor the prospect of a deal with RKO, since it means theatre strength, a factor which they have not overlooked in regarding the future prospects for Pathe as an independent producing and distributing organization only.

Must Observe Players' Contracts to Letter; Chiseling by Studios Is Out

Ziegfeld Greeley

Hollywood—"Go West, young gals, Ziegfeld Greeley's there." Take Florabel Muir's word for it. Ziggy told Miss Muir that he has decided that Hollywood has need of expert glorification, and because of that will center his operations on the Coast for an indefinite period.

De Forest Suit On Infringements Opens in Canada

Ottawa—First round in the patent fight between General Talking Pictures and Western Electric is being fought here in Exchequer Court, which is hearing arguments in General's case against Famous Players Canadian Corp. The hearing is expected to last through next week. The litigation started in 1928, when the Palace, Montreal, opened with W. E. equipment, the first wired house in the Dominion.

The line of action pursued in this case is expected to be followed in the infringement suit involving W. E. equipment to be heard starting May 29 at Wilmington, Del. This Federal action affects every wired theatre of the United States, for, if successful, General will institute suits against other sound recording and reproducing systems, using sound on film.

Home Talker Outfit Is Planned by De Forest

Ottawa—General Talking Pictures will market a portable reproducer in fall for use in the home and for business demonstrations and educational purposes, states Dr. Lee De Forest, who is here for trial of his company's suit against Famous Players Canadian Corp.

W.E. and ERPI Win Pacent Suit Appeal

Infringement suits brought by Western Electric are expected to be expedited by decision of the Court of Appeals, setting aside the verdict of the District Court, in holding that Western Electric and Electrical Research Products have a right to sue as co-plaintiffs in action against Pacent Reproducer Corp. and Pacent Electric Co., under an assignment from American Telephone & Telegraph Co. The case now is remanded to the District Court for retrial.

Louis G. Pacent, president of the Pacent firms, states his companies welcome settlement of the misjoinder of parties point in the case, because it will speed action on the question of infringement, which his firms consistently have denied.

M. P. Academy Will See to It Performers' Rights Are Not Violated

Hollywood—Spirit, as well as the letter of standard player's contract must be lived up to, studio managers, production managers, casting directors and assistants and studio auditors were told at a meeting of the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences this week. William C. de Mille presided.

"Producers will stand for no more chiseling on the part of officious employes in dealings with players," was the substance of the notice sounded to those present, as summarized by one speaker. "Companies want to pay actors the amounts due them rightfully and do not countenance manipulating methods by employes."

Promotion of goodwill and honesty on both sides is desired by producers, the meeting was told. Members of the joint committee of producers and actors attended. Speakers included: Conrad Nagel, M. C. Levee, Jack Warner, Fred Niblo, Sam Hardy, Fred Beetson, Clinton Wunder, William Conklin.

Lewis Talker Off

Attributing as the reason the death of her father in Monte Carlo, Mary Lewis, opera singer, says she has given up plans to make a talker for Pathe. She is Europe-bound.

Stockholders Irked by Drop of F. P. Common

Montreal—In sympathy with the downward trend of Paramount common in New York, Famous Players Canadian common touched 48 in trading on the Montreal Stock Exchange on May 6, this being regarded as a result of the offer by Paramount Famous-Lasky for Canadian F-P on a basis of four of Paramount for five of the Canadian stock. Shareholders are inclined to be wrathy over the whole situation and blame the market weakness on the offer and its generous discussion, pro and con, in many newspapers for days. A few weeks ago the Canadian stock was lively in the 60's.

Dissatisfied

Toronto—Hiram S. Brown, president of Radio-Keith-Orpheum, which is affiliated with Famous Players Canadian Corp., is "very unhappy" over proposed sale of control of the Canadian firm to Paramount Publix, according to the Canadian M. P. Digest.

"When our company entered into an affiliation with the Famous Players Canadian Corp.," he said, "this affiliation was closed under the belief that the Famous Players Canadian Corp. was a Canadian-controlled company and was to remain so. Developments now tend to place this control elsewhere."

Back to Silents

Philadelphia—Switch to silent policy is reported planned by a number of houses here due to high sound overhead. The Gladstone, which went back to a silent policy, says its gross is about the same. The Edgemont also is running silent.

Senate to Probe Patent Deal of RCA and Allies

Washington—Senatorial investigation of charges of monopoly against RCA and allied companies is planned, following approval by stockholders of the company of the agreement whereby RCA obtains radio patent rights of General Electric and Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Co., in exchange for $344,469,687 worth of its common stock. RCA intends to submit the entire matter to the Dept. of Justice before the transaction is completed, according to David Sarnoff. The Senate's investigation will be conducted independently.

De Forest-ERPI Clashes Result in Court Action

Dallas—Clashes between Electrical Research Products and General Talking Pictures are marking the keen rivalry existing in the South, with charges of intimidation of General representatives in Texas and North Carolina. Court action has been instituted in one instance.

Joseph Cordell, who operates a house at Rockingham, contracted for De Forest equipment, and when it was misdirected, bought Western Electric, it is stated. However, the De Forest equipment was located and installed according to contract, with R. F. Woodhull, executive vice-president of the company, serving as master of ceremonies the opening night. Electrical Research also claims a contract for Cordell's Clinton house, which is De Forest equipped. When removal of De Forest equipment in favor of Western Electric was threatened. General secured an injunction against the exhibitor and Electrical Research.

At Okmulgee, De Forest equipment was installed to replace Western Electric. The house was having labor trouble at the time, which caused General to be put on the unfair list by the union. The company's engineer, it is claimed, nearly was "put on the spot," until the home office wired the Governor and chief of police demanding protection.

Hall With Warners

Hollywood—Warners has signed James Hall to a long term contract.

Checkmate in Pennsylvania Seen for Warners in Comerford Swing to Zukor

Bishop Attacks Theatres

Dallas, Tex.—The "modern moving picture, novel and other enemies of the home" were the objects of verbal attacks by Bishop E. D. Mouzon at the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, here. He termed the motion picture theatre "the greatest menace to morals and religion the church has had to face in years."

Northwest Indies Launch Plan to Pool Resources

Minneapolis—Plan for pooling of resources by independent exhibitors of this territory will be launched, following try-out of the experiment on co-operative buying of equipment and supplies. In the latter connection a deal with National Theatre Supply Co. is understood to be under way or planned. During the year, effort also will be made to launch a booking combine, it is understood.

Under the pooling plan, independents would form one large circuit in efforts to compete with Publix in this territory. The proposal was to have been launched at the recent convention here, but was held in abeyance, pending a test of the co-operative equipment buying plan.

R-K-O Faces Tilt With Paramount And W.B. in Cincy

Cincinnati—With the Libson chain as a formidable nucleus, R-K-O is digging in further throughout Ohio. The Rivoli and Palace in Toledo were purchased this week while reports persist of other impending deals.

The battle in this section is to be three-cornered, it seems. R-K-O's hold in Cincinnati doesn't set too kindly on Paramount and Warners. Both are after Libson when R-K-O stepped in and took it away from them. Now there is talk of the disappointed pair building their own first runs here. Publix has moved further along than Warners. A site at Gilbert Ave. and McHicken Sts., a suburban location, is under consideration for a 3,500 seat theatre.

Deploring Fest in London Hits American Films

London—There was plenty of deploring over the popularity of American pictures throughout the empire when the British Empire Films Institute convened here on Thursday. In fact, they deplored all over the lot, without suggesting any means tc combat the American "menace."

"Gloomy" Dean Inge was emblematic of the occasion and did his deploring in a resolution passed unanimously which deplored "the predominance of foreign films all through the empire and their injurious effect on British ideals and expansion of British trade."

Sir William Waterlow, lord mayor of London who presided, pointed out that British theatres are dependent largely upon American pictures. In some cases, he said, 90 per cent of the films shown are American, which he termed "a startling fact." Many foreign producers, he observed, often give "an inaccurate and misleading representation of British morals and ideals. Fifty-two million people throughout the world attend film shows weekly, was one of his startling disclosures.

Weaver of St. Louis Dead

St. Louis—John C. Weaver, theatre manager and projectionist, is dead at his home at the age of 36 years.

Comerford Deal Gives Par. Edge in Fox Towns in N.Y.

Frank C. Walker, general manager of the Comerford circuit, is on a swing over the circuit to clean up details attendant on the transfer of the houses to Paramount. Operation will be vested in a new company to be known as the Comerford Publix Corp., with M. E. Comerford president; Walker and Sam Dembow of Paramount-Publix, vice-presidents; Ralph Kohn of Paramount, treasurer; and M. B. Comerford, secretary. In addition to these men, Adolph Zukor, S. R. Kent and Sam Katz are elevated to the board.

The 71 houses in the deal are located in 28 Pennsylvania towns, in 10 New York towns and in Providence. The deal throws Paramount into direct competition with Fox in Upper New York.

Ostrer, Gell Here

Maurice Ostrer, of Ostrer Brothers, London, and William Gell, managing director of the Gaumont Co., are in New York to confer with Tiffany on English distribution for next year.

Ballot on Meeting

Philadelphia—Members of the eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey exhibitor unit will decide by ballot if the proposed special convention is to be held May 22.

Paramount's Buy Prevents W. B. from Sewing Up The Entire State

Behind Paramount-Publix's acquisition of the 71 Comerford theatres, as reported first in Motion Picture News last week, is seen a move on the part of the Zukor organization to checkmate complete dominance of Pennsylvania by the Warners.

With their extensive holdings in the eastern part of the state, grouped at present in the Stanley Company, plus properties in and around Pittsburgh, the Warners were only two steps removed from what is regarded by those in the know as virtual control of that territory. The Comerford chain was one and Wilmer and Vincent, the other.

As late as four days before word seeped through that Paramount had nabbed Comerford, it was persistently reported Warners would win out. This week, Spyros Skouras declared negotiations with W. and V. had been dropped. On the other hand, W. and V. insist they will go it alone and point to their expansion program as an earnest of their intention. Despite this, swing of that chain to a producer-distributor is openly talked of, with Paramount mentioned as the logical buyer.

The Entente Cordiale

The close working arrangement between Adolph Zukor and Harry Warner continues and, if anything, is expected to become further cemented. However, very much on the inside the whisper has been heard that Zukor, despite friendly alliances and bearing in mind how such relations are occasionally terminated, prefers to have an ace in the hole. And, insofar as Pennsylvania is concerned, the Comerford buy gives him exactly that.

In the meantime, the Warners are pushing their theatre-buying campaign with no let-up. New deals include the Chatin and Nittaney in State College, Pa. These houses were formerly operated by Morris Baum. The Columbia circuit, six strong in four Pennsylvania towns, is another. The houses are located in Erie, Warren, Sharon and Wesleyville and were annexed from Potter and Newton. The Fairmont and the Virginia at Fairmont in West Virginia raise the total to ten.

Plainfield, Asbury Park and Perth Amboy in New Jersey are on the list of futures for new theatres. With Paramount's leasing deal with Walter Reade scarcely dry, the Warner invasion in Reade towns indicates further that company's intention to fortify itself regardless of entente cordiales.

While no deal is as yet closed, Skouras is hot after the Durkee chain of eight houses in Baltimore. There are others in sight.

Scotch Exhibitor Cleared

London—Charge of culpable homicide against Charles Dorward, manager of the Paisley theatre at Paisley, Scotland, where 70 children lost their lives in a fire on New Year's Eve, has been dismissed.

Clarke Digs Into Operations at Fox; Sheehan and Grainger, His Mainstays

100 New Stars

The next year will develop between 50 and 100 new stars, in the opinion of Winfield Sheehan who credits the lightning changes in values induced by sound as the reason.

Sheehan Signs Fox Contract; to Run Five Years

Winfield Sheehan, with Fox since 1914, has signed his first contract with Fox. It is a five-year agreement, which vests in him full control over production and carries with it the titles of vice-president and general manager of Fox Film. This was one of the announcements made at a dinner tendered by Harley L. Clarke to various executives of Fox Film and Fox Theatres at the Savoy Plaza Tuesday night.

Those around the banquet board included: Harley L. Clarke, president, Fox Films and Fox Theatres; Winfield Sheehan, vice-president and general manager of Fox Film; James R. Grainger, vice-president and general sales manager; Saul Rogers, vice-president and general counsel; William C. Michel, treasurer, Fox Film and Fox Theatres; S. R. Burns, secretary, Fox Film and Fox Theatres; Otto E. Koegel and Frank E. Mathews of Chicago, Clarke's personal counsel; Clayton P. Sheehan, foreign manager; Courtland Smith, John Zanft, Harry C. Arthur; Sidney Towel, comptroller, Fox Film; Wilfred Eadie, comptroller, Fox Metropolitan Playhouses; Charles A. Caballero, general purchasing agent, Fox Film and Fox Theatres; Truman H. Talley, general manager, Fox Movietone News; Glendon Allvine, director of advertising and publicity; Edmund C. Grainger, Jack Sichelman, George Roberts, William J. Kupper and John Nolan of Grainger's sales cabinet; Harry J. Buxbaum, metropolitan district sales manager; Edward Schnitzer, Brooklyn sales manager; Joe Lee, New Jersey sales manager; Harry F. Campbell, New England divisional manager; Edgar Moss, Philadelphia exchange; Charles Munro, Australian representative;

Clarke Names Oldknow V. P. of Fox Theatre Co.

Oscar Oldknow, vice-president of National Theatre Supply, has been elected a vice-president of Fox Theatres and will serve as a direct representative for Harley Clarke in the theater end of the Fox enterprises.

National Theatre Supply is one of the six equipment companies combined in General Theatre Equipment Corp. which controls Fox Film and Fox Theatres.

Fox 1930-31 List Is Cut to 48 Features

Forty-eight instead of 52 pictures will comprise the Fox line-up for 1930-31, under revised plans of President Harley L. Clarke, the sales force will be told at the annual convention, which is to be held starting May 22 at Movietone City, Hollywood. It will be the twenty-seventh annual sales convention of the company, with around 150 slated to attend.

Utilities Man to Devote Lots Of Time to Film Units— Cabinet in Making

With a job to be done, Harley L. Clarke, Mid-Western utilities magnate and now controlling factor in the Fox enterprises, will devote the major portion of his time during the next few months to Fox affairs.

On formulation of policy and actual operation, the new Fox president will lean heavily on Winfield Sheehan and James R. Grainger. Somewhere in the offing is the creation of an executive cabinet which will eventually conduct the business, but just how rapidly that will develop is something which Clarke declares he doesn't know himself. He is generally credited with being very apt at financial wizardry and will, therefore, handle the monetary affairs of the two corporations.

The confidence reposed in his two right hand men was indicated early in the week when James R. Grainger signed his expected contract with Fox Film for five years. Under it, he becomes a vice-president of the company, retaining as well the title of general sales manager. The agreement became operative on May 1 and replaces his old contract which had about two years to run. While no figures were made public, Grainger's contract puts him comfortably in the six figure-a-year salary division. When he resigned as general sales manager for M-G-M about six years ago to rejoin Fox, the move occasioned widespread surprise. One year after he moved into office, Fox's gross billings had jumped $5,000,000.

A few days later this week Winfield Sheehan affixed his signature to an agreement which places him in complete charge of production for the next five years. Surrounding these two executives, Clarke has brought in several of the men associated with him in General Theatre Equipment, Inc. They are:

W. C. Michel, vice-president and treasurer of General Theatre Equipment, and, in

No More Speculation

At the Clarke dinner for Fox executives the other night, the entertainment included Dunninger, a mind reader. He asked four of the guests, one of them Winnie Sheehan, to mentally select a number and remember what it was. Then he proceeded to write them out. That, and a few other tricks.

If Dunninger should alight on the Fox lot one of these days, the reason will be simple. Any chap who can take the "spec" out of speculation the way he does it should be able to take a peek at the 1931 line-up and inform Sheehan what his ace pictures are to be. Shouldn't even be necessary to retain Touche, Niven as auditors. If Dunninger ever gets near the Motion Picture Club, imagine what some of the tape observers would do to him!

Fox Rushes Silents

Twenty-five of the thirty-eight silents announced for 1930-31 will have been released by July 1, states J. R. Grainger, Fox general sales manager. The rest will be completed by Aug. 16.

Unfriendly Hand Seen in Hoax on Fox Co. Dividend

Interests unfriendly to the new management at Fox are charged with circulating unfounded reports that the company had planned to pass its dividend, it is hinted. Basing its yarn on information said to have been supplied via Standard Statistics Service, the New York Times early in the week declared the quarterly payment of $1 a share on the Class A and B stocks would not be met.

That was on Thursday. On the same day, the Fox directors met and declared the dividend. Not only that but arrangements were made to redeem the scrip issued in lieu of cash for the dividend declared on Jan. 15, when the struggle for control of the companies was approaching its peak.

The scrip will be paid off on May 15 and the dividend on May 20 to stockholders of record as of May 12.

Movietone News Issued In 5 Foreign Versions

Fox Movietone News now is being released in five different versions abroad, according to Clayton P. Sheehan, head of the Fox foreign department. These are British, European, Australian, Oriental and Latin-American.

Drops Philadelphia Project?

Philadelphia—Plans for the proposed 5,000-seat Fox theatre here have been dropped, it is understood.

Arthur, Fox "G. M." East of Detroit

Harry C. Arthur, former southern California divisional manager for West Coast Theatres, has been appointed general manager of Fox holdings from St. Louis east to the Atlantic seaboard. The rest of the nation will be handled by Harold B. Franklin.

The new set-up, formal announcement of which will be made in a few days, gives Arthur the Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc. in New York environs, the Poli circuit in New England, general control over

American Stars Facing Wash-Up as Foreign Lands Push Talking Films

Too Much to Expect?

Take it from the "Town Crier," a screen actress is suing her husband for divorce on the grounds of mental cruelty.

And Walter Winchell reports the rumor crediting her husband with attempting to make the peeved wife memorize the alphabet.

Weeks Discovers U. S. Talkers Not Popular Abroad

There is a definite demand and stipulation in foreign countries for talkers in their own languages, George W. Weeks, executive vice-president of Sono Art-World Wide Pictures, told MOTION PICTURE NEWS upon his return to New York from Europe.

George W. Weeks

"Even England," he said, "has deep feelings on this subject, although to a considerable measure American talkers are acceptable to the British. But in France, Germany and Spain the idea of getting American-made versions of talkers in their language is quite distasteful to them. This feeling is growing stronger and more intense every day."

There is strong interest abroad regarding the coming of wide film, and distributors and exhibitors are all waiting to hear that it is past the experimental stage and available to all types of houses for practical showings on a wide scale, he said.

Garson Unit Leaves to Make Film in Borneo

Hollywood—Universal's expedition to Borneo, headed by Harry Garson, has left on the first lap of the trip which will wind up in the jungles of that country to film "Ourang," an original by Fred de Gresac.

Garson originally attempted to obtain independent financing, but eventually made a deal with Carl Laemmle for the latter to produce the picture, with Garson supervising and directing. A production and technical staff of about 15 are making the trip, with Dorothy Janis going along as the lone player. Complete laboratory and sound equipment is being carried. A yacht has been chartered for several months, and will serve as permanent living quarters for the troupe while the picture is being made.

Isadore Bernstein is making the trip in the capacity of story editor, while Julius Bernheim goes along as business manager. Lewis Physioc will be first cameraman.

Hollywood Producers Worried; Publicity Outlay May Be Dead Loss

Hollywood—Wash-up slated for a number of American stars in foreign-language countries, with the consequent junking of the money spent for the advertising and exploitation of these players in the countries concerned, is a source of worry to producers.

This worry is being accentuated by the speeding of plans for domestic production of talkers in foreign-language countries, which see in the talker development a golden opportunity to rehabilitate the home industries.

The foreign language countries will not tolerate dubbing, in most instances, it is asserted, so that players must be secured who can talk foreign languages, or the market ignored, outside English-speaking countries.

Anderson To Make Two Yearly for Universal

John Murray Anderson will make two pictures yearly under terms of his long term contract with Carl Laemmle, Universal president. He will contribute two to the 1930-31 program. Anderson is abandoning stage work in favor of pictures. Anderson, who devised and directed "The King of Jazz," will go to his Newfoundland home for a vacation after run of the picture and then go to Universal City.

Kane Heads Paramount Production in Europe

Paris—Robert T. Kane has been appointed general production manager for Paramount in Europe and will have charge of production of the company's foreign-language talkers. Jesse L. Lasky, it is reported, recently signed Eisenstein, Russian director, to make pictures for Paramount at Hollywood. It had been rumored that Douglas Fairbanks was to sign the director.

French Playwright in N.Y. To Write for M-G-M

Jacques Deval, French playwright, under contract to M-G-M is in New York and will leave for the Coast next week.

Next!

That barber shop for executives in the Warner Brothers' offices will never be allowed to stand on the books solely as expense, says Frank Brady in Motion Picture Classic. Sooner or later the company will use it as a set for an all-talking, all-singeing production.

Typical

James V. ("Jimmie") Bryson, managing director of Universal's interests in London, sent a 2,000-word cable to his London headquarters covering the raves on "All Quiet On the Western Front." On "King of Jazz" he sent a 350-word cable to spread the good news to the English force.

Stars of Future To Be Linguists, Says Arthur Loew

Prominent stars who can speak English only can get by for the present, in the opinion of Arthur Loew, head of the M-G-M foreign department, who says the situation will obtain until talkers are made in all languages. Loew returned last week from Europe, where he studied the foreign-language situation.

Arthur Loew

M-G-M will make all its foreign-language talkers on the Coast, for the present at least, planning German, French, Spanish and Italian pictures. Whether a particular picture is made in any or all of these languages will depend upon the story material.

At the present time, says Loew, 80 per cent of a picture's gross is obtained from English-speaking countries. However, he doubts that the 80-20 ratio will remain the same, in view of the domestic production planned in foreign countries.

Outstanding pictures will click in non-English speaking countries, Loew believes, but the average picture will not mean much. Even in silent days, he points out, this situation obtained, "Ben Hur" grossing 30 times as much as an average silent.

Rogell Forms Own Unit; Making 4 for Tiffany

Al Rogell, after 16 years of activity in various branches of production for several producers, including Universal, RKO and First National, has turned producer and will make a number of his own pictures, at least four of which will be distributed by Tiffany.

Although the production, "Aloha Oe," to be made in Hawaii, is slated to be his initial effort, he may delay long enough to take some shots at the Gramercy studio in New York for "Master of Men."

Abe Meyer, who recently resigned from Paramount's music department, has signed with the Rogell company and will have complete charge of all music and synchronization.

Production of Talker Serials to be Resumed; Two Companies Plan Nine

"U," Reversing Sales Meet Decision, to Make 4; Mascot, 5

The serial, standby of small towns in silent days, is not to be cast into the discard, as has been indicated, for at least two firms will continue making talker serials. These companies are Universal and Mascot Pictures, the latter an independent producer headed by Nat Levine.

Contrary to belief at the Universal sales convention, the company is to continue serial production and will make four chapter plays for the 1930-31 season. The first one is to be "The Indians Are Coming," a 12-episode serial which goes into production next month, with Tim McCoy and Allene Ray co-starred. Henry McRae will direct. The others will be "Big Circus," in ten episodes; "Fingerprints" by Arthur B. Reeve in ten episodes; and "Mutiny," a sea serial in twelve episodes.

Mascot, which pioneered in the talker serial field, intends to make five serials for 1930-31, according to Levine.

At the Universal convention, a poll of sentiment on the question of serials showed that only the southern and western managers favored continuance of the chapter-play.

Tryon Contract Renewal by "U" Hanging Fire

Universal City—No decision has been reached by Universal as yet on proposed renewal of Glenn Tryon's contract. Tryon was not down for any pictures in the 15 announced at the New York sales convention. Contracts of Myrna Kennedy, Joseph Schildkraut and Nancy Torres are not being renewed. Ivan St. Johns is being relieved of his post as director of studio publicity and named assistant to Carl Laemmle, Jr. Milton S. Howe has succeeded him.

Film Pirandello Plays?

Berlin—Opton on four plays by Luigi Pirandello has been secured by Jesse L. Lasky, who says he will try to induce the playwright to go to Hollywood to write originals.

Services Held for Abrams

Funeral services were held during the week for Charles Abrams who died on Monday at the age of 56. Abrams was identified with P. A. Powers when the latter was operating Equity Pictures some years ago.

United Artists' Twenty Outlined By Al Lichtman

Twenty pictures will be released by United Artists in 1930-31. The revised schedule was issued following the return from the Coast of Al Lichman, distribution chief.

The first picture will be Gloria Swanson's "What a Widow," to be released July 5. Allan Dwan directed from a story by Josephine Lovett. Lew Cody and Owen Moore head the supporting cast, which includes Margaret Livingston and Buster West. It will be followed by "Raffles," starring Ronald Colman, released July 26. Colman will make a second film for release Jan. 10.

"Lottery Bride" is the title of Arthur Hammerstein's first film, which may have pre-release runs at advanced prices in a few cities. Paul Stein directed a cast including Jeanette McDonald, Joe E. Brown, Zasu Pitts, Robert Chisholm, Joseph Macauley, John Garrick, Harry Gribbon and Max Davidson. Rudolph Friml composed the music.

Cantor in "Whoopee"

Eddie Cantor in "Whoopee," first Samuel Goldwyn-Florenz Ziegfeld film, is the fourth done in Technicolor with the original cast intact. It includes Ethel Shutta, Paul Gregory, Chief Caupolican, Eleanor Hunt, Albert Hackett and George Olsen and His Music. Ziegfeld is in Hollywood supervising the picture.

"Abraham Lincoln," with Walter Huston in the title role, is a D. W. Griffith film, first all-talking production. In the cast are Una Merkel, Kay Hammond, Jason Robards, Ian Keith, Ralph Lewis, Hobart Bosworth, John St. Polis, Frank Campeau and Helen Ware. Stephen Vincent Benet wrote the story and dialogue.

Harold Bell Wright's "Eyes of the World," being directed by Henry King for Inspiration Pictures, will be released Oct. 18. Una Merkel, John Holland, Nance O'Neill, Ferna Andra and Brandon Hurst are in the cast.

Norma Making "Deception"

Norma Talmadge in "Deception" will have in her supporting cast Conrad Nagel, William Farnum, Hobart Bosworth, Ullrich Haupt, Allison Skipworth, Blanche Friderici and Cissy Fitzgerald. Sam Taylor is directing this David Belasco play. It will be released Nov. 8.

Mary Pickford's "Forever Yours" was adapted by Benjamin Glazer from the play by Rudolf Beiser and May Edington. Marshall Neilan is directing. Kenneth MacKenna, Don Alvarado, Ian MacLaren and Charlotte Walker are in the supporting cast. It will be released Nov. 29.

"Whispers" follows "Alibi" in the group of Roland West-Chester Morris pictures. Release date is set for Dec. 20.

Hamilton Cast With Lille in Comedy Series

Hollywood—Lloyd Hamilton will make 12 comedies for the 1930-31 Educational program. In addition, he will appear in "Are You There?" Fox feature which is to star Beatrice Lille. The arrangements were concluded by Al S. Keller, the star's business manager. William Jobelman has been signed as Hamilton's press representative.

Laye Makes Debut

Evelyn Laye, English musical comedy star, makes her American film debut in a Goldwyn production. Louis Bromfield is writing an original story for her. Tentative title is "Her Glorious Affair." It will be all-Technicolor and will be released Jan. 31.

Irving Berlin will make his debut as a producer with "Lucky Break." He has composed eight new songs for this picture, which is not a revue. It will be in Technicolor and is scheduled for release Feb. 21.

Dolores Del Rio will follow "The Bad One" with a second in which she will do some singing. It is to be released Mar. 14.

Gloria Swanson's Second

Gloria Swanson's second picture will be released April 4.

DeSylva, Brown and Henderson, song writers, will make a picture for release April 25.

Joan Bennett becomes a United Artists star this year and appears in "Smilin' Thru." The release date has not been determined.

Charlie Chaplin's "City Lights," almost completed now, will be released this season as a synchronized film, without dialogue. Chaplin reverts to the hilarious antics of his earlier period in this comedy. Virginia Cherrill and Harry Myers are in the cast.

Jolson in "Sons o' Guns"

Al Jolson's first vehicle as a United Artists star will be "Sons o' Guns," New York stage hit. It will go into production in September.

"Hell's Angels" has been completed and is to be released generally after its $2 showings, which Sid Grauman will supervise. Ben Lyon, James Hall, Jean Harlow, Jane Winton, Thelma Todd and Carl Von Haartman are in the cast.

"Sea Dogs," an original by John W. Considine, will be filmed this summer. It is a comedy and will be made entirely in Technicolor and at sea.

Paramount to Operate on "Subject to Change" Policy to Fit Market Needs

Paul Innocent

"There is no truth," writes Leo T. Heatley in the New York Journal, "in the rumor that Paul Whiteman is posing for 'That Coming Shadow' pictures in the cigarette ads."

Mullin Division Manager of Publix Circuit in N. E.

M. J. Mullin, who has been division manager for Publix in the Northwest ever since the circuit took over Finkelstein & Ruben's holdings, has been named division manager for New England. He succeeds J. J. Fitzgibbons, who has been appointed general manager in Canada for Paramount Publix.

L. J. Ludwig has been named to succeed Mullin at Minneapolis, with M. L. Gowthorpe succeeding Ludwig as cost control executive. T. X. Jones, who has been Gowthorpe's assistant, succeeds him as accounting department executive.

Foreign Force Arriving For Paramount Meeting

John W. Hicks, Jr., general manager of the Paramount organization for Australia, together with Mrs. Hicks and their son, have arrived in New York on their annual visit to the Paramount home office. Another Paramount foreign representative to arrive is Clarence C. Margon of Mexico City, general manager of the Paramount organization for Mexico and Central America. They will attend the Paramount convention at Atlantic City.

Other foreign representatives who will attend the convention are: Andre Ullmann, manager of the Paramount, Paris; Isaac Collins, Newcastle, England, district manager; D. Gilpin, branch manager at Leeds, England; Oswald Cohen, London branch manager, and Norman Wilde, head salesman, Manchester, England, branch.

May Return to Paramount

Monta Bell, just resigned as a supervisor for Paramount in the East, may return later to direct "Skippy." He is now on his way to Honolulu for a rest.

Studio gossip has it that poor health, plus difficulties over story treatments and selections, led to his resignation.

Concentrating in N. Y.

Policy of Publix to operate all of its theatres via direct control from New York brings John Balaban of B. and K. here in the fall. From his office at Publix headquarters he will handle operations in Chicago and Detroit.

60 to 65 Features Planned But Elasticity Is Slated to Prevail

Elastic production policy of Paramount-Publix will be continued in 1929-30, Motion Picture News learns, with between 60 and 65 pictures slated to comprise the production schedule. The line-up for the new year is to be outlined starting next Friday at the Paramount sales convention at Atlantic City. The convention continues from Friday to Monday.

Under the policy, adopted this year, Paramount-Publix will shape its program to fit the market's needs as the season progresses. On the 1929-30 program, as an example, 11 pictures were dropped and 12 others substituted. This was done because it was found that changing public tastes dictated a revision of plans.

The Jack Oakie pictures are a case in point, the company deciding to star him when it found he was a good box office bet. When it was found that there was a definite trend toward westerns, this type of picture were substituted for others on the schedule. The company will pursue a similar course on its 1930-31 product, it is understood.

Home office and production executives, branch managers and salesmen from the East, South and Middle West will attend the Atlantic City gathering. A second convention is to be held for western branch managers and salesmen May 23-26 at San Francisco.

Schulberg Here

B. P. Schulberg has arrived in New York and is slated to attend the Atlantic City and San Francisco conventions of Paramount-Publix.

The Chevalier Rash

It's spreading. Women first began to fall for the infectious Frenchman when "Innocents of Paris" hit the market, despite the creaky story which introduced him. But with "The Love Parade," the collective sighs of damsels, young and old, all over the land crystallized into what threatened to become a national epidemic.

Now his third, "The Big Pond," seems destined to start the female contingents raving all over again.

For in it, Chevalier is immensely clever and vastly amusing.

One of The Insiders caught it the other night. What with the delighted chuckles of the women in the immediate vicinity and the hee-haws of the men, the reviewing job became one tough affair.

Not the least important incident of the event was the gracefully poised performance of Claudette Colbert as the target of Chevalier's love-making. He may exude S. A. for the women, but Miss Colbert is no slouch where the men are concerned.

That gal is headed straight for the marquee lights.

KANN

Well, Mr. Lasky?

Hollywood—Jesse L. Lasky states: "Years spent in studying the reactions of public opinion have educated producers to the kind of entertainment right thinking people most desire."

Outline RKO's 36 At Hollywood Sales Meeting

RKO's 36 pictures for the 1930-31 season are to be outlined at the annual sales convention which starts May 22 at the company's Hollywood studios. Talks by President Joseph I. Schnitzer, William Le Baron, vice-president in charge of production, and Lee Marcus, vice-president in charge of distribution, are among those scheduled. Inspection tours of the studio and receptions by the stars are being arranged.

Allied Poll to Decide Fate of 5-5-5 Confab

ducting a poll of Allied board members to determine future course of the association respecting the 5-5-5 conferences.

Myers charged that in the last few weeks there have been a series of attacks against the association and its members "so obviously inspired by the Hays office that we are reluctantly forced to conclude that Mr. Hays doesn't want peace in our industry, at least so far as the exhibitors are concerned."

Myers cited an article alleging that H. M. Richey, general manager of the Michigan exhibitor unit, with a group of promoters is trying to unload $250,000 worth of stock in order to produce a talker version of "Ten Nights in a Barroom." The article continues with the following comment attributed to a "Haysite":

"Funds get low in some of these political exhibitor organizations. Myers is starting his trade paper and Al Steffes wants Publix to give him a theatre, so it looks like the Michigan lieutenant figures his best "in" is to become a producer."

Big Four Closes Deals

C. A. Schultz of Midwest Film Distributors, Kansas City, and L. L. Mills of First Graphic Exchange, Buffalo and Albany, have acquired distribution in their respective territories of the output of Big Four Film Corp., New York, comprising six talker westerns and two comedy features. The dealers were closed by C. A. Stimson, Big Four vice-president.

ERPI, Phonofilm, Photophone Lease Outdoor Sound Equipment for Summer

Airdromes as Opposish to Theatres; Lessees Must Be Clients

Sound reproducing equipment will be leased to exhibitors for use in open air theatres or for outdoor shows by Electrical Research Products, RCA-Photophone and General Talking Pictures. The lease will be for a minimum of 13 weeks with option to purchase, and the rental made retroactive in case of purchase of the regular ten-year contract.

Each of the three companies stipulate that the proposed lessee must be a user of its equipment in his all-year-around theatre.

The offer is expected to result in extension of airdromes and outdoor shows this summer. Heretofore, the door was practically closed to them, due to the cost of installation but the new short term lease proposition hurdles this obstacle.

The open air theatre will give "far better sound" than the indoor house, according to Dr. Lee De Forest, inventor of Phonofilm.

Smith's Fox V. P. Reward For Bringing in Clarke

Courtland Smith, former general manager of Fox Movietone News, is officially back in the Fox fold with an impending title of vice-president of the film company. No duties have been assigned him as yet.

The appointment is construed as recognition for bringing Harley L. Clarke into the negotiations which culminated when the latter bought William Fox's voting stock and thereby assumed control of both Fox Film and Fox Theatres. While Smith was interesting Clarke on the one hand, A. C. Blumenthal was persuading Fox it might be a good idea to sell.

Smith found himself outside the company fold in the days following formation of the voting trust agreement of December 3 under terms of which Fox, Harry L. Stuart and John E. Otterson were to bring the Fox enterprises out of their then financial maze and into the clear. He has aligned himself with the group headed by Winnie Sheehan which had signed the now famous round robin letter calling upon Fox to observe the trusteeship agreement later broken on the ground that the other two trustees had not kept faith. This action is reported to have led to Smith's dismissal.

Tibbett-Moore Team

Hollywood—Lawrence Tibbett and Grace Moore are to be teamed by M-G-M in "The New Moon." Jack Conway will direct.

More Worry

Adaptation of indoor portable sound reproducing equipment to outdoor theatres during the summer months is on a rapid increase, spurred on by arrival of warm weather. Parks, golf clubs, amusement parks and other gatherings are expected to utilize the new factor of entertainment to an extent which spells worry for exhibitors.

Billboard Anti-Trust Case Pending

Los Angeles—No date has been set for the trial of the Foster & Kleiser Co., et al, on charges of violation of the Sherman anti-trust law in billboard advertising. An order is asked by the Department of Justice directing the defendants to divest themselves of all interest in the Lafon System, Inc., Los Angeles, which they are alleged to have taken over. The complaint charges the defendants with having established a virtual monopoly in the outdoor advertising business along the Pacific Coast.

Fox 1930-31 List Cut to 48; Sales Meeting on Coast

Grandeur and Foxcolor are to play an important part in next season's Fox program, the sales force will be told. Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager, leaves next week for the Coast. The convention special is to leave New York May 22.

One picture of the 48, "Common Clay," starring Constance Bennett, already has been completed on the Coast. Others, including Raoul Walsh's "The Big Trail," and De Sylva, Brown & Henderson's "Just Imagine," are in production.

Janet Gaynor will be starred in three productions, in each one of which she will have a different leading man, and in a fourth, "Oh, For A Man," with Charles Farrell. Janet's leading men in the other three productions will be John Garrick, Frank Albertson and Edmund Lowe.

Farrell To Make Five

Charles Farrell will appear in five productions, including "Oh, For A Man," "Man Who Came Back," with Louise Huntington; "The Princess and The Plumber" with Maureen O'Sullivan; "Liliom" (temporary title) with Paul Muni, Rose Hobart, Estelle Taylor and others, and "He And She" with Joyce Compton.

Victor McLaglen and Edmund Lowe will be seen together in "Women of All Nations" as Flagg and Quirt, respectively. McLaglen will appear in three others. Edmund Lowe who stars in John Ford's "Born Reckless," will also be starred in three other productions.

Warner Baxter will appear in four productions: "Their Mad Moment" in which Luana Alcaniz, recently signed, will be included in the cast; "Renegade" with Luana Alcaniz, El Brendel, Kenneth MacKenna, and Warren Hymer; "The Cisco Kid," with Joyce Compton, Luana Alcaniz, J. M. Kerrigan and Frank Albertson, and "The Spider" with Marguerite Churchill, Lee Tracy and Humphrey Bogart.

Will Rogers will be starred in two productions, a modern adaptation of Mark Twain's "Connecticut Yankee" and another that will go into work as "See America First."

Fifi Dorsay will appear in three productions and Marjorie White in four. El Brendel will appear in four productions while Lois Moran will be seen in three, according to the present assignments.

George O'Brien will star in Zane Grey's "Last Of The Duanes" with Lucile Browne, Myrna Loy, Walter McGrail, Frank Campeau, James Bradbury, Jr., and others, and in "Every Inch A Man" with Marguerite Churchill playing opposite.

Ten salesmen and five bookers will make the convention trip to Movietone City. Originally, it had been planned to take but five salesmen, but individual records chalked up induced Grainger to increase the number to ten from five. Individual sales performances were the basis on which the trip awards were made.

The salesmen are: Tom Jennings, Boston; Herndon Edmond, Washington; Anthony Ricci, New York; A. Knapp, Detroit; Sam Wheeler, Pittsburgh; David Davidson, Cleveland; R. A. Higdon, Kansas City; Harold Loeb, Chicago; H. Gottlieb and A. Reigelman, Des Moines. The bookers are: F. J. Kelly, Philadelphia; Sam Berg, Boston; Ben Dare, Denver; Frank Hanna, Pittsburgh, and Louis Dreher, Chicago.

W. C. to Build Ten Houses in Pacific N. W.

Portland—Fox West Coast evidently intends safeguarding its position against Warners or anyone else who may come along. Ten theatres are to be built in this territory at a total cost of $2,000,000. Howard Sheehan, vice-president of West Coast, passed the word along while here.

Calexico Set

Calexico, Cal.—A 1,050 seat house is planned here by West Coast. The cost will be $100,000. Perrine and Renfro are architects.

Building Six Exchanges

At least five, and possibly six, new exchange buildings will be erected by Fox. The five are Dallas, Philadelphia, Kansas City, Pittsburgh and Portland, and the sixth Cleveland.

Big Producers Expected to Accept 70 mm As Standard Wide Film Size

Golden Honored

Washington—N. D. Golden, of the Commerce Dept.'s M. P. Division, was presented with a gold medal by the Projection Advisory Council, for his work in furthering projection. The presentation was made by Sen. David I. Walsh, of Massachusetts, on the steps of the White House.

Volume Control From 'Out Front' Urged for Exhibs

Washington—Exhibitors are all wet in their present method of controlling sound volume from the projection booth by projection operators, the Projection Committee of the S.M.P.E. stated in its semi-annual convention report.

L. M. Townsend, chairman of the committee, revealed findings of a survey, which favored control of volume directly from the auditorium, where laughter and applause may be immediately coped with, and which the projectionist is usually unaware of in a sound-proof booth.

Townsend's committee urged exhibitors to adopt the new method for better sound results, and suggested that, wherever possible, the theatre engage a trained technician who has a sense of showmanship and an appreciation of music to operate the volume control. A new fader was presented by Donald Whiting, of Fox-Heart newsreel. Whiting claims the device will satisfactorily allow for a changeover from the old booth method to the new system.

Definite Action to Be Taken by Major Companies in Near Future

Washington—Inability of leading producing interests to get together on a standard size wide film for the entire industry, which has led to a halt in this new development, will be definitely straightened out soon.

Working with the Society of M. P. Engineers, representatives of major companies are untangling the mess brought about by radical differences of opinion among studio technicians regarding a standard size. In the near future, they will make their decision, and, Motion Picture News learns, it will be the acceptance of 70 mm. by all companies. Sixty-five mm. is still being fought for by certain interests, which are expected to be over-ruled.

It is understood that all major companies have agreed to abide by decision of the committee.

When standardization is affected, a general spurt toward final development of apparatus, and the elimination of "bugs" from the mechanism will be made. Within a year first wholesale steps in the changeover from 35 mm. to 70 will have been launched.

Practically all technical lab development work was brought to a halt until definite action is agreed upon by all producers.

To Award Annual Medal To Engineering Leader

Washington—Annual award of a medal or placque to the engineer doing the most for progress of film science will be made by the S.M.P.E. Initial presentation is scheduled for the Fall meeting.

One Non-Theat. Installed

Washington—The Hotchkiss School in Connecticut is the only non-theatrical institution on record as having sound equipment, G. E. Matthews told the S.M.P.E. convention in his "Progress Report." Another school in New Jersey is wiring, he stated.

340 Times More Life Claimed for All Sound Prints

Washington—New revolving lens wheel projector discussed by Arthur J. Holman, New England electrical engineer, at the S. M. P. E. convention, is ready for marketing. Holman stated that a tie-up will be made with a national projector organization, which will sell the device at approximately the same price of standard makes.

Holman told Motion Picture News that his new machine will enable a sound print to run 500 times, as against the present average of 60 screenings, and a proportionate better performance with silent prints. Strain on film is said to be greatly alleviated by the mechanism.

The projector, a continuous non-intermittent movement, has 16 lenses which, the inventor claims, can be manufactured inexpensively by a new method for grinding and polishing.

Holman brought his laboratory full-sized model machine to the Wardman Park auditorium to demonstrate working mechanism to S.M.P.E. members. He screened a two-reel Technicolor subject successfully.

S. M. P. E. Delegates at Spring Confab in Washington

On the S. M. P. E. Sidelines

By JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

N. D. ("Nate") Golden, U. S. Dept. of Commerce (M. P. Division) attache, worked as industriously as any S. M. P. E. committee or convention chairman. "Nate" arranged for the boys to shake hands with his big boss, Mr. Hoover, on the White House lawn, and concluded arrangements for the 33-station radio hookup which brought speeches of Will H. Hays, C. Francis Jenkins, Wm. P. Connery, Jr., and John I. Crabtree over Columbia Broadcasting time Wednesday night during the big banquet.

Golden made the Wardman Park Hotel his headquarters during the four-day confab, despite the fact that his home is but five blocks from the hotel. Just a regular guy.

Big producer-distributors made strong bids to outdo each other in making the delegates happy. Open house was declared at Warners' Earle, Metropolitan and Ambassador, at Fox's, and at Loew's Palace and Columbia, and RKO's Keith, all down town theatres where members and their wives were admitted without charge.

Harley L. Clarke, Fox chief, assigned 20 performers to entertain at the banquet, and, not content with that, sent this wire:

"How can I be of further assistance to the S. M. P. E. convention and its delegates?"

Monday morning saw a stiff race between the N. Y. Herald-Tribune and Empeenews, to reach the "studious" engineers with "hot" news of the day. Of course, the Herald ran second. General Theatre Equipment arranged to have copies of the latter sheet at the doorstep of all rooms.

Mrs. C. Francis Jenkins entertained the better halves at a luncheon at her home on Tuesday.

RCA and International Projector spent six grand in rigging up the Wardman Park little theatre with sound reproducing apparatus. Each outfit had men on the job for seven days during installation wiring. Washington operators' local sent along a crew—and forgot the bill. First occurrence of its kind on record, 'tis said.

Tiffany presented "Journey's End" on Monday. And Fox sent along McCormack's "Song o' My Heart" for Sunday showing to the delegates.

J. H. Kurlander, of Westinghouse Lamp at Bloomfield, N. J., is successor to Robert S. Burnap, RCA lab man from Harrison, N. J., who resigned the secretaryship because he found plenty to do at the Radiotron plant when he was assigned new duties.

Let's hope the medical films will not influence the boys to the extent that backyard cats will be found mysteriously chopped-up.

Carl Gregory, pal of many S. M. P. E. members, wired congrats from dear 'ol Lunnon, where he is now engaged in digging up the dirt on statistical facts in the film engineering field which he will present in a paper at the Fall meet.

Frank Woods sent his best from Hollywood and shipped Ralph Townsend from the Gold Coast to watch things for the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences.

Smiling P. A. McGuire, International Projector Corp., New York, arrived just about 12 hours late. The reason—oh, well, ask "Mac."

C. Francis Jenkins, one of the "fathers" of television, was called upon to read his paper, and before he alighted from the platform, the house roared with thunderous applause. The reason: Jenkins was founder and first president of the society.

Mrs. Walter Prosser, wife of Col. W. E. Prosser, graciously performed the duties of hostess to delegates' wives.

Bill Kunzman, of Cleveland, spent half of National Carbon's profits for the next year in arranging entertainment features. Bill agrees that being chairman of arrangements is not a soft berth.

Will Whitmore, genial "ERPI" New York home office man, kept the newshounds well oiled—with stories. Will is chairman of the publicity committee and picked a tough job when he called in the Washington reporters. Those birds aren't news-satisfied unless you give them a tip-off on a tariff fight, or a Hoover fishing trip. Just unenthusiastic about engineers.

Sound has brought into the Society in recent months many young engineers—most of them nice fellows, but a few there are who take things entirely too seriously—sez we.

Late Tuesday night—or we should say in the wee hours of Wednesday morning—a group of "ERPI" and RCA technicians set out to see the town. One of the RCA men started a discussion about the "superiority" of RCA product and lab men over ERPI's—the result was a verbal battle which continued long after effects of the sightseeing had worn off. To amicably settle things they decided both companies were the "best" in the field.

Arthur Dickinson and Burt New, both of the Hays staff, were on hand as M. P. P. D. A. representatives. Burt manages the Washington office.

Meeting the Great

Washington — Many S.M.P.E. engineers and their wives, unfamiliar with ways of the White House, gave more thought to the anticipation of meeting President Hoover than to food and sleep. They drew elaborate mental pictures of the exciting moment when Hoover would extend his broad hand, and with a pleasing smile, ask: "Why, how are you, Mr. and Mrs. So and So?"

BUT—and a big but—when the time came for the society to meet Al Smith's old sparring partner, and the hundreds of delegates and their women folks were assembled on the White House lawn, breathlessly awaiting the arrival, certain faces were seen to register keen disappointment. And all because the President did not shake hands with anyone, spending less than two minutes to pose with the gang for the camera boys. He probably meets a dozen convention bodies every day, and has grown callous to back slapping. Or it may be he was worried over the hot Senate fight over his appointee, Judge Parker to the Supreme Court.

WIDE film not only has big producers worried, but non-theat companies as well. Sound kicked the hole out of the bucket in the educational field and the recuperation period was just about to commence, when wide film came along to mess up things again.

Major-General Herbert B. Crosby opened the sessions with a warm word of welcome.

If the big chiefs had as much trouble securing action in the technical labs as reporters have in getting yarns from these engineering boys, it would be just too bad for the industry.

W. C. ("Bill") Kunzman, National Carbon, Cleveland, piloted arrangements—social and otherwise—for the convention. A perfect job, Bill, nicely handled.

Franklin S. Irby, of McGraw-Hill, a non-member of the motion picture industry, told the delegates a good deal more about recent and future economic changes than most of the learned professors of films realized had existed.

Sound films of Wm. De Mille, Harley Clarke, David Sarnoff, George Eastman and others were one of the many banquet highlights.

The boys gave a big hand to Glenn Matthews, Kodak research exec, for his splendid presentation of the semi-annual report on "Progress in the Industry." Matthews gave the members a treat with film and slide demonstrations of new steps in engineering science.

A member of the McGraw-Hill organization, technical publishers, began to distribute copies of the paper on economic changes in the business read by F. S. Irby. Public distribution of papers before their appearance in the S. M. P. E. "Journal," of course, is taboo—and when the powers that be saw what was happening, fur began to fly—and how!

C. A. Morrison, of Eastman's school films department, was suddenly stricken ill before his departure from Kodak Park, and, as a result, his paper on a camera study of sprinters in the 100-yard dash did not go up on the board.

Richard ("Dick") Brady, Eastman Kodaker in New York, led a strong E-K contingent to Washington.

"Jimmy" Cameron held the spot among a group of oldtimers who sat up all Tuesday night discussing the days that were. Cameron told the boys of the old battles between Powers and Simplex, long before Harley Clarke entered the field and eliminated a keen competitive situation which continuously kept both companies broke. Clarke's solution was simple: merger of both companies.

George Mitchell, Mitchell Camera Co., and E. C. Richardson, Mole-Richardon, attended the meet as representatives of the Pacific Coast section.

M. W. Palmer, Paramount studio man in the East, one of the challengers of Malter's assertions, pointed out an interesting fact concerning the advance in quality sound reproduction.

65,000 Houses in Russia by '33 in Plan to Capture Place in Film Sun

Soundless, Colorless

Washington—Although both sound and color in Russia have passed the stage of theoretical discussions and laboratory research, both factors have as yet failed to indelibly impress Soviet industry, according to L. I. Monosson, who told the S.M.P.E. convention delegates that not a single color company has started actual production, and only a few dozen reproducing devices have been marketed.

The government, he said, recognizes the great potentialities of sound, particularly in educational work.

Predicted Tilt On Horn Types Materializes

Washington—As exclusively stated in Motion Picture News, discussion of horns and battlers by T. Malter, RCA Photophone, waxed hot on the S.M.P.E. convention floor.

Malter's comparison of the two chief types of loudspeakers used in theatres, was based on what was said to be actual experimental measurements and tests governed frequency range, uniformity of response, radiation of distribution characteristics, efficiency and input power capacity.

He contended that the directional baffle type speaker is superior in frequency range and uniformity of response to the horn type, although both were the same with respect to radiation distribution characteristics and input power capacity. The horn type is slightly superior to the baffle insofar as efficiency is concerned, Malter stated.

The experimental measurements and tests were used to explain, in technical detail, the greater naturalness of reproduction of both speech and music in theatres with the directional baffle.

No sooner had Malter completed his paper, than a dozen reproducing engineers jumped to the floor to take exception to the statements. Arguments were heard for more than an hour on the subject.

Kodak Develops Devices For Filming Vocal Cords

Washington—New instruments developed at the Kodak research lab at Rochester for photographing vocal cords for observation and experimentation were discussed by C. Tuttle before the S.M.P.E. convention.

Inaccessibility of the vocal cords has made it difficult to study them, but the new technique in motion photography eliminates that condition. It proves, according to the Kodak technicians, the falsity of some of the generally accepted theories of vocalization.

Singers, phonetical experts, surgeons, teachers of the deaf and physicians will benefit by the discovery, it was pointed out.

Five-Year Economic Program of Government Will Push All Industry Factors

Washington—Believing that America's supremacy in the motion picture field is largely attributable to the staunch support of its large, domestic market, Russia will attempt to develop one of the world's most important film industries within its own borders, with 1,610,000,000 people annually attending 65,349 theatres which the government plans to have in operation by 1932-33. The total number of houses now showing films in that country reaches less than 9,700.

The Soviet's five-year plan of economic development, introduced about one year ago, will embrace the film industry and all its factors, it was revealed by L. I. Monosson, head of Russia's film agents in New York, who discussed the inner workings of the plan before the annual Spring convention of the Society of M. P. Engineers.

Eight thousand four hundred theatres will be built in rural districts. Traveling theatres will total 20,300; 16,500 schools will show regularly and urban houses are expected to reach 1,300. Clubs, especially workers' clubs, showing pictures will approximate 3,500.

Law Governs Building

The Soviet directly controls all film operations in the country, and it is the plan of government chiefs to force all small farm regions and municipalities with populations of 1,000, or more, to provide screen entertainment.

One hundred millions will be spent to "cinemafy" rural districts, according to Monosson.

All government producing organizations will be built up to a point where they can collectively turn out 1,300 feature films annually. More than 1,000 educational pictures will be made, in addition. Although the treasury will supply funds for production, the Soviet insists that costs be lowered in proportion to the yearly increase in feature product between now and 1932-33. Five months were allotted each unit for production of a feature.

New Studio Ideas

Washington—New studio now being built by the Soviet government at Moscow, will have several unique features. The building is constructed on an angle so that one end is even with the ground, enabling easy access to the plant by automobiles, trucks, horses, etc., needed in production.

Two indoor water tanks are contained in the building for under-sea pictures.

Directors, cameramen, players and technicians all have separate rooms for preparation. All movable equipment will be handled in the plant by means of pulleys on steel overhead rails.

Unexpurgated Sovietism

Washington — L. I. Monosson's S.M.P.E. paper on "Russian Cinematography" was the first presentation of an inside picture of the business in Russia. Monosson told a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Amkino Corp., official Soviet film agency in the United States, is his company.

His paper read ran to such considerable length that several "reminders" were made to cut the discussion short. This was done only after J. Crabtree set a third time deadline.

Ampro to Market New "Non Theat" Projector Line

Washington—Ampro Corp., of Chicago, will have a new projector for the non-theatrical field. Two models will sell at $165 and $195, respectively, both running 16 m.m. on automatic rewinds. The latter is for use on ac, 100 volt, 60 cycle current only. The smaller machine can be operated on ac or dc, at 100 to 125 volts, 25 to 60 cycles.

Weber Sells Disc Device At $150 for Small House

Weber Machine Corporation now is marketing a new model low cost disc equipment to sell at $150 per pair for turntables, pick-ups and change-over faders. Audak or Erla pick-ups are furnished as optional equipment.

The new unit is being sold under the name of Syncrodisk Junior. It is a compact, simplified design of the Syncrodisk equipment which Weber has been manufacturing for some time. In offering the junior model the company states it has in mind the small theatre, the country town theatre, town hall or grange hall where pictures are shown regularly or only occasionally.

Lab Methods Discussed At Engineers' Convention

Washington—Two new methods for the film laboratory were discussed in papers read before the S. M. P. E. by M. W. Palmer, Paramount Eastern studios, and R. P. Loveland, Kodak Research lab.

Palmer's has to do with a new system of timing negative, while a method for the determination of exposure in cinematography was developed by Loveland.

Another lab paper was on the boards and detailed some printing problems affecting sound quality. J. Crabtree authored the latter.

Trouble Ahead for Theatres, Studios When Nat'l Electric Code Is Revised

Committees Now Working Out New Rules to Govern Sound Installations

Washington—Radical electrical and technical changes will be ordered by local fire and electrical inspection departments throughout the United States, when the National Fire Protection Association adopts a new set of rules governing wiring and installation of sound equipment in theatres and studios, and in laboratories.

J. R. Manheimer, of E-J Electric Installation Co., New York, an authority on fire and electrical rules, told S. M. P. E. delegates, assembled here for their annual Spring confab, that committees appointed by the national association had been working out new problems presented by sound to recommend needed changes in electrical ordinances The recommendations, he pointed out, will be made part of the National Electrical Code, and are due in February, 1931.

Looks Like Trouble

The new "musts" and "don'ts," it is anticipated, will give headaches to theatres, studios and labs where wiring and mechanism will be ordered changed. Changes and violations may be ruled on a wholesale scale.

The revised code, first to be issued since inception of sound, will take in lighting, wiring, mechanism, cables, switches, fuses and other electrical factors. In addition, a set of rules will be laid down governing scenery and the locking of doors in studios where exits are kept closed because of sound recording. Closed doors will be marked taboo. The three-wire system of wiring, where dimmers are used in theatres, are likewise expected to be declared a violation and ordered changed.

There is a real conflict existing between electrical, fire and city inspectors because of the absence of rules and regulations affecting new sound factors. The new code will be shaped to eliminate these differences.

Object of the electrical code as recommended by the Nat'l Fire Protection Ass'n is to provide definite requirements for the installation and subsequent safe operation of electric circuits, conduit systems, distribution centers and electrical equipment. It is admitted that recent progress in electrics in the picture industry has been so rapid, the code has been unable to keep pace with it.

Manheimer pointed out to the society that certain new items, if adopted, would cause considerable trouble to the industry. For instance, one section states that "wires of different systems shall not occupy the same conduit." This is ambiguously covered by the code, and is expected to cause a stiff tilt among inspectors if not corrected, or clarified.

The question of code requirements in the studio will probably be more complex when the new code is passed than in any other division of the industry.

The following changes governing sound recording and reproducing systems are expected to be incorporated:

Provision for automatic overload protective devices, preferably using the smallest practical rating or adjustment with which the apparatus will operate.

Circuits supplying B or C voltage will be regulated to protect automatic overload protective devices rated at not more than one ampere.

Wires may be grouped in the same conduit, armored cable, metal raceway, pull box, junction box or flexible cord, types KS or SJ, between receptacles and loud speakers of camera booths, under certain conditions, mentioned below, provided all wires have insulation rated for the maximum voltage applied to any wire. In no case shall the insulation requirements be less than that for 600 volts.

Conditions governing grouping of wires:

1. Wires emanating from the same piece of apparatus and or terminating in the same piece of apparatus.
2. Wires that carry current from a primary source which is used to drive a motor whose speed is electrically controlled or to drive a group of motors operating in synchronism may be run in the same conduit, etc., with wires that carry other currents of characteristics differing from the characteristics of the primary current, required for the operation and or synchronization of a motor or group of motors.
3. Wires to loud speaker fields and armatures, also from receptacles to camera booths provided that when receptacles and plugs are used they shall be of polarized type.
4. Wires from the projector sound head and or turn table to amplifier equipment.
5. Wires to supply A, B and C voltage from motor generators and batteries provided they are protected by automatic overload protective devices installed at the nearest accessible point to the batteries or generators.

Input leads to a motor generator or to a rotary converter shall be run separately from wires emanating therefrom.

Storage batteries shall be installed in accordance with proposed requirements of revised Article 10.

Insulation of wires exposed to oil or oil dripping shall be of a type approved for interior wiring that will not be injured by oil or shall be protected from such injury by a seamless metallic covering over the insulation.

The number of wires in any one conduit shall be limited. That for metallic trough raceway shall comply with certain requirements, allowing 40% of area for conductors.

Wires terminating in groups at patch panels or similar connection boards shall be covered with a single wrapping of asbestos tape or equivalent material over convenient groups. This is not required where the metallic covering is carried to within six inches of the terminals.

Wires to or from A batteries shall be run in conduit or duct compartments and separated from all other wires, unless all wires and cables in the same conduit or duct are sheathed with lead or other approved shielding.

All metal raceways shall be of not less than 14 BS sheet metal gauge. They shall have ample strength and rigidity in order that they will keep their shape. Seams and corners, back edges and splices in sheet metal shall be flanged or lapped over, unless made of continuous weld, or they may be butt jointed if reinforced by flat iron strips of same thickness of metal as that of raceway. Seams shall now show open cracks when finished and before the raceway or ducts are painted or enameled. Covers shall be of same gauge metal as raceway and secured to raceway by machine screws spaced not more than one foot apart. If raceway is placed in floor and has cover flush with the surface, covers of at least ¼ inch steel must be used.

Metal trough raceway may be installed in concealed space if run in a straight line between outlet or junction boxes. Covers of boxes must be accessible. Edges of metal must be rounded at outlet or junction boxes, and all rough projections smoothed to prevent abrasion of insulation or conductors. Raceways made up of sections shall contain a ground conductor to which each section shall be bonded and grounded as prescribed by Article 9.

The foregoing recommendations refer only to those sections of the new code which involve sound recording and reproduction. There are still a large number of additional items governing the studio, laboratory and theatre for which the antiquated code does not make provision and which will be ordered incorporated. Grounding and special attachment plugs are in the second group. Vaporproof fixtures, exit and emergency lights, silencing signals, sound stages, portable cables, storage batteries, cells, racks, trays, and other factors will be included in the general revision of laws.

"Allez Oop"

Washington—Scientific and medical films have advanced considerably in the past two years, it was revealed at the S.M.P.E. convention here, where doctors and scientists showed this progress in films. Objects can now be magnified for picture work to at least 1,200 times. A few years ago, it was stated, 120 times was the largest magnification obtainable.

Hays Working on Changes

Washington—Will H. Hays has appointed a committee to work with the National Board of Fire Underwriters in a revision of regulations governing laboratories and storage of film. They will be ready in two months.

The disastrous New York Pathe fire last Winter is understood to have been the influencing factor in revising storage laws.

RCA Preparing Victor Unit for Radio Movie Field

RCA-Victor is quietly conducting research work in development of a popular-priced radio home movie set at its laboratory in Camden, N. J.

When the field opens up, the company, it is understood, expects to be all primed for a battle for a large slice of the new business, using Radiola sets for the radio-picture broadcasting. Unlike most companies in the television field, RCA has its own radio to market, a set which has been constantly built up from the merchandising standpoint, thereby paving the way for a strong "in" on the home movie market.

RCA Television Work Discussed at S.M.P.E.

Washington—Radio-Victor's new cathode ray system of television, which radically differs from the scanning-disc method, was revealed by its inventor, Dr. V. Zworykin, at the S. M. P. E. Spring convention this week.

In the cathode ray system, there are no mechanical moving parts at the receiver, hence no noise. There is no noticeable flicker to the picture, which is painted in green by a pencil of cathode rays on a fluorescent screen. Dr. Zworykin agreed that television still had a long way to go before reaching perfection. He is working with RCA-Victor's "advance development" staff on the device.

Standard Projector for Tests

Zworykin uses a standard motion picture projector, rebuilt so that the film moves downward at a constant speed. This motion constitutes the vertical component of scanning.

The horizontal scanning is accomplished by deflecting a beam of light by means of a mirror mounted on a reed vibrating at its natural frequency, its motion being sustained by a vacuum tube. The light of the beam is focused to a fine spot on the film. After passing the film the light is refocused to a single spot on the photocell, so that photocell current will be proportional to the density of the spot of the film being scanned at any instant.

The receiver consists of a high vacuum cathode ray tube, or Kinescope, operating at about 3,000 volts, and so constructed that the intensity of the beam may be modulated without affecting the deflection of the beam. The picture is reproduced by causing the cathode beam to scan the fluorescent screen exactly in synchronism with the beam of light scanning the film at the transmitter. The cathode beam is modulated by the amplified photocell impulses, hence the light emitted by the fluorescent screen, reproduces an image of the film —passing the transmitter.

Automatic Operation

The synchronization is accomplished on the same radio channel which serves for transmission of the picture impulses. The separation of various components is accomplished by electric filters.

The operation of the receiver is completely automatic and noiseless. An image of about 5 by 6 inches is sufficiently brilliant to be viewed by a large group of people of people in a normally illuminated room.

Goin' to Lunnon

Washington—S.M.P.E. delegates to the Spring 1931 convention may travel to London. An invitation was received by officers of the society from its London branch, and, it is understood, favorable action may be taken.

The next meeting to be held in the Fall, is a toss-up between New York and Detroit, with leanings towards the former. Hollywood is expected to be the scene of one of the two 1931 confabs.

This Fall's session is the society's 28th convention, having been founded 14 years ago by C. Francis Jenkins, who was also its first president.

Talking Pictures—"The Great Internationalist"

Washington—Harold B. Franklin, Wesco Theatres president, predicted a melting of all languages by talking films, in a paper read before the S. M. P. E. convention. Franklin believes that the motion picture has always gone further in every angle than originally anyone dreamed it could go as has been the case with other great inventions; that the silent picture exercised a world-wide influence both social and commercial which merchants and showmen did not realize until long after the influences had taken effect; that silent motion pictures were the greatest medium of exchange of ideas and ideals which the world ever saw but that talking pictures will be even more effective and influential, because speech has made people out of what were legendary shadows; that by this intensification of the vocal screen the peoples of different nations will be more directly and vitally aware of each other's humanness and similarity; that the first phase of this revolution will be a dividing of the world with a few major language divisions such as all Spanish people seeing the same Spanish pictures and all English people seeing the same English pictures, etc.; that finally human curiosity and ambition being what they are, even this language barrier will melt and we will have a cosmic understanding that seems wild and impossible now.

Automatic Volume Control in Theatre with New Track

Washington — M-G-M's chief engineer, Wesley Miller, has developed automatic volume control in theatres by use of the "squeeze track" method. The track produces an adjustable width variable density sound track having a volume range at least 12 DB greater than standard track. Changes in track width are accompanied by corresponding changes in surface noise.

Medical Field Working Out Standardization

Washington—Dr. Heinz Rosenberg told S.M.P.E. members assembled here that production in the medical and scientific fields had reached the near-perfect stage. Dr. Rosenberg, who is associated with Rockefeller Institute, stated that leaders in both fields have been concentrating during the past two years on standardization of equipment to be used in filming.

"Television Not Ready for Five Years," Jenkins

Washington—Radio television broadcasts to theatres will not be perfected for practical use for another five years, C. Francis Jenkins told a representative of Motion Picture News in an exclusive interview here. Radio movies for the home is only a few weeks away, however.

Jenkins has been broadcasting from his laboratory in Washington six nights a week during the past two years, he told S. M. P. E. conventioneers. He estimates that nearly 20,000 home sets are now in operation. In the present programs, he is forced to use cartoons and black and white silhouettes for his shows because cost of a regular show is prohibitive, due to the comparatively few sets in operation.

Jenkins will soon build a new broadcasting studio and stated that he expects to successfully radio a performance directly to a Washington theatre in about six months, as part of experimentation.

Home television sets, with radios, it is understood, will be marketed for approximately $250.

When television reaches the theatre stage, Jenkins predicts practically the same basis of distribution as is now used in selling films to theatres.

The drum type scanner system and the disc system are both unpractical, according to Jenkins, who proposes to develop a new system.

Over-All Characteristics Of Sound Film Discussed

Washington—A graphical method of predetermining over-all film characteristics is now employed by R. F. Nicholson, who discussed "Aeo Light Recording" before the S. M. P. E. confab.

Nicholson described the glow discharge type of sound recording, a process developed at the Case laboratory and successfully commercialized by Fox-Case Corp. It shares the title "Movietone" with the Western Electric light valve system, both processes yielding variable density records.

Due to the limitations peculiar to the Aeo light, the records are not processed similarly to light valve records. In the latter the unmodulated intensity can be selected almost at will, while in the former, the choice exists only over a limited range.

S.M.P.E. Awards Honorary Membership to Foreigners

Washington—S.M.P.E. voted favorably on board of governors' decision to award honorary memberships in the society to the presidencies of the Royal Photographic Society, London, and the German photographic society in Berlin. Both awards were made to the chairman's office of each organization and not to any individual.

Action on honorary membership to three American engineers and scientists was held until Fall. It is understood W. DeForest, Sean A. LeRoy and Eugene Lauste were up for consideration.

Warners' Switch to Sound-on-Film Is Hinted in Vitaphone Engineer's Talk

'Way Back When

Washington—"Jimmy" Cameron was discussing the old days with a group of "vet" S. M. P. E. projectionists, when the conversation drifted to the operator's job of twenty years ago. Fourteen bucks a week was the princely salary stipend, and that included operating, and other odd tasks. Now—of course—things are entirely different. They use Cadillacs to ride to work in and squawk if asked to stay on the job more than seven or eight hours a day.

Engineers Get Tribute from Thomas Edison

Washington—"Pay more attention to engineers than to politicians," was Thomas A. Edison's response to the question, "What is the biggest thing the American people can accomplish during the next year and why?" President Crabtree declared at the banquet Wednesday.

"As you know, Mr. Edison played a very important part in the development of the motion picture industry and I venture to think that when he gave this answer he had particularly in mind the motion picture engineer," said Mr. Crabtree. "As for the politicians, I am sure that he did not have in mind the many representatives that it has been my pleasure to meet here in Washington who are emulating Mr. Hoover by their interest in technical matters."

New By-Laws Adopted by S. M. P. E. at Convention

Washington—Final action on revision of S.M.P.E. by-laws, voted upon at the 1928 convention in Toronto, was taken at the Spring meeting here, when delegates passed a new code drafted by C. Francis Jenkins, J. G. Bethell and W. C. Hubbard.

Although the code was re-vamped in its entirety, comparatively few radical changes were made. "Sustaining members" were added as a new membership classification and make eligible any individual, firm or corporation contributing to the financial support of the society. Nine thousand dollars have been subscribed by the new group.

Other complete changes involve dues and delinquency in payments, authorization of formation of sub-sections, when petitioned for by 20 members.

Richardson Explains New "Boom" at S.M.P.E.

Washington—S. M. P. E. conventioneers were told of a new microphone boom for studio recording, developed by E. C. Richardson, of Mole-Richardson in Los Angeles. Use of a plurarity of mikes on the set has nearly been eliminated, stated Richardson.

Superior Results Than with Disc Expected; Raps High Expense

Washington—Technical and laboratory tests with sound-on-film are apparently convincing Warners that they are all wet in their vigorous fight on behalf of sound-on-disc.

When Porter Evans, Warner-Vitaphone engineer, was called upon to read his paper: "Disc vs. Film" before the S. M. P. E. convention, delegates expected to hear just another oratory piece plugging disc, which the company has contended since inception of sound was "the only method" for sound reproduction. Instead, Evans gave as many votes to film as he did to disc.

Evans revealed that Warners secure near-equal results with both systems. The company, for many months, has been making all pictures in the two methods for comparison and experimentation. To date, however, only disc product has been released. Whether or not the company will switch over to the dual system has not been determined. Harry Warner is known to favor the disc.

Evans told the delegates that the physical handling of disc was one of the troubles attending distribution of pictures made by that operation. He also stated that handling of records is not too practical because of the hazard in breakage.

Evans maintained that quality of sound in the theatre is the differentiating factor between present successes and previous failures.

Due to the inherent lack of inertia in the film, causing speed variation or flutter, and the necessity of using more complicated and delicate apparatus in film reproduction, Evans stated that better results are obtained at the present time in houses using disc.

Obvious advantages from an operating standpoint of sound-on-film, it was stated, have enhanced greatly and are stimulating the development of this method. Marked improvements have been made so far, Evans said, and conceded that the weak spots in film are gradually being discovered and eliminated. He told the delegates that "we may expect the film to produce equal or superior results to disc" at some future date.

World Installations of W. E. Systems 5,543

Worldwide installations of Western Electric sound systems, according to latest report of Electrical Research Products, now total 5,543. Of this number 3,879 were in the United States and 1,664 in foreign countries.

Owing to the increasing number of installations in the Balkan States, these countries are being listed separately in future. The current report shows 2 installations in Bulgaria, 7 in Jugo-Slavia and 11 in Roumania.

On the Sidelines

Palmer, wonderful that careful selection of players, instead of chance selection as in the early days of sound, is so largely responsible for betterment of talking pictures.

L. T. Marchant, who supervises from Hollywood the work of the technical director in production, told the delegates that majority of the old silent players were okay for sound work. He did admit, however, that the legit player has a better reproducing voice, due to training. Stage players are not allowed to use their stage voices, because they reproduce too artificially; they must talk naturally, he said. Acoustical troubles in the studios in the early days, Maxfield pointed out, seriously reacted against old-timers of the silent screen. This condition has been eliminated, he stated.

President Crabtree abruptly called to an end the hot tilt over horns vs. baffles with this snappy statement: "We have a long way to go before perfection."

The expected battle over "Disc vs. Film," a paper read by Porter Evans, Warner Bros. technician, did not materialize. Evans had a lot to say in favor of both sound methods.

While standing on the Capitol steps for the presentation, by Senator Walsh, of a medal to Nathan D. Golden for his work in the projection field, 38 army planes, participating in Bolling Field maneuvers, flew overhead. The gang had suspicions that Nate arranged for this, being on Uncle Sammie's payroll.

There was a torrid discussion on color which was unscheduled. It developed when the boys sighted three high yaller girls near the Wardman Park.

The Projection Committee of the society gave the "chair" a piece of its mind when time allotted to the committee for the reading of its semi-annual report was cut so short that half of the paper went unread.

The program was made up to last for four weeks, rather than four days, judging from the number of papers and amount of discussion scheduled by the committee. On Tuesday, a motion was made to continue in session until Friday morning. Not a single vote favored the action, thereby verifying our suspicions that Washington is okay for senators and congressmen but rough on the convention trade. They roll up their sidewalks there at nine P. M.

George Blair, popular Eastman Kodak exec, was on hand as one of Kodak Park's army of delegates.

T. Malter (RCA) fired the opening gun in what developed into a long battle by the master minds of horns and baffles. Malter favored the directional baffle type speaker. And others attempted to shoot his arguments full of holes. The winner was still unannounced at the close because private verbal tilts developed soon after Malter left the rostrum.

14,500 Theatres, or 75 Per Cent of U. S. Total, Seen Equipped by 1931

125,000,000 Weekly Audience Predicted Soon by Editor Before S. M. P. E.

Washington—Fourteen thousand, five hundred theatres in the United States will be wired for talkers by the end of this year. Figuring the country's total at 22,600, this means 75 per cent of the possibilities will be sound-equipped in seven months.

Of a total of 27,000 houses in Europe, 2,000 had been wired by the end of 1929 with a 5,000 total in sight by the end of 1930.

These were among highlights of an address delivered by Dr. Franklin S. Irby, associate editor of "Electronics," a McGraw-Hill publication, at one of the early sessions of the S. M. P. E. this week.

Says '29 Was Peak Year

Irby described 1929 as the best in the history of the business. Insofar as wired houses are concerned, he declared the installation impetus here and abroad will fall off considerably by 1931. Installations abroad will be limited, he says, by language barriers and how producers hurdle them.

It is his opinion that average weekly attendance at American theatres will jump from 115,000,000 to 125,000,000 by next year. "It means," he added, "that practically the entire population of the United States attends the picture theatre once every seven days."

On box-office intake, he told the engineers this:

"The average admission price in the key cities is given as 55 cents, while the average for all theatres is approximately 35 cents. Using an average admission price of only 30 cents and 100,000,000 as the average weekly attendance, it is estimated that the total annual paid admissions to American theatres has reached the sum of $1,560,000,000. Of this amount $500,000,000 can be attributed to the introduction of sound pictures.

"In contrast with such stupendous figures even for our present times, let us consider the early development of the railroads. The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad was organized on July 4, 1828, with a capitalization of $5,000,000. During the first 50 years of railroad development it is estimated that only $400,000,000 was expended on construction. Compare this modest sum with the estimated paid admissions of $500,000,000 to our movie-theatres for the first four months of 1930! Times have certainly changed."

Irby, at another point, classed motion pictures as eighth in the rank of manufacturing industries.

"In 1907," he explained, there were 5,000 theatres in the United States; at the beginning of 1930 there were 22,624, representing an average growth of about 740 theatres per year. This average has now decreased to about 500 new theatres annually. It should be noted, however, that the type and size of the new theatres are far superior to the earlier theatres. The total investment in the motion picture industry has increased year by year until today it is about $2,500,000,000 in the United States. In Europe, the total investment in this industry is estimated at $1,00,000,000. Motion pictures, while not classified as a manufacturing industry, may be considered as such from the point of purchase by the public of entertainment as a commodity. Considering this industry in the latter classification it now ranks eighth of all manufacturing industries in this country."

Tracing the growth of chains in the United States, he declared:

"The earlier theatres in this country were individually-owned units. It was not long, however, before ownership or control of more than single units appeared. This was a natural step, in view of chain organizations formed in many other fields. From 1925 to 1930, this growth has been particularly rapid. The introduction of sound pictures has played an important role in advancing these consolidations. Of the total theatres in this country, 5,805 were operated under chain ownership or control as of January, 1930. There were actually 329 theatre chains in existence at that time. These chain-controlled units may be classified under the following groups:

12 chains control 50 or more theatres, each,
15 chains control 25 to 50 theatres,
135 chains control 6 to 25 theatres,
167 chains control 6 or less theatres.

"Of the larger chains there are several which are outstanding. It should be noted that of all theatres now built, only about 25 per cent are chain controlled, but they represent the key theatres throughout the country, and their revenue represents approximately 75 per cent of the total. It is expected that chain growth will continue at a rapid pace, and by 1935 chains large and small will control over 50 per cent of the total theatres in the country.

"Economic reasons for the growth of theatre chains are many. First, they have introduced better theatres, better management and better-planned performances. Second, by representing diversified investments in various sections of a single city, as well as by states, they have provided greater stability and less risk to the investing public. By enabling the building of elaborate and beautiful theatres chains have done much to increase the public's theatre-mindedness. There are other important reasons for this fast chain growth, and expectations for future growth. Huge sums have been invested by the producing companies in studios and equipment. This is particularly true with the advent of sound-recording apparatus. It is seen, therefore, that to protect the future outlet for their pictures, an assured means of distribution under their personal control is necessary. The above reasons, as well as the competition for future production outlets, will be the guiding influence in chain expansion.

"For the motion picture engineer, these concentrations should create a greater demand for his service. The larger chain units will undoubtedly build up their own special research and technical staffs to handle the increased complexity of equipment.

Hold 'Em Back

Washington—Membership committee of the S. M. P. E. has been swamped in the last fiscal year with new applicants. More than 110 new members were accepted in this period. Total roster now includes 724.

At the convention here, favorable action was taken on organization of a Chicago section. The society now has branches in New York, Hollywood, Chicago and London. Sixty names were on the Chicago petition, headed by Jos. A. Dubray, of Bell & Howell, who started the ball rolling for the new division.

New Equipment in Last of S.M.P.E. Discussions

Washington—Final sessions of the S. M. P. E. convention at the Wardman Park were given over almost entirely to new technical methods and devices for the three major branches of the industry.

Papers in the last group scheduled included: A. S. Dworsky, "A New Buffing Machine"; "Modified Film Wazing Machine," by J. Crabtree and C. E. Ives, Kodak Research lab; "Some New Projection Equipment," by H. Griffen, International Projector; "A New Power Amplifier System," by L. Thompson, Bristol Talking Pictures; "A Compounded Geneva Pull-Down Movement for M. P. Apparatings) or exposure time.
neva Pull-Down Movement for M. P. Apparatus"; "A New Method for 16 mm. projectors," by A. Shapiro, Ampro Corp.; methods of storing valuable motion pictures, by J. Crabtree and C. E. Ives; "A Tilting Head and Rolling Tripod," for sound proofed cameras, by E. C. Richardson, Mole-Richardson; designs of phonograph needles, by R. T. Friebus, ERPI; the film camera and the "Brownian Movement," by R. F. Mitchell, Bell & Howell; methods of "Choosing a Sound Screen," by R. P. Rasmusen, Beaded Screen Co.; measuring "Light Valve Resonance by the Absorption Method," by O. O. Ceccarini, M-G-M Culver City studio; new sound proof housings for cameras, by L. E. Clark, Pathe studio, Culver City; "Phonofilm," by C. Tappan, General Talking Pictures; methods for maintaining sound film in exchange operation, by Trevor Faulkner, Paramount studio, Astoria.

U. S. and Industry to Hold Films for Posterity

Washington—Committees will be appointed by President Hoover and the industry "to assure permanent preservation of the picture records of historical events now available and which will hereafter be made by the industry," Will H. Hays declared in an address at the banquet Wednesday night. "Motion pictures in sound and color will be the text books of the future," he said. Touching on the Code of Ethics, he added:

"By next fall or early winter the pictures made under this new and democratic instrument of self-regulation will completely square with the promise of the Code, improving still further the already high quality of American motion pictures. It is a tribute to the vitality and importance of the motion picture art that few subjects have been so widely discussed as this Code."

Other speakers at the banquet included President Crabtree and C. Francis Jenkins. Mr. Crabtree pledged the Society to the "advancement of motion picture engineering and the allied arts and sciences," and Mr. Jenkins predicted that "the day is now within sight when distant scenes and notable events may be reproduced in our houses and on the screens of our theatres simultaneously with their happening, and when motion pictures will be distributed from Hollywood directly by radio, instead of by film."

New Photometer Exposure Meter by Bell & Howell

Washington—Bell & Howell has developed and improved a new photo exposure meter under the Norton patents, according to J. A. Dubray, who described the new device at the S. M. P. E. convention.

The basis of measurement with the photometer is the direct comparison of the brilliancy of a known source of illumination with that of the subject to be photographed. A low intensity filament image is superimposed in the field of view, and with a rheostat control, its intensity of illumination is varied to match that of the subject.

New York Office Planned for S. M. P. E. "Journal"

Washington—Control of publication of the "Journal," monthly technical book published by the S.M.P.E. will be turned over to an editor-manager who will be established in New York offices.

• Stop Us If We're Wrong •

JAMES CRUZE has finished shooting on "Reno," based on the novel by Cornelius Vanderbilt, which marks Ruth Roland's return to the screen. Sono Art-World Wide will distribute. Samuel Zierler, in charge of Cruze Prod., has bought "Fancy Clothes," an original by Gene Towne, who has been signed to do the adaptation, continuity and dialogue.

Vilma Banky is adopting the role of screen star for that of Mrs. Rod La Rocque, housewife. In announcing her retirement, she set at rest reports of a break with her fiancee.

Bryant Washburn makes his first appearance in a feature length talker as the heavy in "Swing High," Pathe circus romance.

The month of May has been designated by managers of Fox West Coast Theatres as "Harold Franklin Month," and special efforts are being made by the house managers to roll up substantial grosses in honor of the circuit head.

Frank Davis, Pathe director, has finished "A Royal Flush" at the Culver City studios.

Cyril Maude has arrived in Hollywood to appear in his first talker, "Grumpy," for Paramount. Richard Arlen will play the leading juvenile part.

Although Joe Cook and his masculine support will provide most of the laughs in the audible screen production of the famous stage success "Rain or Shine," Columbia has signed Louise Fazenda to the cast to provoke additional mirth.

One of the features of Beatrice Lille's first Fox film, "Are You There?" will be a real fox hunt. Director Hamilton MacFadden arranged with sportsmen of Hollywood to take part in the hunt so that the scene would be realistic.

Yes, Mr. Director!

Director—"Go get two more trains! Let's do this thing right!"

—Judge.

C. C. EZELL, general sales manager, and Max Milder, central sales manager of Warner Bros., have purchased 140 acres of land in Canada, on which they will build a large summer camp. They have been busy extending invitations for the summer to Warnerites who enjoy roughing it.

Josh Logan will have Ginger Rogers in the leading feminine role in "The Sap From Syracuse," which is slated to start this week at the Paramount New York studios. This is in the nature of a swift promotion for Miss Rogers.

With the securing of a contract on the Prosperity Group from the Ashton Theatre in New Orleans, all the independent theatres in that city have solidly booked the Columbia product. The achievement was largely due to the work of H. Duval, Columbia's branch manager.

Ramon Novarro is slated to arrive in New York May 11 for a short vacation. He is to broadcast May 13 over the NBC chain, singing a number of songs.

Beverly Jones, assistant editor of the Pathe Audio Review, and Nicholas Cavaliere, staff pictorialist, sailed for Bermuda this week.

One of the youngest playwrights signed by Fox Films, 26-year-old Earle Crooker, has arrived in Hollywood to fulfill a Fox term contract. Crooker is also a lyric writer. He comes of a theatrical family and is related to Blanche and Frances Ring, Edward Sutherland, the director, and Thomas Meighan.

Norman Taurog is the latest addition to the directorial staff of the Paramount New York studio. He joins a group of veteran feature directors which includes Monta Bell, Victor Heerman, Edward Sutherland, Fred Newmeyer and Harry D'Arrast.

R. B. Werkmeister, of the Edmondson Co., operating the Bridge Theatre, Baltimore, has come to California with Mrs. Werkmeister, to attend a convention and for a vacation.

Jack Bechdolt, one of the four outstanding writers recently signed by Columbia, has been assigned to the task of adapting Bert Lytell's stage success, "Brothers," to the screen.

P. Surad, owner of the Family, in Cleveland, is now operating the house himself, following failure of Max Stadley to renew his lease. Surad is running it silent.

EMPLOYEES of the old Fox Theatre in San Diego, Cal., gave a farewell banquet in honor of Harry L. Hartman, for the past six years in charge of West Coast and Fox interests there and recently appointed manager of the southern division with headquarters in Los Angeles. He was presented with a diamond ring.

Boris Lawford and Wendell Corey have been signed by Warners to appear in next year's productions.

The Holmes Herberts are honeymooning at Del Monte, Cal., and upon their return to Hollywood will start on a European trip. Mrs. Holmes was Mrs. Nellie Ince, widow of the late Thomas Ince.

William Powell's "For the Defense" has gone into production at the West Coast studios of Paramount under the direction of John Cromwell. The screen play was written by Oliver H. P. Garrett from a story by Charles Furthmann.

Louis A. Buettner, of Cohoes, N. Y., one of the best known theatre owners in central New York, and a former officer in the state association, was last week elected president of the Rotary Club in his home city.

"Broad Minded" will be the title of Victor McLaglen's next Fox picture, formerly "Dust And Sun." Mona Maris will be McLaglen's leading lady and Solidad Jiminez will portray one of the leading character parts.

Marvin Brown, poster artist for the Loew theatres, Baltimore, has gone to New Orleans for two weeks. He will escort his wife back to Baltimore. Mrs. Brown was a lady-in-waiting to the new Mardi Gras Queen. She was queen several years ago.

Putting the Rest In Restaurant

C. A. Stimson, vice-president of Big Four, lost his pet porter last week. The latter was an ingratiating colored "boy" with a gift of saying funny things without knowing it, no capacity for hard work, but intense concern for his "health" which he always claimed was failing day by day. C. A. S. kept him on more out of sheer good nature and a sense of humor than anything else. The other day the "boy" approached his boss with a wide, dental grin.

"Boss, I's gettin' me a better job, if you-all please. Mah health is bad and I's taking me a job where I kin rest five days a week."

Stimson wanted to know what kind of a job that could be. The "boy" produced from his pocket one of those cards that are seen tacked up on bulletins in front of employment agencies.

"It's suah a gennulman's job, Mistuh Stimson! I works me two days and I rests me five and I gets healthy!"

The card he displayed read:

"WANTED: Dishwasher. $20.00. 5 days. Rest."

The Government and Mergers

"Business opinion appears to regard the growth of mergers and chains as in a formative stage of trial and experiment," in the opinion of Julius Barnes, who suggests that "legislative restriction should not be proposed prematurely." Barnes is chairman of the National Business Survey Conference, formed for business stabilization by President Hoover, an outgrowth of that now famous Wall Street stock crash.

"There has been general acceptance of the philosophy of good wages based on efficient production, with its widespread buying power as a security of all trades," Barnes observes. "This implies an obligation on the part of the worker to make his effort count in production and new responsibilities for the employer—sober study by business management for the avoidance of interruption in employment, for the adjustment of duties with advancing years, and for proper protection against sickness, accident and disabilities of old age," he states.

Clarke Digs Into Operations of Fox Companies

addition, now treasurer of Fox Film and Theatres.

Samuel R. Burns, vice-president and secretary of the equipment combine and now secretary of the Fox companies as well.

As reported elsewhere in this issue, Oscar Oldknow, vice-president of National Theatre Supply, is slated to become a vice-president of Fox Theatres.

Walter E. Green, president of National and also vice-president of General Theatre, will probably hold no post with the Fox companies but is expected to collaborate on matters in which his experience may prove helpful.

On the directorate are business men unknown to the picture trade, several of them identified with large insurance interests. Here is what MOTION PICTURE NEWS unearthed about Clarke and his directors, exclusive of Sheehan, whose background in the business needs no repetition:

Close for Midland

Kansas City—Fox West Coast finally has closed the deal for the Midland circuit of 63 houses in Kansas, Missouri and Iowa. The transaction had been virtually completed at the time of the big smash last fall, but the Fox bankers demurred and the deal was called off. A new deal was negotiated as soon as Fox affairs were adjusted. The deal is in line with eastern expansion of Fox West Coast.

Al Lewis and Joe Pincus, Sheehan's story and player scouts in New York; Alfred Wright, Felix Jenkins and Edwin P. Kilroe of the legal department; Roger Ferri, editor of "Fox Dynamo"; John F. Coneybear, laboratory chief; Alan Freedman of the laboratory department; Pat J. Flaherty, general manager of Red Star Music Co.; Walter Green, president of National Theatre Supply; Oscar Oldknow, vice-president of the same company, and Marco Wolf of Fanchon and Marco.

Since his arrival in New York on December 3, Sheehan has signed contracts with 15 authors, purchased rights of 45 stories and engaged 47 players who will appear in next season's program.

de luxe theatres in Philadelphia, Brooklyn, St. Louis, Newark, Washington, Atlanta and Detroit, and propels him into one of the biggest theatre operating posts in the industry.

The switch, it is understood, will take John Zanft from the de luxe houses and temporarily leave him without portfolio. As noted, however, he will probably get management of the Roxy when the latter leaves the theatre he built to launch his job with National Broadcasting and RKO.

Reports have it that Arthur informed Fox officials that if all they had in mind for him was Fox Metropolitan, he preferred to stay in California. He was definitely after the Eastern division and thus his appointment to that post obviously indicates his arguments have won out.

Stuart on Fox De Luxe Theatres Under Arthur

Hartford—Hershel Stuart, head of the Fox Poli circuit, is expected to be transferred to New York where he will headquarter in charge of de luxe operations for Fox. Theatres under his supervision will include houses in Brooklyn, Washington, Newark, St. Louis, Philadelphia, Detroit and Atlanta.

Fox West Coast M'g'rs Moved Up in Transfer

Los Angeles—Switch of several managers has followed the moving up of Harry Arthur to general manager of Fox theatres in the East. The Long Beach post of Les Fountain who now is southern California district manager, has been taken over by Marshall Taylor, with Lew Clark moved to Ocean Park from Santa Monica. C. F. Narath, assistant manager at Santa Monica, now is at Venice as manager.

Norman Sproul, manager of the Fox Riverside for the last eight months, is promoted to Santa Ana to take place of Jack Rantz, who resigned to enter business for himself. Carr of Glendale is switched to Sproul's post at Riverside, with McGowan of the vaudeville booking department of the circuit being assigned to Carr's post at Glendale.

High and Low On Music Row

HIZZONER Jimmy Walker, who attended the opening of the new Hollywood Theatre, vigorously applauded the song entitled "When The Little Red Roses Get The Blues For You," which is featured in the Warner production "Hold Everything." Jimmy, you know, is an old time songwriter himself, having written a few numbers including "Will You Love Me In December As You Do In May?" which was a hit in its day.

Al Dubin and Joe Burke, writers of "Tip-Toe Thru The Tulips" and "Painting The Clouds With Sunshine," and now under contract to Warner Bros., are getting fan mail. The weaker sex expresses great interest in the personalities of these tunesters while the masculine admirers simply desire information on the art of writing hits. Well, if Dubin and Burke can answer what the masculine gender ask, they'll get plenty of mail from "the boys they left behind."

Bibo-Lang, Inc., have secured the publishing rights to three audible productions, which will shortly be released. The song numbers are "You For Me," "Must Be Love" and "Wanna Find A Boy," from the Tiffany production "Sunny Skies," "Yo Te Adoro" theme song for "Border Romance," another Tiffany vehicle and "Oh How I Love You," "My Big Boy" and "One Sweet Night" from the Chesterfield picture "Ladies In Love." This firm is getting quite popular with the independent producers.

Al Friedman, who has proved himself a valuable asset to some of the publishers in town, has signed with Harry Bloom, Inc., and has left for Chicago, where he will open and manage a branch office. Harry Bloom, who for many years was associated with Irving Berlin, Inc., has another hard worker in Harold Spina, formerly with Green & Sept. The outstanding song in the Bloom catalogue is "My Heart Belongs To The Girl Who Belongs To Somebody Else," written by Al Sherman and Al Lewis.

Everything's jake now in music circles with John G. Paine, chairman of the board of the Music Publishers Protective Ass'n absolving Al Capone from participation in the bootleg song sheet racket, Al Capone expressing sympathy with the publishers who are purported to have lost over $1,000,000, and the disappearance of the street hawkers.

Walter O'Keefe and Bobby Dolan don't do anything by halves. This pair of melody makers are responsible for every one of the 18 songs which are synchronized in the Warner production "Sweet Kitty Bellairs." These tunes which include "You-OO I Love But You," "Tally-ho," "Song Of The Town Of Bath," "The Pump Song" and "Peggy's Leg," will be published by Harms.

Sherman-Clay has a pair of real good numbers entitled "With My Guitar" and "Shoo The Hoodoo Away" in the Pathe circus musical "Swing High." These songs were written by Mort Harris, Edward Hayman and Ted Snyder. Shapiro-Bernstein also have some songs which look like moneymakers in this picture. They are "It Must Be Love," "Do You Think I Could Grow On You" and "There's Happiness Over The Hill."

PINCUS

Friml's Touch Of Wanderlust Upsets Contract

Hollywood Insiders are speculating on the chances of Rudolf Friml returning to Hollywood during the coming year to write original music for two filmusicals as stipulated in his contract with Samuel Goldwyn.

Friml came to the coast several months ago, and wrote the musical numbers for United Artists' "Bride 66." While here, he entered into a contract with Goldwyn to prepare the music for two Goldwyn operettas, with reported understanding that Friml would start on that contract as soon as he had completed work on "Bride 66."

Instead of moving over to his offices at Goldwyn's, Friml jumped back East, but is said to have promised to return at a later date to work out his contract with the producer. Investigation discloses there was no friction or misunderstanding between Goldwyn and Friml, but the latter apparently had the urge to make a trip to New York and Europe—and departed.

Canadian Exhibitors Ask 'Music Tax' Aid

Ottawa—Application has been made to Prime Minister King, for a modification of the bill to amend the Canadian Copyright Act presented by Fernand Rinfret, secretary of state, and which is shortly to have its second reading in the House of Commons. The amendments give the Performing Rights Society almost unlimited privileges in collecting musical royalties from Canadian exhibitors, while the American association would also be able to collect further music taxes.

Flaherty Gets $20,000 For Australian Rights

Pat J. Flaherty, vice president and general manager of Red Star Music Co., New York, has assigned Australian music rights to B. Davis & Co., of Sydney for one year for a reported price of $20,000.

Zahler Handling Music

Hollywood—Lee Zahler, composer and musical director, has been engaged by Nat Ross to assume charge of the musical end of the Charles Murray-George Sidney series of two reel comedies being produced for Universal. Zahler composed several original numbers for Darmour and Tiffany, besides handling musical scores on various pictures for the latter two companies.

Ames Opposite Ann Harding

Hollywood—Robert Ames has signed to appear opposite Ann Harding in "Holiday," a Pathe talker directed by E. H. Griffith. Arthur Hoyt, Audrey Forrester, Mary Astor, Edward Everett Horton, and William Holden are in the cast.

M-G-M Contract for Shy

Hollywood—Gus Shy, Broadway stage comedian who appeared in M-G-M's filmusical version of "Good News," has been placed under term contract by that company.

Before the "Mike" In N. Y. Studios

WATCHING Olive Shea, Billy Taylor, Jane Ray and about a score of youngsters doing their stuff in "The Varsity Show" at the Eastern Vitaphone studio brought back memories of those dear departed days when we too had to wear the green skull cap depicting freshness and unsophistication (more of the latter ing our eyes). The story was written by Burnet Hershey with a special score by Neville Fleeson and Harold Levy. Roy Mack directed.

The scenes in the Vitaphone Variety, "Horse Sense," featuring Bob Roebuck, star of the 101 Ranch Wild West Show, were taken by Murray Roth at Westbury, L. I. Guess Flatbush isn't as wild as most of us think.

We sure had a lucky break when we ran right into production of the Variety, "The Lucky Break," which is one of the funniest bits of clowning we've seen. Arthur Hurley directed this short starring Harry Fox, of musical comedy fame, supported by Glenda Farrell, Walter Regan, Leonard Jerome, Charles Hopkins, Edward Butler and Arthur Shaw, Homer Mason and Stanley Rauh collaborated on the story.

While on the subject of this well-known phenomenon called breaks, let's dwell for a moment on those that have persisted in dogging Director Arthur Hurley. And when we say dogging we mean just that. In "The Lucky Break" he needed 14 untrained mongrel dogs (What a howling time that was) and in his next directorial effort, "The Hard Guy," all he had to do was to cach a tom cat which showed no willingness to participate in the proceedings nor display its histrionic abilities. What we originally intended to convey was taht Hurley has had breaks, but tough ones.

How the girls, dressed in bathing suits during production on "Animal Crackers" with the Four Marx Brothers, were envied by the folks over at the Paramount New York Studio! Was it hot? Dun't esk.

Victor Heerman, now directing "Animal Crackers," always is assigned to work in the East just when a prize fight for the heavyweight championship of the world is to be fought. He witnessed the Dempsey-Tunney fight at Philadelphia, the Firpo-Dempsey battle, the Tunney-Gibbons argument, the Firpo-Willard bought (not a championship fight) and you can bet your shekels that when Der Maxie squares off with the Grim Weeper from Boston, Heerman will be so close that he'll have to duck the wild ones.

Having recovered from a slight illness, Mark Sandrich is again hard at work on the script of his next RKO comedy which will feature Clark and McCullough in a nautical story. Production will take place at the Ideal studio in New Jersey.

Her debut in Louis Brock's "The Golf Specialist," starring W. C. Fields, proved such a success that Helene Haskins, New York society girl, may be rewarded with a bigger and better part in a future RKO production.

Vernon Duke, 26-year-old composer, who has already had his second symphony played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been temporarily signed by Paramount and is now at work on the score for "Heads Up" which will star Buddy Rogers, supported by Helen Kane and Victor Moore.

THE STUDIO SLEUTH.

They say Quaint

HOLLYWOOD, with her $10,000-a-week salaries and her $5,000 a week stipends, is forever trying to be economical! * * * And the funny part of the whole thing is that they do it.

But — Hollywood economizes on necessities and not on luxuries. Save money? Yes. But not on the "front" where anyone can see it — only on the back where no one will know the difference. That is the way the stars save their widow's mite for the inevitable rain.

For instance:

One well-known Hollywood luminary invariably has to borrow the money to pay his chauffeur's weekly salary — and the chauffeur is piloting a Rolls Royce. Of course, one can't blame the fellow for wanting to keep his Rolls—one must have their Rolls, even if one has to go in debt for the coffee.

Another shining star has quite a reputation for keeping blooded police dogs. Big ones. Big ones that eat a lot! That's all very well while the money comes in regularly, but when the slump hits the bank roll it's not so hot. But does the shining star sell the famous kennels? No! One must not allow herself to slip in the public mind—even if the dogs do eat fifty dollars' worth of the choice meat a month. Why, the shining star would rather starve herself than let the dogs suffer from lack of juicy steaks. Just for the "front." You know how it is!

And that startling case of the little blonde Starlet who had her car taken away from her for lack of payment and her home snatched from over her head for the amount of the mortgage. What did she do, move into a smaller place and buy cheap clothes? Not on your tin-type. She was spotted the very next day in one of the swanky sucker joints on the Boulevard paying (I should say charging) $1500.00 worth of clothes. And that wasn't a whole wardrobe as you might well think. No sir! It was for an evening dress and an ermine wrap. Just one outfit—not much good after it had been worn twice.

And one might mention, just in passing, about the fellow who pays six hundred simoleons for three suits from the best tailor in town and then eats hamburger sandwiches for breakfast, luncheon and dinner. Or the little girl who lets the rent lapse and the dressmaker wait—while she eats every meal at the Brown Derby or the Town House, at twelve bucks a meal. You can't hardly admonish her either, she must be seen—and seen eating, regularly and well. Then again . . . but why go on? It's all the same. They all economize—on necessities. Why don't they save on the luxuries? Or cut them out altogether? It's bad business as far as Hollywood is concerned. Front is the thing that counts out here—not the back-door necessitiesé—Motion Picture Magazine.

Out of the Shell

Hollywood—Ring the fire bells! Hot news for local and visiting Garbo maniacs. Greta the Gudgeous seems to be coming out of her shell!

At any rate, the secretive Swede has appeared in public eating houses several times, lately, and always in the company of a handsome and wealthy young fellow-countryman.

No romance—just real good pals.

So it looks as though Garbo is beginning to take a modest part in Hollywood social life.

I have it on good authority that she is enjoying these little dashes into the world, and plans to make more. But she still wears her simple sports clothes—even to Sunday dinners at the fancy Montmartre.

Incidentally, Garbo has a new girl friend—Fifi Dorsay, the Parisian paprika. Fifi is Greta's first girl pal since she and Lilyan Tashman grew less friendly, some time back.

"THE CHURCHMAN" harbors no desire to see anyone persecuted, nor has it forgotten that justice should often be tempered with mercy. Television Virtue

Recent television broadcasts were only partially successful due to difficulty in recognizing the actors.

When broadcasts come from Hollywood, however, there will be no difficulty in recognizing the plots.

Drawing the Line

Hollywood—Believe it or not, there's a high-class beauty parlor in the center of Hollywood which gets a big play from film actresses. But a gold-lettered sign on the front window reads: "For Ladies Only"!

THIS sound like a wild yarn but it actually happened in Hollywood, where the strangest things are truth. A young actress, who after several seasons in Hollywood seemed to be making good in her career and keeping a nice reputation, had a wonderful opportunity with a big company. It was her first chance on that lot and she was thrilled by it. She was making arrangements with the executive in charge when he casually mentioned that his family was giving a party that night and he would like her to attend. She thought it would be not only diplomatic but pleasant as well. So she put on her most becoming gown and went to the festivities there.

One of the first men she met was a visiting relative of the executive. After the first glance she suddenly recognized him—unfortunately, just about the time he realized her identity. Then the air in their vicinity became frostly. And the next day the girl didn't get the contract.

For it seems that years ago when she was 16, poor and beautiful the visiting relative had been a store owner in a small town. He had promised to give the little girl a job and had even offered to take her out to dinner. The meal was served in his bachelor home and the girl had to break up dishes and windows before she escaped from his evil designs. She didn't get the job that time either, but she told the story to a boy friend who beat up the store owner. Then after all those years he had to have Hollywood relatives.—N. Y. Graphic.

HOW about next season's booking? Will it be a repetition of the present situation when exhibitors, unable to get together with exchanges on a change in rates because of the sound era, signed at prices they knew were too high, trusting that the usual system of adjustments would follow? Will booking be influenced by the fact that generally these adjustments were not forthcoming, providing additional hardships for exhibitors, and leading to a greater extent of contract-breaking than ever before?

Will the producers, who are reported to have gathered in about $30,000,000 more in profits this past season, try for even a greater figure, or will they realize that the increase is in a great part due to the terrific burden carried by theatremen this season? Will the producers so direct their policy that even a larger number of independent chains will be willing to sell out to the ever advancing octopus, which eventually gets the price reduction the independent should have had in order to exist?

Will exchange managers adopt a different spirit, or will the weight placed upon exhibitors grow heavier?

Will the advancing chains continue their buying orgy so that eventually the few remaining selling possibilities will call for a lower grade of exchange manager to sell the few independent accounts that will remain?

Her Money's Worth

Tampa, Fla.—The film on one of the projectors in the Prince here caught on fire and burned up the two reels in the upper magazine, but due to the quick work of the operators it was confined to that one machine. Smoke entered the auditorium and Manager Ramos addressed the audience, telling them they were in no danger but to pass out quickly. All did but a girl of about 12 who said she was going to stay and see the show or get her money back, so Ramos picked her up and carried her to the box office for her refund.

The blower fans cleared the house of smoke, the machines were cleaned and a new magazine installed, and inside of an hour the house was ready to operate. The coming of the fire department and news of the fire brought plenty of curious people, with the result that the theatre enjoyed an exceptional day's business.

Antipodes 18% Wired; Western Electric Leads

Three hundred and seventy-seven houses, or eighteen per cent of the theatres in Australia and New Zealand, are now wired for sound. By the end of the year, 37 per cent, or 750, will be showing talking picture, in the opinion of Charles Munro, representative of Fox Film in the island continent.

Wired houses today number 377, as against total possibilities of 2,000, he says. Western Electric now leads with 268, with RCA Photophone a poor second at 37. Munro, who is now in New York, makes the following estimate of current installations:

Western Electric	268
RCA Photophone	37
Raycophone (L)	16
Pacent	13
Auditone (L)	10
De Forest	9
Australone (L)	8
Cinephone	8

Katone (L)	2

Chicago to Have New $1,000,000 Film Building

Chicago—Ground was broken here this week for the new Film Exchange building at 1250 Wabash avenue. It was announced concurrently that space in the building was better than 75% rented. Ten year leases have been signed by R.K.O., United Artists, Universal, Columbia, Tiffany, Educational, Filmack, M & M Exchange and Daily News-Universal Newsreel, according to Harold J. Eschbach, who developed the project and completed arrangements for its financing.

The building will be a five-story fireproof structure and will embrace a roof superstructure which will contain two miniature theatres for screenings. It will provide in addition to office space, inspection, display and shipping rooms and specially constructed vaults for film storage. The exterior will be face-bricked with Indiana limestone decorations. The interior will have marble tile floors and marble wainscotting, the total cost of the building to exceed $1,000,000. George M. Forman & Co., will underwrite $600,000 of this amount. Hooper & Janusch are the architects and John F. Wallace, renting agent.

Completion is scheduled for October 1st, with occupancy set for October 31st.

Producers Farm Out Players for Plenty of Pelf

Farming out of favorite players is proving a big source of revenue for some producers, Florabel Muir writes in a Hollywood despatch to "The New York Daily News."

Marie Dressler, who since her performance in "Anna Christie" has shot up to the peak demand of her long career, is under contract to M-G-M, but parts that fit her type are not numerous. There is a good stiff price of $25,000 a picture on her services and it makes no difference whether she appears in one scene or fifty.

So, M-G-M has done very well peddling her talents elsewhere when there is nothing for her to do on the home lot. Her regular salary is $3,500 a week, but when Messrs. Mayer and Thalberg get through counting up the profits they have made on her they find that she costs them little more than a mediocre player.

Pathe Has 2 on List

Pathe is fortunate in having two girls on the contract list who are in brisk demand. They are Constance Bennett and Ann Harding. Miss Harding receives $25,000 a year from Pathe but when some one else wants her the ante goes way up. Connie Bennett is frothing because Pathe has her hog tied on a five-year contract at $1,200 a week. Connie and her sister Joan possess that continental lacquer, veneered on them by years in Paris, and their brittle worldliness gives them just the sophisticated touch that talkie audiences go mad about. So they have more work than they know what to do with.

Connie kicked like the proverbial bay steer when Pathe sent her out to work double for her contract price and finally agreed to accept 50 per cent of the difference bringing her own take to $1,800 a week. The fast friendship between her and Gloria Swanson's Marquis de Falaise is a thorn in the side of Pathe officialdom. Now that Gloria's picture is finished mayhap Constance will be able to play on her home grounds once more.

Boston—Jack Goldstein, advertising and publicity director of the former Netoco chain of 40 theatres, which has been taken over by Publix, has been assigned to H. F. Kayes of the Publix publicity staff. Before coming to the Netoco organization, Jack spent a year with M-G-M in New England. His new duties will be as assistant to Kayes.

THE

Projectionists' Round Table

By John F. Rider

IT MIGHT be well before we embark upon this course in sound projection to spend a few moments upon the requirements of the motion picture-sound projectionist. Just what should he know?

Electrical courses can be classified in various ways. It is possible without much deliberation to say that the majority may be classified in three ways; elementary, standard and advanced. Just how much benefit is derived from any one of these three courses depends upon the course and the individual. Starting from scratch, the elementary is worth a good deal to any man who is interested in that subject because he, during the course, learns something about a subject which was foreign prior to the occasion. He now has a smattering of what represents that subject. How much financial remuneration is derived from that knowledge depends upon the demands of the industry or the art. At the best the monetary return is very meagre.

The man knows a few facts but is not sufficiently familiar with the subject to be in a position to apply it, at least to the extent that it will really benefit his employer. The insight enables further study, or progress to what we call the standard course. This course would normally include the elementary, and delve deeper into the subject; teach the power of analysis and application. It would teach the power of interpretation so that the theory learned can be applied to practice. This amount of knowledge is no longer superficial. The man now knows enough to be of satisfactory utility to his employer. He now produces a return both for himself and for his employer. He is mutually remunerative.

The advanced course is entirely different. The subject matter is based upon a different conclusion. The student no longer passes through the elementary or even reviews the elementary. The course is planned upon the assumption that the student is familiar with the rudimentary details of the study and he delves into the mathematical analysis. He plans to employ his knowledge for design or research work or some other form of analytical occupation.

The Standard Course

An analysis of the motion picture projection field, the projectionist in particular, shows that the group of men bearing the previously mentioned classification are not qualified for such an advanced course. Furthermore an analysis of the industry shows that they do not require such a course. The work to be carried out does not demand the knowledge conveyed in such study and the time spent in such study would not provide satisfactory financial reimbursement.

The possible difference in monetary return between a proficient motion picture projectionist and a man who is familiar with the advanced details appertaining to sound equipment, when both are employed by an organization and the latter individual devotes his effort to sound work and not projection, is so small as to nullify the value of the time spent for study. Upon second thought, if we are to consider average financial return, the projectionist fares somewhat better in the long run.

Digging deeper, the elementary study of sound and sound equipment is of no actual value other than to incite a desire for further study which shall provide a return. The amount of knowledge which may be conveyed in an elementary course is not sufficient to provide the data which is now required for satisfactory daily maintenance and is by far, short of the knowledge which shall be required in the future. The standard course which is more detailed than the elementary course, yet does not qualify the graduate student as an engineer is that required by the motion picture projectionist of today. Mere comprehension of operating instructions is not sufficient. Mere comprehension of the statement that "the photoelectric cell picks up the sound recorded upon the film and converts it into electrical impulses" is insufficient. One must understand the actual operation of the cell, the function of the different parts, the operating characteristic of the cell and last but not the least the conditions under which it performs to best advantage and under which conditions it cannot perform well. The operator must be able to distinguish when the cell is good or bad without depending upon the plebian specifications referring to the action of another device in the system.

Each recording channel in a studio is daily subjected to a routine series of tests to determine the condition of the system. Such tests are necessary at the reproducing end, in the theatre. The actual recording is important. All of us recognize that point. But is the transcription of the recording into sound of so little importance that a serious daily test is unnecessary. Click tests are now in use to determine if the circuit is "alive," but such tests have no bearing upon any defect which will cause distortion of the speech or music.

Lesson Number 1

This is the first in a series on sound projection written by John F. Rider for exclusive publication in Motion Picture News. The author will tackle his subject from the beginning and trace through to its conclusion the fundamental information and background which, in his opinion, the projectionist must have to be adequately equipped for his post.

Preparedness

Perhaps our statement that a frequency test is daily necessary is a bit premature, particularly so because of the rigid stipulations in force today relative to what may and what may not be done to the apparatus. How long such tests shall live and how rigidly they shall be enforced in the future is problematical. The fact remains that the operator must be qualified to make such a test, to determine if his apparatus is imperfect and to institute the necessary corrective measures to restore the equipment to its required state.

Interrupted service reflects upon the operator. The man in the audience is not interested in who services the equipment. He cares little that the service man is out of town and every possible effort is being made to hurry him to the scene. He paid his money and wants his show. If either sound or scene are unsatisfactory, the operator and theatre are classed as incompetent and poorly managed respectively.

The class of equipment within the control of the operator is very large. While it is true that certain fundamental electrical laws govern the operation of many of these devices, the actual action taking place in each is different from that in the other. In the loud speaker an electric current produces a mechanical force. In the phonograph pickup a mechanical force produces the electric current. In the exciter lamp an electric current produces light. In the photoelectric cell, light produces electric current. To understand such reversals of action, the operator cannot be satisfied with elementary knowledge. His field of work is great and his field of study likewise great.

The man who studies sound projection studies electricity. Perhaps this introduces a field supposedly foreign to motion pictures. Electric current is the basis for the arc in the lamp house, but the number of electrical items associated with the arc are so many less than those associated with the sound equipment, that there is really no comparison. Terminology is new. In contrast to the arc, application of electric potential and electric current is new.

It would be extremely difficult to select the exact number of electrical items encompassed in a sound projection system and to state that a study of the operation of these items would suffice. As a matter of fact, such is practically impossible, because one subject leads into the next; one subject is interlocked with another, perhaps with ten others. In order to learn sound projection one must learn electricity, and considering the items in a sound system, that man must learn both branches of electricity, A. C. and D. C. circuits. He must progress far beyond the rudiments of the subject. His work is not only the transmission of power on a small degree, but his work involves telephony, the transmission of speech over wires and electronic action within a vacuum tube.

Need for Mathematics

Quite naturally the scope of study is not that necessary for an engineer, but the distance between the man who has a smattering of sound equipment and the man who is capable of satisfactorily operating and servicing a sound installation is a very wide and deep abyss, one that cannot be bridged by "just a little more work."

The man who studies electricity cannot successfully do so unless he is familiar with mathematics. This statement should not create a fear of the subject. The engineer probes with higher mathematics, calculus, trigonometry and imaginary quantities. The sound projectionist, however, is not to be an engineer. He deals with like problems, but not to the same depth. His is the practical application. His mathematics, if we may call it that, is required in order that he be able to solve the problems and formulae which arise during the study of the subject. Such solution is a great help when one desires to understand. Experience in the past proved the above. Many men have made excellent progress in the study of electricity and electrical circuits until the subject became a bit complex. That is, they appeared complex because they were represented by numerals, as formulae.

It is not difficult to understand a formulae. The difficulty arises in the quest to understand the derivation of the formulae. In many cases that is unnecessary, but extreme difficulty is nevertheless encountered because the man involved has no visible means of solving the problem. Most of the formulae which shall appear in this course are relatively simple. The highest order of mathematics is the right triangle, a subject which is a part of the mathematics course in the average high school. It is possible to express that subject as a simple study of the relation between an angle and a line. Supplementary to the right triangle is a study of a circle. Actually this work is a part of mathematics known as plane trigonometry.

Some of the Requisites

Once again we wish to stress that the above work as it is applied to the sound projection course is not difficult. Plenty of tables are available to expedite solution. Square root is a part of this work and we shall furnish a simple method of solving for square root when the occasion arises for such calculation. We include the above subjects because they provide a means of understanding electrical phenomena in A. C. circuits.

Multiplication, division and ratio of small quantities plays a very important role in A. C. as well as D C. circuits. Mention of these elementary arithmetical solutions is not made with the idea of disparaging the reader's mental ability. They appear in electrical equations and solution of a problem is worth five pages of text. The above arithmetical methods of solution shall serve to refresh memories which have not been called on to function in this direction for many years.

The function of many devices in a sound system is best expressed in numerical quantities. A numerical illustration will serve to clarify many an enigmatical problem. Solution of a problem is not difficult when even round numbers are involved. The difficulty arises when fractions are encountered, when they are to be multiplied, divided, subtracted. The relation between two quantities is of great importance in a sound system. The function of the fader is to alter this relation so that it shall conform with a requirement or with a third quantity.

Basic Information

By supplying a short review at the outset of the course with numerical examples of solution, we hope to provide a better basis for comprehension.

The Study of Mathematics—The signs, symbols and expressions used in mathematics are those which have been accepted by virtue of common usage. No one seems to know why + stands for addition, — for subtraction, × for multiplication, ÷ for division and = for equality. No more do we know why a lion is called a lion or why a horse is called a horse. When spoken they mean what they do simply because there is a general agreement to that fact. The same is true of mathematical symbols and signs.

Certain terms are applied to numbers as being representative of a certain kind of a number, and the following definitions explain the significance of these terms.

1. An even number is a number that is exactly divisible by 2. Further, a number is an even number if its last right hand figure is 0 or a number divisible by 2. Thus, 4, 8, 10, 14 and 20 are even numbers.

2. An odd number is a whole number that is not exactly divisible by 2. Thus, 5, 11, 17, 25 and 57 are odd numbers. While it is true that these numbers may be divided by two, the result would be an even number and a number which is exactly divisible by 2 when divided by two results in an even number.

3. A number is exactly divisible by 3 if the sum of its digits is exactly divisible by 3. Thus the whole number 462195 is divisible by 3 since $4+6+2+1+9+5=27$ and 27 is divisible by 3. The digits in a whole number are the individual numbers. In the case cited the whole number is 462195, whereas the digits are 4, 6, 2, 1, 9 and 5. The interpretation of a digit is of course not limited to the exact numbers mentioned.

4. A number is divisible by 4 if its last two digits on the right are divisible by 4 or if it terminates in two zeros. Thus 279564 is divisible by 4 since the last two digits on the right are 64 and this number is divisible by 4. With respect to the number terminating in two zeros, the whole number 37600 is divisible by 4.

5. A number is divisible by 5 if the last digit on the right is 0 or 5.

6. A number is divisible by 6 if it is an even number and the sum of its digits is divisible by 3. Thus 882 is divisible by 6, since it is even, ending in 2 and at the same time $8+8+2=18$, a number divisible by 6.

7. A rule is not available for the whole numbers divisible by 7.

8. A number is exactly divisible by 8 if the number represented by the last three digits on the right is divisible by 8. For example: 98643872 is divisible by 8 because 872 is divisible by 8.

9. A number is divisible by 9 if the sum of its digits is divisible by 9. Thus 87563124 is divisible by 9 because $8+7+5+6+3+1+2+4=36$ and 36 is divisible by 9.

The above rules find application in many instances not allied with the electrical, but are of aid when solving problems and provide what may be termed short-cut methods to determine the feasibility of a certain operation.

Mathematical Signs

Signs of Operation—Methods of operation in mathematical problems are expressed by means of signs. Recognition of the relative importance of such signs is of great aid when solving problems. Incorrect sequence of operation will cause a wrong answer. A series of additions may be taken in any order. The same is true of a series of multiplications, as for example, 2 X 4 X 5 X 8 = 320, no matter what the sequence of multiplication, whether 2 is first multiplied by 8 or by 4 X 5 and then multiplied by 8. A series of subtractions must be taken as written and the same is true of a series of divisions.

The consequence of wrong sequence is best realized when working with a mixed series of divisions, multiplication, addition and subtraction, as for example, the problem $16 \div 4 + 4 \times 2 \times 3 - 16 \times 2 \div 4 = ?$ At first glance this problem appears to be of the simplest kind, yet unless the operations are followed in a certain specific order the answer will be wrong. We shall therefore show the possible methods of solution to indicate the correct and incorrect methods, terminating with the rule for the sequence of such operations.

1. $16 \div 4 = 4 + 4 = 8 \times 2 = 16 \times 3 = 48 - 16 = 32 \times 2 = 64 \div 4 = 16$. Wrong.

2. $16 \div 4 + 24 - 32 \div 4 = 4 + 24 - 8 = 28 - 8 = 20$. Right.

The following rule governs the solution of a series of different operations. In a series of different operations, the multiplication must be performed first, the division next, the addition next and finally the subtraction in the order written. In the above example, line 2, the number $24 = 4 \times 2 \times 3$ and the number $32 = 16 \times 2$ in the original expression.

Fractions—Quite a good deal of electrical data appertaining to D. C. circuits and electrical indicating instruments to be discussed later in the course involves parts of unit values, that is, fractions. In other words, a certain electrical value of voltage or current or resistance may be dissipated or not used in the electrical circuit. To determine the relation between the amount used and the amount lost, it is necessary to apply fractions. This is particularly true in the case of electrical indicating instruments, when it is necessary to change the operating range of an instrument, or in fact when the design of such devices is being studied. An understanding of fractions will go a long way.

Three component parts are to be found during the process of simple division. When the figure 5 is to be divided into the number 10, the latter known as the divident or the numerator is usually shown above a horizontal line as 10 and the quantity to be divided into another quantity is known as the divisor or the denominator and is shown as a numeral below a horizontal line as —. When the two are combined to indicate the operation, the expression as $\frac{10}{5}$. When the dividing symbol ÷ is used, the number preceding the symbol is the divident or enumerator and the number succeeding the symbol is the divisor or denominator. The resultant quantity of a division problem is known as the quotient. Thus the answer 2 is the quotient.

If we have available a unit quantity of light from a source and that light is passed through a filter so that the quantity of light incident upon an object is only one-third of the total light available from the source, the light incident upon the object is only a fraction of that available, in this case $\frac{1}{3}$ of the total light. This fraction is an indicated division showing that the total value of light is divided into a number of equal parts. In this case the total light is divided into three equal parts. One of these parts is available upon the subject and two of the three parts are lost in the filter. The value of the fraction is the number that it represents. Thus if two thirds of the light were available upon the subjects the expression would be $\frac{2}{3}$, which would indicate that of the three equal parts of light in each case, two were available or taken and one part was not used or lost in the filter.

John F. Rider's second lesson will appear next week. In it he will further discuss the application of mathematics to the sound projectionist's problems.

The Horn Was Silent

Hollywood—Arriving on location without a sound head for the camera may be comedy to some, but it was near tragedy in the case of the "Trader Horn" company, which found itself in far-off Africa, without the required sound head, although with thousands of dollars worth of other sound equipment.

As the daily overhead was high, picture was started in silent form—with the sound equipment necessarily remaining idle. The necessary sound head for the camera arrived about three months after the company had been on location. All silent film was retained so that sound could be spotted in at the studio later.

Blackwell Quota Films For Paramount Release

London—Carlyle Blackwell is to make three quota talkers for Paramount release. The first is "Bed Rock," in which Jane Baxter is featured opposite Blackwell, who is directing the series. Piccadilly Pictures is the producing unit which Blackwell heads. Noel Shammon and Blackwell now are collaborating on the second picture, which will star Miss Baxter.

Again Trying Art

Cleveland—Another effort to put over a picture art theatre here will be made by Louis Matchet of the Cinema Art Theatre of Chicago. The first such house here was located on East Ninth St., and was operated by Aaron Newman. It flopped after about two month's trial.

Four Rochester Houses Operate On Same Scale

Rochester—Four out of the fourteen Rochester first run film houses operate on the same price scale, with the remaining two corresponding proportionately by beginning with a "bargain" matinee before noon and making evening the peak for prices.

The RKO Temple, seating 1,900, opens with a 15-cents standing price at 11 A. M., continuing until 1 P. M., when the price jumps to 25 cents. After 6 P. M. it is 35 cents. The Piccadilly, Publix house seating 2,259, opens from 11 A. M. to 1 P. M. at 25 cents, jumps to 35 cents until 6 P. M., and to 50 cents thereafter. Children's prices are 15 cents before 1 P. M., and 25 cents thereafter.

The RKO Palace, seating 3,000; the Publix Eastman, seating 3,200; the Loew's Rochester, seating 4,000, and the Publix Regent, seating 1,551, open at 11 A. M., with a standard price of 25 cents, jumping to 35 cents at 1 P. M. and to 60 cents at 6 P. M. Children are admitted for 15 cents until 6 P. M. and for 25 cents thereafter. Evening prices prevail all day Sunday in all houses.

Bankrupt Theatre Pays Final 10% Dividend

East St. Louis, Ill.—The creditors of the bankrupt Erco Amusement Co. were paid a dividend of approximately 10 per cent on the unsecured claims, amounting to $1,715, at the final meeting of the creditors.

The company formerly operated the Lyric here and went into bankruptcy about eighteen months ago. At that time it was estimated the liabilities totaled $242,586.13.

RCA Portable Campaign

Cleveland—J. W. Rafferty, assistant sales manager in charge of RCA educational and industrial department, is in town opening a sales campaign on the RCA portable equipment, the type now being installed in 562 Montgomery-Ward & Co., stores throughout the country, and in use on such ocean liners as the Ile de France, Berengaria, George Washington and the Malolo.

Ta! Ta!

Many revolutionary movements are in progress in Hollywood these days. Of these, one of the most revolutionary is the radical change in types of leading men. Gone is the era of unbelievably handsome males, immaculately manicured, massaged, brushed, combed and dressed. Gone is the era when a leading man did not necessarily have to be an actor, if only he was good-looking. And come is the era of actors—of men who do not have to look superlatively romantic, if they can, with voice and action, be convincing in their parts.—Motion Picture Magazine.

Tribute to Loew

"Loew's Square" is the new name of the street intersection opposite Loew's Pitkin, Brooklyn. The name was bestowed on the intersection as a mark of tribute to the late Marcus Loew. Eddie Dowden of the New York publicity department is given credit for the change, which took six months to accomplish.

Death Knell Is Sounded for all German Silents

Washington — Although production is still hampered considerably by unavailability of working capital, the changeover in Germany to sound pictures is being worked rapidly, according to Commercial Attache George R. Canty, who reports to the Dept. of Commerce that silent features are fast disappearing from the German market and are now limited to small theatres in unimportant municipalities.

German picturegoers have gone for talkers in a big way, the report points out. Silents, even though synchronized with music and sound effects, don't click with the fans at the b. o. They want straight-away talkers and nothing else.

Watching Price Scale

Canty advises of two essential conditions which must be coped with in furthering sound production in German. First, the necessity for Germany equipment built to sell at prices lower than foreign-made machines, and secondly the immediate installation of devices on a wholesale scale.

New types of comparatively low-priced sound sets have recently been brought on the market, which are more within the purchasing power of the medium and smaller exhibitors than those of the leading electric concerns, and if no patent litigation develops, it is expected that a great many of the smaller theatres will be wired in the near future.

Business is Tough

Exhibitors, both in Berlin and in the provinces, are complaining of a highly unsatisfactory state of business, which is unusual at this time of the year. Only in a few exceptional cases picture attendance did not decline as compared with the corresponding period of last year. This situation is due chiefly to unemployment and depressed general conditions.

The work of copying prints has fallen off, and the number of orders received has considerably decreased, as compared with the corresponding period in 1929. The expensive apparatus installed for the copying of sound films was not sufficiently used. In many instances, expenses had to be cut down. Payments have been met with much difficulty.

There were 19 feature films censored in Germany during the month of February, 1930, of which seven were German made and 12 foreign (five from America), as compared with 16 German and 16 foreign in January, and 25 German and 14 foreign in December last.

Fast Production Pace in Effect At Fox Studios

Hollywood—Fox studio is putting a fast production pace in preparation for the annual sales convention which is scheduled here May 26.

Pictures for the new season already completed include "A Very Practical Joke," with Milton Sills, Dorothy Mackaill and Kenneth McKenna, under direction of Berthold Viertel; "Song o' My Heart," and "Common Clay," with Agnes Ayres and Constance Bennett and directed by Victor Fleming.

Four films are in production, namely: "Roadhouse," with Frank Albertson and H. B. Warner under direction of Leo McCarey; "Are You There?" under direction of Hamilton McFadden and starring Beatrice Lille; "On Your Back," with Irene Rich and H. B. Warner under direction of Guthrie McClintock; and "The Big Trail," directed by Raoul Walsh, which is to be the most ambitious undertaking of Fox. A number of other pictures are to be started early in May.

Freuer Concentrates on Westerners; 6 Planned

Six talker westerns, issued at the rate of one a month, comprise the present schedule of Big Four Film Corp., New York, headed by John R. Freuler, president of the old Mutual Film Co. Three of the series already have been completed. Freuler intends to concentrate on pictures of this type.

"Birth," Sounded, a Roadshow

Hollywood—Sound and synchronized version of D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" was given its first public showing at the Tivoli, Sawtelle. Plans call for roadshowing "Birth of a Nation" starting in September.

Miss Sloane with Big Four

Henri Sloane has been made director of publicity for Big Four Film Corp., New York, of which John R. Freuler is president. Miss Sloane left the film business 2½ years ago to try her hand at free lance work.

Doug a Cartoon

Douglas Fairbanks envisions himself as an "animated cartoon" due to the talker development, he stated before sailing for Europe. He added that he is "going to try to use movements that will please the eye," and that he finds, at present, that "I can't be active on my feet and talk at the same time." Harry Lauder, sailing at the same time, hails the talkers and says he is awaiting development of color so his kilts can be "shown in full splendor."

Briefly Told News

Marshall Operetta Set

Hollywood—"Heart of the Rockies" will be Everett Marshall's initial starring film operetta for RKO. Marshall, from the Metropolitan Opera stage, is currently appearing in "Dixiana" with Bebe Daniels. His first individual starring musical is an original by Harry Tierney, composer of "Dixiana" and numerous stage operettas.

Tiffany Starring Rex Lease

Hollywood—Rex Lease will be starred by Tiffany in "So This Is Mexico," an outdoor picture under direction of Richard Thorpe. Clyde Cook has been signed for a featured role.

"Billy" Goetz with Fox

Hollywood—William Goetz, general manager of the Corinne Griffith productions during the last four years and also former production manager for Buster Keaton productions, has been signed as a Fox studio executive on the staff of Sol M. Wurtzel.

Estabrook on "Cimarron"

Hollywood—Howard Estabrook has been signed by RKO to write the screen version of Edna Ferber's novel, "Cimarron," which goes into production next month as an RKO special.

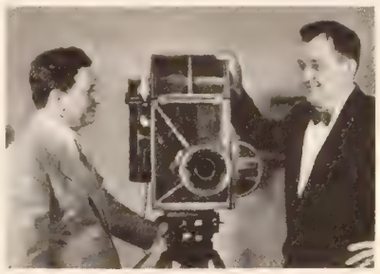
Pollard to Direct Crawford

Hollywood—Harry Pollard, Universal director for several years, who recently moved over to M-G-M, has been assigned to direct Joan Crawford in her next starring talker, "The Great Day." Picture is from current stage musical of same name by William Cary Duncan and John Wells.

Robinson Signed by RKO

Hollywood—RKO has signed "Bill" Robinson, tap dancer, for a featured spot in "Dixiana," original film operetta by Harry Tierney. Luther Reed is now rehearsing preparatory to launching production next week.

Le Vino Loses Son



Hollywood—Shelby Le Vino, 13-year-old son of Albert Shelby Le Vino, well known scenario writer, died suddenly at the Le Vino home in Hollywood last week. Funeral services were private.

Lamac Forms German Co.

Berlin—Ondra-Lamac G. m.b.H. has been formed here by Karl Lamac to produce and distribute.

Maude Starts "Grumpy"

Hollywood—Cyril Maude's first talking picture, "Grumpy," has gone into production at Paramount under the co-direction of George Cukor, who was dialogue director for "All Quiet on the Western Front," and Cyril Gardner, who was recently co-director on the Spanish version of "The Benson Murder Case."

Hollywood—What is declared by Warner engineers to be a step toward making obsolete the existing style of camera booth is a new camera case, to be known as "The Warner Bros. Blimp." The device is sound, fire and waterproof and weighs but 37 pounds, as contrasted to the thousands of pounds of existing camera booths. Cameras enclosed in a blimp fell into a lake recently, but the cameras and camera cases were unharmed by the submersion.

Blues Cause 2 Arrests

Mexico, Mo.—C. M. Clay and W. F. De Franne, who comprise the management of the Liberty, decided to give Sunday shows a trial, believing the towns people wanted them. Easter Sunday was picked for the trial event and the theatre opened, although the ten churches of the city had condemned the act. No attempt was made to stop the shows by the law and the experiment was considered a success until Monday, when Clay and De Franne were arrested on a charge of "Sabbath breaking."

Mexico is in Central Missouri and has a population of 8,000. The theatres never have opened on Sunday, although neighboring towns permit Sunday shows. Both men pleaded not guilty.

Sunday Shows Divide Town

Smithtown Branch, L. I.—This is a village divided against itself due to the Sunday shows controversy. More than 600 residents petitioned the town board to reverse the order closing the St. James Playhouse on Sundays, following raiding of a Sunday show at the theatre.

Legalize Sunday Shows

Brookfield, Mo.—At a very stormy session, the city council passed an ordinance to permit Sunday shows.

Sunday Shows Win

Fontanelle, Neb.—By a vote of 231 to 107, Sunday shows were approved here.

Showman Under Knife

Rochester — Robert Kaufman, general manager of the Publix houses here, last week underwent a major operation. Pending his recovery, M. A. Baker was sent from the New York office to take charge of the three houses. J. R. Fraser, house manager at the Eastman, took over Kaufman's duties at that house.

New M-G-M Exchange

Cleveland—Final plans for the new M-G-M exchange to be built on the corner of Payne Ave. and East 24th St. have been submitted to the local branch manager, Frank Drew, for approval. It is expected that work on the structure will be started within two weeks.

Centralia Contract Awarded

Centralia, Wash. — Contract has been awarded to W. T. Butler Co. of Seattle for erection of a new Fox theatre here, at Tower Ave. and Main St. It will represent an investment of $200,000 and be completed by Sept. 1.

Columbia Gets "Arizona"

"Arizona," one of the most successful stage plays ever written, has been obtained by Columbia for an all-talking screen production. The play is from the pen of Augustus Thomas.

Robinson Aids Linet

George Robinson has been added to the Columbia advertising staff to assist Hank Linet on trade paper advertising. His latest affiliation was with the Ethridge Co., where he was art director.

New French Unit

Washington—Parisian attache of the Dept. of Commerce reports formation of a new company: Societe Parisienne Cinematographique, headquarters in Paris, to produce and distribute. Georges Friede is sponsoring the unit.

Takes Over Jersey House

Jersey City—Fox Metropolitan Playhouses has taken over the State, Journal Square, on a 21-year lease. Vive-Chancellor John H. Bakes ruled about a month ago that Fox must fulfill a 1928 contract and take over the theatre.

Gluck Open Branch

Hollywood—Continental Theatre Accessories, Incorporated, will open a branch soon at Los Angeles, under management of William Gluck.

RKO Signs Irene Dunne

Hollywood—Irene Dunne, musical comedy star, has been signed by RKO for the featured role in "Present Arms," a filmusical, on RKO's next season program.

Lou Lusty Moves

Hollywood—Lou Lusty has left Inspiration to handle trailers for First National. John P. Miles has succeeded Lusty as publicity director for Inspiration.

Loew Aid to Wed

Eugene Picker, assistant to David L. Loew, vice-president of Loew's, and Sylvia Moses will be married on June 12.

From Everywhere • •

The Supreme Sacrifice

The movie gods are outraged!

One of Hollywood's oldest and most sacred traditions is being violated.

Bebe Daniels and Ben Lyon are the guilty parties!

While teaming in Radio Pictures' "French Gertie," a crook romance, each positively refused to "steal scenes" from the other.

Veteran members of the troupe stood open-mouthed to hear such strange remarks as "Now wait a moment, Bebe, dear, this is your best angle, don't you think? Try those lines again, honey, you can do better! You take this closeup instead of me!"

Odd words indeed from one of Hollywood's most handsome leading men!

Next, Miss Daniels might say: "Ben, darling, you 'take' the camera over my shoulder this shot.

"Where is the twinkle in your eye and the stray look I like?"

And so on, each giving to the other the camera "breaks" with no thought of self—often to the despair of Director George Archainbaud, who was trying to follow a perfectly good script.

The reason?

Why, everybody knows that Bebe and Ben are engaged to be married June 14. Hollywood says it's a real love match—and sacrifice is the acid test of love!

Midwest Ad Changes

Milwaukee—L. S. Stein, state advertising manager of Fox Wisconsin Theatres, has resigned to become publicity manager for R-K-O's Palace-Orpheum and Riverside theatres here. He succeeds William Danziger, who has gone to Chicago. Mr. Stein in turn is succeeded by L. A. Gneier, formerly with the Orpheum Circuit in Chicago, where he handled advertising and publicity.

Explosion Wrecks Theatre

Schenectady—Explosion and fire, which occured about 30 minutes after the house closed for the night wrecked the Capitol. The fire enveloped the entire three-story structure and firemen were called upon to rescue eight persons from apartments above the theatre.

Chi Salesmen Resign

Chicago—Milton Krueger, one of the "ace" salesmen at the Fox exchange here, and formerly a Vitaphone salesman, has resigned.

Harry Goldman, country salesman in Illinois for Educational, has resigned.

Named N. S. S. Representative

Minneapolis—Charles Coren, formerly with Tiffany and Warners, has been named representative here for National Screen Service by Pat Garyn, in charge of sales.

A. P. Giannini Retires

A. P. Giannini, upon his sixtieth birthday Tuesday, retired as an executive of all companies in which he is an officer. The veteran San Francisco financier, who founded the Transamerica Corp., world's largest bank holding company, for years has been active in picture and theatre financing.

Aiding Dispute Settlements

Philadelphia—Co-operation in settling disputes is being extended exhibitors by the eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey exhibitor unit.

Fire Destroys Theatre

San Diego, Cal.—The National, picture house at National City, five miles southeast of here, was destroyed by fire, the blaze starting from an overheated motor used in operating the stage curtains. The house was built about two years ago by Maj. T. C. Macaulay and was leased to the Bush Theatres, Inc. The loss is estimated at $30,000.

Journey's End" Run Set

Cleveland—"Journey's End" will be road showed here at advanced admission prices before it gets a popular-priced run. Original plans to exhibit this picture first run at popular prices, as first announced, have been altered. Negotiations are now pending in regard to its showing at the Hanna.

Suit Over Contract Started

Charlotte—Fox has brought suit for $2,800 against Enos Beam for fulfillment of contract. The house now is operated by Dardine & Reynolds.

Quillan Cast Additions

Hollywood—Ben Bard and Frances Upton have been added to cast of Pathe's "Night Work" which stars Eddie Quillan. Russell Mack is directing.

Akron House Not Closing

Akron, O.—The Majestic, operated by H. E. Bickle, will not be closed, as previously announced. Bickel plans to keep the house open all summer.

Smot Crek

It was at the Eddie Miller dinner at the Friars' Club, and the talk drifted to Eddie's plan to make a Vitaphone short, his first.

"One thing," it was observed, "Eddie will be right at home in a picture."

"How do you make that out?" someone wanted to know.

"Why he's been playing without audiences for months in vaudeville."

A Traitor in the Ranks

New Movie Magazine

DEAR MR. EDITOR

I am a Roxy usher. I don't say this in a boastful way, but only with sincere, simple, manly pride in my chosen profession. As a matter of fact, I am not really a full-fledged usher yet, as I have several months of intensive training and one more examination to take before I get my degree. But the head usher says he has no fear but that I will make the grade and Mr. Roxy himself smiled at me once as he rode up from the pit on top of the grand organ.

I am telling you all this because I want you to understand what my new ambition is, so that you will help me. You see, I am very proud to have dedicated my life to pictures, because they bring happiness to one and all, great and small, and possibly to you, too, Mr. Editor. Now as you can well imagine, I have seen many pictures while serving my apprenticeship as junior usher in Roxy's Cathedral of the Cinema, and the thought came to me one day, just like an inspiration. It was more like a voice, Mr. Editor, a voice that called out, "Oswald! You too can write talking pictures." It was just as clear as that, Mr. Editor. And it started me thinking. So I watched all the pictures with keener interest, and then one night I made a big decision. I'll never be able to write those wonderful plots and stories, I said, but I can—yes, by Gad, I WILL—write dialogue.

I will be very glad to hear from you at your earliest convenience, Mr. Editor. You can address me, Aisle Three, Section A, Subdivision Forty-six, North-north-east Sector, Mezzanine XU-11, The Roxy Theatre, New York City.

Sincerely,

Oswald Scramonoff.

Wins Sunday Show Vote

Peekskill, N. Y.—Referendum on Sunday shows here is provided for in a bill signed by Governor Roosevelt. In a memorandum attached to the measure, the governor said he believed residents were entirely qualified to pass upon the question and constitute a proper tribunal.

Laws Resigns at Cleveland

Cleveland—Henry Laws, for the past 11 years with the local Pathe exchange as city salesman and office manager, has resigned. M. J. Glick has been promoted to succeed Laws, and R. F. Bishop will cover Glick's territory.

FitzPatrick on Coast

Hollywood—James A. FitzPatrick, independent producer, has returned to Los Angeles, following a lengthy journey to the Orient. The trip was in connection with the Travel Talks, which FitzPatrick is producing.

Eason Leaves Gibson Unit

Hollywood—Breezy Eason has left the Hoot Gibson unit to write the adaptation and dialogue for a W. C. Tuttle story which will be made as a two reeler by Pathe.

Iowa Sunday Victory

Lenox, Ia.—Sunday movies won here in a special election. The town has one theatre.

To Make Foreign Talkers in L. A. And Hollywood

Hollywood—Paramount has determined to divide its production of its foreign-language talkers between Hollywood and Paris.

French and Spanish versions of various pictures originally produced in English in the eastern and western studios will be made in the Paris plant, in addition to several original French and Spanish stories which will not be duplicated for domestic distribution. An undetermined number of French, Spanish and German dialogue versions will be made in Hollywood under supervision of Geoffrey Shurlock. Selection of individual pictures for foreign versioning will depend entirely upon ability to obtain capable linguists locally. If a picture lends itself to a small cast, production can be made here; but if a large number of talking parts are included in the script, picture will be shifted to the Paris studios.

Louis Gasnier has just completed direction of the all-Spanish dialogue version of "Slightly Scarlet" with Adolphe Menjou starred, and is now making the French version with Menjou also in the starring spot. Shurlock supervised both.

Gasnier, one of the oldest directors in point of service in the industry, is being sent to France by Paramount to assume direction of French and Spanish productions which will be made by that company in Paris.

Dough Re Mi

The $1,000,000 that a Los Angeles girl is suing Rudy Vallee for on complaint of pirating her song, "Vagabond Lover," is just about equal the amount that Samuel Untermyer is said to have received as counsel for William Fox in the recent stock brawl. . . . It may also interest you to know that the writer of "Sweet Adeline" is still alive and unrepentant.—The Pathfinder.

McLaglen-Dorsey in Third

Hollywood—Victor McLaglen and Fifi Dorsay are to appear together in a third Fox picture. It is "The Painted Woman," which Victor Fleming will direct.

Archainbaud Directs Dix

Hollywood — George Archainbaud has been assigned direction of Richard Dix's next starring vehicle for Radio Pictures. Wallace Smith wrote the story, which is as yet untitled. Mary Lawlor will play opposite the star.

Liberty Center, O.—Mrs. J. O. Engel has sold the Majestic to K. Thompson and Ned Smith. The house has been closed for several weeks, but the new lessees will open it again.

Leroy to Direct "Little Caesar"

Hollywood—First National has assigned Mervyn LeRoy to direct "Little Caesar," based upon W. R. Burnett's novel. Edward G. Robinson will play the title role.

Indiana Bomb Case Re-Heard On Appeal Move

Indianapolis—Oral arguments on the appeal of William P. Kielhege, Hammond, Ind., theatre operator convicted on a charge of conspiracy to bomb the State, Hammond, in November, 1927, were heard in the Indiana Supreme Court. Kielhege, who had leased the theatre, was sentenced to serve two to 14 years in the Indiana state prison and fined $1,000.

Testimony introduced at the trial in the Lake county circuit court alleged that Kielhege paid Joseph Million, also of Lake county, $2000 to have the theatre bombed in order to release himself from certain contracts. Million asserted he hired Harry L. Ames to do the bombing and that Maywood Williams and others actually placed the bombs.

Three in the case pleaded guilty and two others were sentenced to prison. All who turned state's evidence since have repudiated their evidence. Kielhege's appeal is based on the allegation that there can be no conspiracy unless two or more persons are involved and that since no one was convicted with Kielhege there was no conspiracy. It was argued that affidavits were not sufficient; that one member of the jury was incompetent in that he was unable to understand English; that perjured evidence was used and that the conviction was engineered by the county sheriff.

Dorothy Sebastian Cast

Hollywood—Dorothy Sebastian will be leading woman in Columbia's "Hell's Island" under the direction of Edward Sloman. The film again brings together the famous buddies of "Submarine" and "Flight," Jack Holt and Ralph Graves.

Zoe Akins Renews

Hollywood—Zoe Akins, playwright and novelist, who came here a year ago, has signed a new contract with Paramount. She wrote the adaptation of "Sarah and Son."

Anti-Trust Laws Need Revision, Bank Declares

Drastic revision of the anti-trust laws as being out of keeping with the needs of modern business is urged in "The Index," published by the New York Trust Co. The "very different" economic conditions existing today have antiquated the trust laws, it is stated. Since passage of the law, no single phrase has been withdrawn or revised, it is pointed out, although there have been supplementary measures adopted. Popular attitude toward competition and monopoly also has changed, it is stated.

"Since the war, the trend towards centralization has been recognized as inevitable," the publication declares, "and means have been sought to replace litigation by consultation. The growth of consultation, prior to action, however, has served to confuse rather than clarify the situation. Likewise, in spite of the underlying confusion the notion that the law has become more liberal towards industrial consolidation has steadily gained ground. This is particularly true insofar as actual mergers are concerned."

No Reduction of Tax In England in Sight

London—There is to be no reduction of the entertainment tax in the present budget, and apathy of the exhibitors' association is blamed. The Chancellor of the Exchequer made no reference to any proposed reduction in his budget speech, so it is unlikely that any cut will be forthcoming. Some time ago, the exhibitors decided against reminding the Labor government that the exhibitors supported it with the understanding that repeal of the tax would be undertaken. In this, they took the view that the government was acquainted with exhibitors' wishes in the matter.

3 Pictures Completed In Week for Sono Art

Evidence of the speed with which Sono Art-World Wide is getting out its productions in preparation for summer releases is seen in the dispatch with which the last three pictures have been completed in advance of schedule. These are "Reno," starring Ruth Roland in her comeback to the screen; "The Big Fight," James Cruze's picturization of the Belasco play which starred Jack Dempsey and Estelle Taylor, and "Once a Gentleman," starring Edward Everett Horton and Lois Wilson.

Toronto Showmen Buy Ads on Co-operative Basis

Toronto—Twenty-one local exhibitors are buying their newspaper space on a co-operative basis through Exhibitors Co-operative of Canada, Ltd., film buying combine. The theatres are listed as "Co-operative Theatres." Members buy on the open market as well as through the pool, the purchasing agent being F. R. Lennon, former exchange manager.

New Pathe Sound News Is Planned in England

New Five Year Roach Contract for Chase

Hollywood—Charley Chase has been given a new five year contract by Hal Roach. He formerly has been appearing in talkers in four languages, being conversant with French, German and Spanish. In [illegible] he sang an entire song in French and another in Spanish.

Changing Marion Name

Marion, O.—The Grand Opera House here is to lose its identity, at least for the time being. House was recently leased by Dan Gutilla, who, after making some improvements, will reopen under name of the Ohio.

A Million Dollar Insurance Policy in BELL & HOWELL Cinemachinery!

A GRAVE responsibility inspires the skilled workmen in Bell & Howell factories. They realize that, annually, millions of dollars worth of movie productions are entrusted to the dependable operation of Bell & Howell cinemachinery.

One law prevails . . . "Make it right": one question is constant . . . "Can it be made better." How costs might be cut by substituting this or slighting that is never considered.

From the first shot on location to the splicing of the trailer on the last print, the use of Bell & Howell precision machinery has always been a kind of insurance against mechanical troubles. For every hour it takes to make Bell & Howell Standard Studio Cameras, Printers, Splicers, and Perforators right, an extra year of superfine service is built into them for the appreciative members of the industry who have so long depended upon them.

RKO Gets Sue Carol

Hollywood—Sue Carol is the latest Fox contract player cast-off to be signed to a term agreement by another producer. The girl appeared in "That's My Weakness Now" for RKO, and the latter organization immediately placed her under a term contract for featured spots.

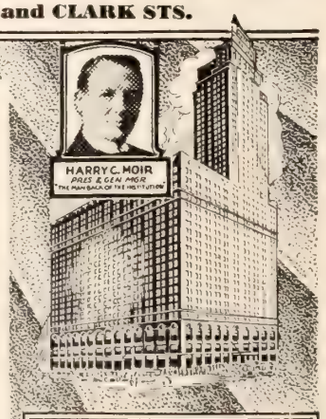
Universal to Borrow Doug, Jr., from F. N.

Hollywood—Universal is negotiating with First National to borrow Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., for the starring spot in "The Little Accident" which William James Craft will direct. As production is scheduled for June, chance for the loan-out is good in view of the fact Fairbanks, Jr., will finish his next First National picture in time to move over to Universal.

Chaney Wants "Penalty"

Hollywood—With his first talker, "The Unholy Three," completed at M-G-M Studios this week, reports state that Lon Chaney is endeavoring to convince studio officials that "The Penalty" would make a great dialogue production with himself in the starring spot. "The Penalty" was produced eight years ago by the old Goldwyn company, with Chaney appearing as the legless crook. At the time it rated high in popularity with the public.

"Squaw Man" Shelved



Hollywood—First National has shelved preparations for "The Squaw Man," a talker remake of the famous stage play. Lila Lee, signed for a featured spot in the intended picture, will play the lead in an original story now being written by Julien Josephson.

'Hold Everything' Gathers $12,000 At Rivoli, Balto.

Baltimore—Various factors combined to make business here spotty. Daylight saving, although voluntary, hurt some houses but did not affect others and there was a hot spell which curtailed business to some extent.

The Loew houses, including the Century, Stanley, Parkway and Valencia took the bumps, going way below normal averages. But the Little theatre, with 267 seats, started its sound policy and went way up with a 190 per cent rating and a gross of $1,900, with "Hallelujah."

For its nine days at the Auditorium, "King of Jazz," grossed about $3,630, giving it rating of 55 per cent. This is held here to make it apparent that pictures cannot be sold to the Baltimore public at $1 top price with other houses charging 50 and 60 cents top.

"Hold Everything," did a banner business at the Metropolitan and Rivoli simultaneously, showing $12,000 gross at the latter with a rating of 150 per cent and with $7,500 at the former showing a 125 per cent. rating.

Weather: Started cloudy and cool Monday, then gradually warmed until it was clear and hot Friday and Saturday.

The Army Wins

"There is a movie magnate," writes Jack Miley to Sid Skolsky, "who rejoices in one of those honorary military titles that many a governor would swap for a campaign contribution. Not so long ago he joined a swanky yacht club.

"He then called in his press agent and told him to pick him up a commodoreship, either new or slightly used, without delay. He would build a new clubhouse or buy an ocean liner as his flagship, but he just had to be a commodore.

"The space grabber was stymied. But he went through the motions. Then he struck a snag and a swell alibi. He discovered that only the President of the United States, who is commander-in-chief of the nation's armed forces, can hold both military and naval rank at the same time.

"He explained this to the ambitious showman. The latter gazed fondly at a picture of himself in his military trappings, with an American flag as a back drop. Then he told the relieved ballyhoo boy:

"'Well, neffer mind, den. If I have to choose, I guess I'll stay in de army!'"

Two Slide Over, Rest Under Line On Erie's Shores

Cleveland—A severe hot spell and continued business depression combined to keep people away from the theatres last week. None of the houses did any outstanding business, although "High Society Blues" held its own fairly well during its second week at the Hippodrome. The dope sheet:

Weather: Very warm. Clear all week.

Opposition: "Vagabond King," Stillman, 2nd week; "Ladies Love Brutes," Allen; "The Benson Murder Case," State; "Framed," RKO Palace; "High Society Blues," Hippodrome, 2nd week; "Runaway Bride," Keith's East 105th St. Stage: "Front Page," 2nd week; "Peak O'A England."

3rd Off Week in Omaha; Nothing But Rain There

Omaha—Third week of rain and bargains off all over town. Natives are not educated to revue stuff and shunned "Paramount on Parade" at the Paramount. Picture only got $8,075 which is 5 per cent under par.

Richard Dix proved popular enough to bring the Orpheum another good week in $15,000 in Radio's "Lovin' the Ladies." John Gilbert in "Redemption" (M-G-M) at the State for three days did $2,500 for a 100 per cent rating.

With George Dewey Washington back for a return engagement, the World failed to do any better than $9,500 with "Puttin' On the Ritz" (U. A.) Week's flop was "Children of Pleasure" (M-G-M), last four days at the State, taking only $2,125, or 85 per cent.

Weather: Rain, generally unsettled.

Opposition: "Paramount on Parade," Paramount; "Lovin' The Ladies," Scot Sanders and RKO bill, Orpheum; "Puttin' on the Ritz," George Dewey Washington and vaudeville bill, World; "Redemption" (first half) and "Children of Pleasure" (last half), State.

"Ritz" Is High in Providence on $21,500 Gross

Providence—Downtown houses, despite opposition of a stock opening, clicked into high totals last week, "Puttin' on the Ritz" at Loew's State hitting top spot with $21,500 on a percentage of 110. RKO's Victory, with "Cohens and Kellys in Scotland," was strong at $10,000, while the Majestic, with "Sarah and Son," enjoyed a good week, hitting about $11,500. RKO Albee, with "Dangerous Paradise" and vaudeville, climbed to about $10,700.

Weather: Warm; fair.

"White Cargo" in Profit Lead in Chi, Does $9,800

Chicago—The week introduced no new money-makers to the loop trade. All hold-overs were above average with the pygmy-size Castle still in the profit lead with "White Cargo" playing to its second capacity week for $9,800. "Happy Days" (Fox) did $28,600 at the Roosevelt, which is prosperity there. "The Rogue Song" (M-G-M) bolstered by plenty of advertising, grossed $36,500 at McVickers.

The Woods retained first place in RKO's national profit contest, (running for two months) by virtue of a neat $14,300 for "Ladies of Leisure" (Col.) in its third and final week. "Puttin' on the Ritz" (U. A.) dropped miserably in its second week and was replaced by "Be Yourself" (U. A.) at the United Artists. "The Light of Western Stars" (Para.) shone coldly on the Chicago, which grossed only $44,200 for the week, poor for this house.

Weather: Fine.

Opposition: "Ladies of Leisure," 3d week, Pathe news, Disney cartoon, RKO novelty short—Woods; "Spring Is Here," 6 acts RKO vaudeville, Pathe novelty short—State-Lake; "The Light of Western Stars," stage show, orchestra, newsreel, comedy, novelty short—Oriental; "Puttin' on the Ritz," Para. comedy and novelty short, newsreel (2nd deek), United Artists; "The Rogue Song," comedy, newsreel, novelty short (2nd week), McVickers; "Happy Days," comedy, newsreel, novelty short, (2nd week), Roosevelt; "The Three Sisters," 30 minutes newsreel, Monroe; "Ingagi," (6th week), Garrick; "Song of the West," 3 Vitaphone acts, Orpheum; "White Cargo" (2nd week), Univ. newsreel, Castle.

Lima House Reopens

Lima, O.—Lima Ritz Theatres Co., has opened the Lyric which has been closed for several weeks, during which time the house was renovated, and sound equipment installed.

A Tough Ol' World

The talkies continue to play heck with the theatrical profession. Only the other day, Leo Heatley saw an actor passing the New York Palace with a small box under his arm when he was greeted by an acquaintance.

"Hello—somebody give you a box of cigars?"

"No—why?"

"Well, I see you have a cigar box under your arm."

"Cigar box, nothing! Boy, I'm moving, and that's my trunk!"

$23,000 in 'Frisco For 'Rogue Song' On Second Week

San Francisco—Another good week for theatres here. Both the weather and the pictures were responsible. The "Rogue Song," in its second week at the Warfield, went over with a bang, doing excellent business on a $23,000 take with a 165 per cent rating.

The eclipse of the sun was witnessed and explained in this city for many days. The prophets brought many thousands to the streets, explaining all would be over by 11 A.M. As the theatres, generally, do not open before 11:30, about the time the eclipse excitement was over, more than the usual number were on the streets ready to enter theatres and did.

The Embassy, a Wagnon house, finished the week with $11,000, or a percentage of 135 per cent. Six of the houses averaged over 100 per cent with "Hold Everything" (Warners) the most so many have done in this city in one week for months.

Indian Film Premiere Set

"The Silent Enemy," a story of the Ojibway Indians, filmed in the north woods of Canada, by William Douglas Burden, New York society man, explorer and big game hunter, is to have its premiere May 19 at the Criterion, New York. William C. Chanler, junior partner of the law firm of Secretary of State Stimson, and H. P. Carver, Canadian sportsman and banker, who directed the picture, were among members of the expedition, which spent eight months in the Canadian wilds. The company handling the picture is Burden-Chanler Prod.

Doug, Jr., Anita Page Cast

Hollywood—Anita Page and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., have been signed for featured roles in "Little Accident," the play by Floyd Dell and Thomas Mitchell, which Universal will produce as a special. It will be directed by William J. Craft, with dialogue by Paul Dickey.

Wotta Guy

Dave Bader, the Grover Whalen of Universal, who is assembling data for a biography of Carl Laemmle, sails next Wednesday for England in company with James V. Bryson, managing director of Universal activities in the United Kingdom. While in England, Dave will exploit "King of Jazz" and "All Quiet on the Western Front."

"He probably will undo all the work the naval conference accomplished," was the comment of one wag when told that Dave was headed for Great Britain.

Heat, Moving Day, Spring Cleaning Sock Ottawa B. O.

Ottawa—With moving day, spring housecleaning and warm weather, the majority of theatres in Ottawa took a wallop on the nose in so far as box office returns were concerned last week. Keith's held up fairly well with "She Couldn't Say No" and "One Romantic Night" (last half), the latter largely through the introduction of Lillian Gish in a talking role. "The Rogue Song" proved a disappointment at the Regent, while "Montana Moon" had a fair week at the Centre. "Oh, Yeah" at the Avalon was voted one of the season's worst.

Opposition: "Montana Moon," Centre; "The Rogue Song," Regent; "She Couldn't Say No," and 5 RKO acts, Keith's; "Oh, Yeah," Avalon; "Song of the West," Imperial; "One Romantic Night," B. F. Keith's; "Navy Blues," Avalon.

Powell Going Abroad

Hollywood—William Powell plans a six weeks' vacation trip to Europe following completion of "For the Defense."

Emphasizing the "EX"

Nita Naldi. Ex-Follies beauty and ex-movie-star. I often wonder how Nita is enjoying life these days. They tell me that she hasn't been in America in some time. Give her Paris or give her death.

Nita was a great girl. Still is, for all I know. She had strong likes and dislikes—and didn't hesitate to announce them to the world. One of her pet peeves was Gloria Swanson. And how she went on about our Gloria.

One of Nita's proudest boasts was that she never read any part of a newspaper except the comic strips. This in spite of the fact that if you put her name among the classified ads, she'd find it. But that's neither here nor there.

McCormack Film Only One Below Par in Boston

Boston—Continued good business marked the week in spite of hot weather. Personal appearance of Alma Rubens resulted in a jump in Keith-Albee's gross, which advanced to $22,500 for the best mark in weeks. Publix Metropolitan's "Light of Western Stars," plus the Rooneys, went across for $36,000, maintaining its spring high mark with a rating of 125%. Loew's State also did a big week's business with "The Divorcee" and no other frills for attractions. "High Society Blues" was held over for a second week at the Keith Memorial, something that rarely happens, doing $25,000 (115%) for a second week. The two road shows, "Song o' My Heart," for its sixth week, dropped a little to $9,000, and "Journey's End," in its second week, was good for $12,500, or 115%, even bettering its first week's mark.

"Loose Ankles" Pulls $7,300 In Des Moines

Des Moines—"Loose Ankles," playing at the Strand for a four-day show, made the highest percentage of pictures showing in a week of rain, hot weather and a variety of counter attractions, including introduction here of night baseball, which drew a crowd numbering 11,000 the first night.

In general, this was not felt to have any effect on the regular theatre business and all the houses did business about up to average with the exception of "Puttin' on the Ritz," which made a rather low showing in spite of the fact that the notices and the comments were favorable. The Orpheum shows had a good week.

Weather: Unfavorable.

Bartlett, Opera Warbler, Signs Contract with Fox

Edwin Bartlett, operatic singer, has been signed to star in Fox pictures. His first monicker has been changed to Michael for reasons not announced and his initial picture is set as "The Heart Breaker."

The deal provides for Bartlett to alternate between the Fox studio and the Metropolitan Opera in an elastic arrangement covering a period of years.

The Low Down on Cecil De Mille's Yes Men

"Not the least of the laughs which come to me from my picture activities are those which are contained in the newspaper and magazine cartoons. In the way that legends spring up, there is one to the effect that I am constantly surrounded by a mythical group called 'yes men.' This despite the fact that my friends in the industry know of my invariable rule to dismiss any one who costs me a loss of money or time by giving me a wrong 'yes' decision. Members of my immediate staff have been with me for years and they are dear to me because I know I can trust them to put their 'nos' and 'yesses' in the right places."

Lots of Seats

Bucyrus, O.—If present plans mature, there will be a theatre seat for every two persons in the city. Work is expected to start shortly on a 1,000-seat house on the site of the present Hippodrome. The project is being sponsored by Bucyrus Theatres Co., who now have two houses here. Plans call for completion by Sept. 1. Another house, to seat 1,500, is being built by Adrin Wisman, this city, and John Seifert, of Dayton, O.—opening also scheduled for Sept. 1. The city has a population of 7,000, and the combined seating capacity of all houses, including the two under construction, will be around 3,500. H. L. Charnas, of Warner Bros., is president of the Bucyrus Theatres Co.

Talkers Create Good Will on Tour of World

Possibility of new fields of service for the talking picture as a builder of international good will and commerce was illustrated by the S. S. President Fillmore of the Dollar Line, which returned to New York last week after a trip around the world, during which it was the first boat to show talking pictures in every part of the globe.

What possibilities this new medium of transportation have opened up was expressed by George F. Anderson, the purser, under whose supervision the shows were held.

Played "S. R. O."

"We had a capacity attendance every night we showed talking pictures," he said. "At many ports where we gave special showings for invited audiences, talking pictures had never been seen and heard before. In Kobe and Naples especially these demonstrations aroused unusual interest, while in every port considerable enthusiasm was shown. I feel certain that during our 25,000-mile trip we created new patrons for talking pictures and for American equipment."

The President Fillmore left New York Jan. 15 with a Western Electric portable equipment on board as a permanent installation. One of the features of the program was the series of outdoor exhibitions held at night on the open deck when weather and temperature were favorable.

15 Changes on Next Trip

So impressive were these showings that Joe Fisher, Singapore exhibitor, who was a passenger on the boat from Manilla to Singapore, declared that he was going to alter the plans of a new theatre he had under construction, to allow for outdoor showings. He stated his conviction that the exhibitions aboard the steamer would change theatre construction in tropical countries in the future.

The steamer, on its next voyage, hopes to enlarge its program to include at least 15 different changes of pictures.

Movietone Follies of 1930

(Fox—All Talker)

Pleasant; Brendel Grand

(Reviewed by Red Kann)

BRENDEL and White, but Brendel first. Without them, "Movietone Follies of 1930" would have been a dull affair. With them, it becomes fun. Not big, this picture, but pleasing in the manner that all fluff divertissment can be when handled properly.

The story is as thin as thin. Just an excuse to hang the musical numbers on, as a matter of fact. Where other revues have been going the way of unsuccessful celluloid, the gang on the Fox lot here demonstrate what astute showmen they are by tying in a yarn to give the various numbers an excuse for being.

El Brendel, the funny man, is here turned loose on the audience as a valet to Buster Collier, do-nothing nephew of a rich uncle. It seems Buster manages to get himself in scrapes with great punctuality. So much so that uncle determines to cut his allowance down to nothing at all, if nephew doesn't behave himself. Collier is in love with Miriam Seegar, a show girl and uncle, the story tells you further, hates show girls. Or does until Noel Francis, who knows uncle well enough to call him Dodo appears on the scene. Anyway, Brendel also finds himself weak in the knees when chorines are about, attempts, and almost succeeds, in passing himself off as a big lumber man from the someplace in the Northwest. He gets away with it, until Collier determines to give a show for war veterans at his uncle's estate and hires the whole troupe up for the week-end.

Brendel hits trouble from then on. So does uncle when his sweetie recognizes him, but it all turns out O.K. in the end, just as you expect and would have it. The ghost of a story gives an opportunity to bring in the musical numbers including a swell affair called "Movietonia" which concerns itself with Marjorie White's efforts to break into pictures; "Emily Brown," as another and something or other about "a strange feeling sneaking over me" which Brendel, Noel Francis and Miss White put over with a bang.

Brendel is pretty much the whole show. He's a real comic, that fellow, with a tie and trousers that refuse to stay put and his humorous Swedish accent. Miss White, who hands out a brand of fun peculiar unto herself, does very well in second place.

Newsreel and cartoons all that's needed.

Strictly Modern

(First National—All Talker)

Very Light

(Reviewed by Charles J. Haines)

THIS has a very light plot, but a few moments of comedy keep it from flopping. The wind-up is a riot. It's a case of one punch line putting over a picture. This is the wedding scene when the officiating judge, who is befuddled by a knockout drop, asks forgiveness for the pair "For they know not what they do." It's a line which will bring down any house.

More Blues

Through the Universal publicity office we learn that "Rhapsody Blue" is destined to be one of the fashionable hues this fall. None other than Mme. Rorke, fashion arbiter, has selected it—out of compliment to George Gershwin's "The Rhapsody in Blue," the radio signature of Paul Whiteman. Paul, you understand, has a "big" role in U's "King of Jazz." Which explains the reason for this fashion note in a trade journal.

Otherwise the picture is just another one of those things, albeit pleasing enough for this type of light material. It's about a novelist who falls in love with her cousin's fiance, unaware of the latter's identity. The cousin, in turn, is in love with the judge who is slated to perform the wedding ceremony. They carry the affair through to the ceremony, when the judge passes out just as he is about to pronounce them man and wife. He had been given a drink with a few knockout drops by the novelist, so everything turns out nicely.

It's far-fetched, and at times silly, but breezy and occasionally very funny fare designed for the hot weather.

Dorothy Mackaill is pretty much the whole picture and gets some laughs. Warner Richmond as the "bluenose" judge, also gets some laughs, despite some awful lines.

Sidney Blackmer is not so hot in the male lead. Julanne Johnston is adequate as the other girl, Katherine Claire Ward is good as the mother and Mickey Bennett injects some fresh kid comedy bits. Direction is good considering the light story.

With enough help from shorts, this will get over as a passable program offering. At the New York Strand they gave it seven shorts and a newsreel for bolstering.

White Hell of Pitz Palu

(Universal—Synchronized)

Great Thrill Spectacle

(Reviewed by Edwin Schallert)

THIS is a marvelous picture, and all but justifies the return of the silent film as an institution. You will have to take the trouble to sell the idea to your audiences of the big things it contains in order to get them over the non-dialogued stretch right at the beginning, but once they are into the spectacular thrills of this super-drama of Alpine mountain climbing they will be completely mesmerized.

Few films of the outdoors have been better photographed than the "White Hell of Pitz Palu." There are so many camera angles that an expert would go crazy trying to keep track of them. If there are any studio shots they are very cleverly inserted. The thing looks real right straight through, and when an airplane starts doing loops over the mountain-peaks the audience will just go wild, that's all.

Universal got the "White Hell" from Europe, and the names in the cast naturally don't mean a thing. But the scenery, the avalanches, the spill of a climbing party into a terrible crevasse, the quest of the rescuers in the depths of that gruesome chasm of ice—these are the real starring events.

There are shots in this picture that will make you feel as if you were just being saved from falling over a precipice yourself. There is one where a mountain-climber is carried off his feet by a snowslide, and is only prevented from crashing to his death by two people desperately clinging to the rope that holds him. This is a hair-raising thrill. Then to see the slow, tedious, almost hopeless process by which his dangling frame is brought back to terra firma again is in itself a whole epic of drama.

However, it is the airplane that really puts the peak on the interest. The daring effort of the aviator to locate the lost mountaineers, his seemingly hopeless search, the suspense as his eyes rove over the endless white expanse, his final locating of the lost people by flying close to the walls of snow and ice—these are an unrivaled experience to watch. In these scenes and others "The White Hell" becomes another "Nanook of the North," with even more thrills.

There is a plot about a sacrifice made by a mountain climber, who has had a life of bitter tragedy, for the sake of the husband and wife who go with him on a daring expedition to the heights. The story is just sufficient to give the human note of drama to the whole. It is an excellent story for the kind, and the opening scenes, while a little slow, excite considerable curiosity as to what is going to take place. It is the spectacular stuff in the "White Hell" that will really prove outstanding.

Musical or comedy short to lighten program, as this feature is extremely intense. Comedy should be judiciously chosen—not too much slapstick.

Asphalt

(UFA—Synchronized)

Gripping

(Reviewed by Robert Hage)

BILLED as the last silent picture to be made by UFA, "Asphalt" is a welcome interlude in the rapid procession of talkers and instills an occasional feeling of regret that the pantomimic art is passing out with the advent of dialogue. Less than twenty subtitles are used, but the story unfolds so smoothly that even the most confirmed addict of talkers will find it entertaining.

It is difficult to understand, however, how it was given its title. The hero is a Berlin traffic policeman, but the brief sequence showing him at work on a safety island on an asphalt street hardly justifies inflicting such an incongruous title on the production.

The story is a typical German melodrama, unleavened with humor or lightness, but the director, Joe May, has succeeded in building up the suspense so effectively that at no time does the attention lag. The acting is simple and natural; the five principals give cameo-like performances that are outstanding. Gustav Froelich, as the traffic cop, and Betty Amann, as the consort of a master criminal, are convincing and neither overacts in the arduous roles assigned to them.

"Asphalt" relates the tale of a policeman who, arresting a pretty adventuress for the theft of a diamond, falls victim to her wiles and allows her to go free. The seduction scene is handled with skill and cleverness. Mutual love develops between the policeman and the thief, and their affair comes to a dramatic climax when the girl's lover interrupts them. In the fight that ensues the policeman kills the man and is arrested by his own father, a sergeant on the force. The girl's admission that her lover was a notorious criminal exonerates the policeman, but she goes to jail as a material witness. Their passionate embrace before she is led away is the only hint of an ultimate happy ending.

The entire production is marked by a sincerity that appeals to the lovers of good acting and expert direction, even though the story is heavy fare. In running it makes an exploitation play aimed at the irreconcilables who prefer silent pictures. The synchronized score is excellent.

Give them snappy comedies to provide contrast.

Born Reckless

(Fox—All Talker)

Corking Melodrama

(Reviewed by Red Kann)

GOOD, old reliable box-office—the cleverly concocted, suspense-creating melodrama. This has the necessary "it" to make that grade.

The readers of the book by Donald Henderson Clarke won't recognize "Louis Beretti" in its new monicker, "Born Reckless." It is, therefore, up to the exhibitor to drive home the fact in his advertising. He can promise further a rattling good picture with a couple of real kicks.

There have been many yarns in this mould. Here is another case of an East Side boy, enmeshed in the corroding influence of bad company, who turns gangster but never long enough to forget his Italian parents. So far as they are concerned, Beretti is a hard-working youngster whose "business" keeps him and takes him out at unexpected hours.

As a result of a jewelry job, Beretti and two of his gang are nabbed, carted away to the assistant district attorney's office and headed up the river. Lee Tracy, who contributed a corking good performance as the newspaper reporter, gets a hunch for a story and a campaign plug on which the D.A. can hang his election. It's the patriotism gag and results in shipping the trio overseas to fight just "because they like to shoot off guns." Then the war stuff, played down for horror and up for comedy, the friendship stuck up between Beretti, played by Edmund Lowe and Sheldon, played by Frank Albertson.

Back in New York, Beretti finds he has squared his account with the former district attorney, now judge, and starts out anew. He drifts into the night club racket and somewhat away from the old mob only to be brought back again when "Big Shot" settles his account with Ritzy Reilly for squealing. Later when Sheldon's sister reports her baby has been stolen, Beretti effects the rescue and shoots it out with "Big Shot" who demands an accounting because Beretti failed "to keep his nose clean." You don't see Beretti die, but the implication is clearly planted. Into this yarn has been built a number of real suspense sequences and a series of sardonic illusions to war and patriotism. Jack Ford, the director, stripped many of the illusions from the glamor of war and for once, in pictures at least, you get the impression that flag-waving has been de-bunked.

Lowe does a swell job in the title role. His is a smooth performance in entire keeping with the character he portrays. Warren Hymer, as "Big Shot" is immense and Tracy, fine. Marguerite Churchill has little to do as Berreti's sister and dispatches her part efficiently. Catherine Dale Owen, decorative as usual, displays nothing histrionically.

Comedy honors are divided between Joe Brown and Eddie Gribbon.

Cartoon comedies will go well with this.

The Second Floor Mystery

(Warners—All Talker)

Good Programmer

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

Novelty of story is the selling point of this picture, plus the fact that its leads are Loretta Young and Grant Withers, who recently secured quite a bit of publicity through their airplane elopement.

After a comparatively slow start, the picture hits its stride, and events follow thick and fast. An American in London, trying to win an introduction to an American girl, through the medium of the personal column of "The Times" is advised by her that he may write a letter each day for five successive days, and if they are sufficiently interesting, she will meet him. He concocts a murder story in which a number of persons are suspects and winds up by confessing that he is the real murderer.

The girl arrives on the scene with police, the young man is thrown into a dungeon, from where he is rescued by anarchists, and then ordered to blow up the building. He finds the girl bound and gagged and rescues her, only to find that from the time of the police arrival, the whole affair is a frame-up engineered by the girl to return thrill for thrill.

After the time of the first supposed murder, events move swiftly, and the picture has suspense and comedy.

Grant Withers looks like a screen comer and Loretta Young is a pretty heroine. H. B. Warner, as always, stands out and Sidney Bracy gets some laughs. Other members of the well-balanced cast are: Claire McDowell, Crauford Kent, John Loder, Claude King and Judith Voselli.

"Hell" Picnic Site

Tampa, Fla.—The "location" used for the filming of "Hell Harbor" has always been known as "Rocky Point," but since the making of this, the first all-talking film to be made here, the name has been changed to "Hell Harbor" and made over into a picnic ground. Several of the Tampa clubs and societies are using it for their outings.

Redemption

(M-G-M—All Talker)

Heavy, But Worthwhile

(Reviewed by Red Kann)

DUBIOUS entertainment for flappers. Worthwhile for the older folks. "Redemption," like the run-of-the-mill Russian literature, is far too heavy to make light screen fare. The picture is drama all the way with an occasional relief touch interjected but at too rare intervals to lift the production out of its morbid tempo.

The story has been made several times as a silent, but this represents its first venture in the field of talkers. Based on the stage play, "Redemption" is in turn, culled from "The Living Dead" by Tolstoi. Dorothy Farnum did the script and Edwin Justus Mayer, the dialogue. Both did a fine job, Mayer's dialogue, in particular, doing much to give the picture impressiveness and tone.

John Gilbert, as the lead, comes through with a generally creditable performance. What the microphone does to his voice is unfortunate for him, however, in that it gives him a thin voice out of consonance with the character he is given to portray. Whether Fred Niblo's direction is responsible, or whether Gilbert insisted upon cloaking the part of Fedya with too much of his own interpretation is something which the reviewer can only guess. But it is a fact that the screen shows Gilbert often indulging in eye-rolling and heavings which occasioned one of the dear public next to the writer to remark, "I wish he would act more like the two-fisted, hard-drinking he-man he is supposed to be."

The performance, taken by and large, is, however, very good indeed. As the Russian waster who wrecks his wife's life as he falls lower into the muck, Gilbert gets over an intelligent interpretation of a man going to the dogs, via the vodka and woman route.

You see him ousting Conrad Nagel for Eleanor Boardman's love, their marriage, the birth of the baby and the return of the restlessness which carries Gilbert to the roulette wheel and estrangement from his wife. He falls to the level of gypsy dives, makes up with Masha, a part played without distinction by Renee Adoree until, in his cups, he tells a drinking partner how his wife married Nagel in the belief he had been drowned. Then the three principals meet in the court where investigations of the second marriage on the grounds of bigamy are under way. In the corridor, Gilbert, finally realizing that he is again imperilling the lives of his wife and his best friend, shoots himself.

Miss Boardman's voice records splendidly and she contributes to the whole a nicely balanced and judiciously restrained performance. Nagel proves himself decorative and little beyond that. Much of the photography is grainy and lacking in lustre. The photographic job is generally average.

Needs bright shorts to relieve heavy story.

Produced and distributed by M-G-M. Based on stage play, "Redemption." Directed by Fred Niblo. Adapted by Dorothy Farnum. Dialogue by Edwin Justus Mayer. Edited by Margaret Booth. Photographed by Percy Hilburn. Length, 6,019 feet. Running time, 67 mins. Release date, April 5, 1930.

Caught Short

(M-G-M—Talker)

Roaring Comedy

(Reviewed at Loew Midtown)

WHEN M-G-M saw the tremendous box office receipts scored by the comedy team of Marie Dressler and Polly Moran in various pictures, decision was made to co-star the pair in their own comedy. "Caught Short" is the result.

It's good old rollicking, broad-belted, abdominal-shaking comedy that produces a continuous roar from the most blase audiences. As a comedy it's immense—due to hit big business in the key week stands and following program bookings. Although not made as a special, it has profit-making qualities for any theatre.

In "Caught Short," farce is staged as only Polly and Marie can stage it with appropriate facial contortions and gestures. Willard Mack's original story, with the title of Eddie Cantor's booklet tagged on to it, is taken for a ride by the two veteran troupers. And what a loop-the-loop they give it!

The stock market adventures of two boarding house keepers form the slight story background for the picture. First, Polly plunges on a rising market and collects plenty. She and Marie spend a major portion of the picture arguing and tearfully making up. Most of the arguments are over Marie's refusal to risk her savings of $3,800 on American Cheese or Brazilian Bananas.

Marie even withdraws the money from the bank because she fears the cashier might abscond with her savings. The trials she has with the poke-full of change furnish background for much of the hilarious slapstick throughout the picture.

Marie has a daughter, played by Anita Page, who manages to wear a gorgeous assortment of clothes for the daughter of a boarding-house keeper. Polly has a son—Charles Morton—who tries to sing at various times. He is also the one responsible for all the stock market excitement, as he started things. Of course, young romance is necessary and Anita and Morton supply this element.

After a split, the boy and girl are finally brought together for a real family marriage. Polly and Marie are back to the boarding house game after a brief flyer in the market and high society. Fade out is a topper for roars when a baby in the background begins to cry. Polly and Marie make a wild dash for the cry—both proudly saying "Grandma's coming."

Throughout the picture—light on story, but strong on laugh situations and sequences—everything points to build-up of comedy values. Result is one of the funniest feature comedies from standpoint of laughs that has been produced in talker form. Charles Reisner, past-master in direction of slapstick comedy, got just about everything possible out of every gag and situation.

Necessary and short musicals can be slotted here.

"Unguarded Girls"

The NEWS caught this production as a matter of routine. It is so crude and smutty that to review it in the regular manner would dignify a picture of morons and for morons. Its appeal is directed solely at the putrid-minded and the lobby of the Earl Carroll Theatre in New York, rented for its showing, is filled with salacious stills that lure in the yokels and the feeble-minded. The cast is composed of the rankest of amateurs; the direction is so feeble that it creaks and it probably required all of three days to shoot it.

Preceding the showing, a man devotes twenty minutes to plugging seven pamphlets on "sex education," promising, by innuendo, revelations of a highly spicy nature. But the most offensive feature of the program is a "lecturer" on sex topics who, after analyzing for the ignoramuses in the audience the sex characteristics of five unattractive girls in bathing suits who appear on the stage, gives a lantern slide talk on venereal diseases, accompanying it with a line of obscenity, rarely, if ever, before heard on a public platform.

Return of Dr. Fu Manchu

(Paramount—All Talker)

Exciting Meller

(Reviewed by Charles T. Hynes)

A SEQUEL to "The Insidious Dr. Fu Manchu," and more thrilling than its predecessor, although more gruesome. These Sax Rohmer stories have had a wide vogue, and for that reason this should prove a business-getter. Its gruesomeness may lessen the enjoyment for women, but it is so well done that this is counterbalanced to great extent.

If you played the first of the two pictures, you'll surely want this, stressing the fact that it is a continuation of the first. If you haven't played them, you'll want to, but be sure to play them in order.

The splendid cast is the same as in the initial picture, with Warner Oland as the maniacal Oriental. The first picture ended when he took poison, and this one opens with the funeral. Only, the insidious doctor is not dead, the poison having been only of a temporary nature. In deference to the Chinese religion, no autopsy is performed, so the doctor makes good his escape and resumes his work of vengeance. There remains but one more person for him to slay, Dr. Pietrie, who is about to wed the girl over whom the doctor wields such a powerful and sinister influence. The wedding ceremony is halted, through the murder of the girl's servant. The doctor then prepares to attack in force and captures the girl, through whom he hopes to lure Pietrie. The Scotland Yard inspector substitutes for the intended victim, and in re-drug which will paralyze his mind and for [illegible] arrival of rescuing police prevents this, but the Chinese escapes with the girl. Wounded, he lures Pietrie to him and forces the latter [illegible] lyzed with the drug. He Wows 'Em

Talker fans are going to go for Noah Beery in a big way. The veteran character actor, who in silent days was recognized as one of the screen's outstanding villains, possesses a fine speaking voice and in addition is a basso of the first magnitude. He sings a song in "The Song of the Flame" in which he strikes some remarkably low notes and the rendition practically steals a picture, whose chief appeal is its music. Hynes

(Sovkino—Talker)

Soviet Propaganda

(Reviewed by Robert Herr)

A SCORE of pictures and statues of Nicolai Lenin, spotted throughout the production, and editorial subtitles praising the Communist system, mark this as purely a vehicle for advancing the propaganda of the Soviet Republic. Subtly injected into it is a slam at the Russian priesthood.

As entertainment the picture is a total loss, the story being a simple narrative of peasant life in Russia. The heroine, if she can be called such, is so repulsive physically that the director's efforts to evoke sympathy in her behalf are fruitless. The others in the cast, none of whom is named, are striking character types, but not easy to look at.

The direction and scenario are credited to Sergei Eisenstein and Gregory V. Alexandrov. The former, it is understood, is being sought by Paramount to direct one picture and Douglas Fairbanks has announced his intention of conferring with Eisenstein on his European trip for the purpose of luring him to Hollywood.

In "Old and New" Eisenstein reveals touches of directional talent especially in depicting the stark tragedy of peasant life in Russia, but his trick of choppy sequences and subtitles are a terrific strain on the eyes. Sentences are split into one-word subtitles, with a brief flash of action between, and split-second close-ups of bearded faces prove irritating. A vast variety of camera angles are employed, but they show little originality. Eisenstein had a free hand in depicting the depths of squalor in which the peasants live, and the hardihood of their struggles for existence, and in these he excels in dramatic power.

Martha, the peasant woman, unable to eke a living out of the soil because she does not possess a horse, is responsible for the creation of a cooperative farm. It prospers rapidly, due, we are told, to the Soviet principles, but the farmers who have amassed more worldly goods than Martha and her ilk combine to defeat the venture. There is little clash or conflict in the tale, which moves slowly throughout.

Shown in an "art" theatre in New York, it evoked applause from scattered sections of the audience, but there is little appeal in it for typical American audiences.

Needs all the good support it can get in short subjects.

Produced in U. S. S. R. by Sovkino. Distributed in U. S. by Amkino. Scenario and direction by Sergei M. Eisenstein and Gregory V. Alexandrov. Photography by Edward Tisse. No cast given. Length, 6,800 feet. Running time, 76 minutes. Release date, May 2, 1930.

Short Subject Reviews

Keeping Company

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 963-64—2 Reels)

Has a Kick

THEY'VE climaxed this with a whippet race which carries a real punch. Eddie Buzzell is the broke proprietor of an animal shop, and is persuaded to enter his dog in the race. He wins the big purse, a 10 to 1 bet from his rival and the girl, after the rival's unsuccessful effort to frame the race. This has good story interest, some laughs and a good song number by Eddie. A pleasing subject. Running time, 19 minutes.

Good for any bill.

On the Plantation

(Tiffany Talker—2 Reels)

Too Long

SO LONG it gets tiresome. The chief fault with this short is its footage. In one reel, O.K. In two, boresome despite the general excellence of the Forbes Randolph singers. The spirituals are extremely well done, but the subject wanders and wanders. Guaranteed to weary most audiences in its present footage. Trimmed, it would make a nice short. Running time, 20 mins.

Acceptable with almost any type of feature.

She's a He

(Universal-Talker—2 Reels)

Mildly Amusing

SUNNY JIM, nee Snookums, and his little pals are great actors, but the adult support is woefully weak. The story is padded out and lacking in comedy situations, resulting in a paucity of laughs. Sunny Jim must impersonate a girl because his wealthy aunt is going to visit them and, as she was partial to that sex and had never been informed that "she was a he," the parents resorted to the masquerade. The boy rebels, but goes through with it to the point where the aunt reveals that she prefers boys. It will get by, but they won't cheer.

Will fit into any type of bill.

Pick 'Em Young

(Pathe—Talker—2 Reels)

Hash

A CONGLOMERATION of burlesque humor, ancient plot and ham acting. Director Monte Carter has tried to mix the story of the man who had to marry before midnight to inherit a fortune, with some revue stuff, and the concoction is pretty sad. He has spotted in four songs that are just as dreary, and production values are lacking. It's pretty painful watching Robert Agnew trying to be funny and the beefy chorus attempting to dance. Carmelita Geraghty as a Spanish vamp is the best player in the cast, but she overacts. Weak in every department. Running time, 20 minutes.

Run it with a strong supporting program.

Men of War

(M-G-M—Roach—2 Reels)

Not Their Best

LAUREL and Hardy get a fair quota of laughs, but the material isn't there this time. Sequences are strung out to unusual lengths and pall at times. The comedians are a pair of tars on shore leave who pick up a couple of girls and take them for a row. They mess things up, knock over a flock of other boats and canoes, stage a pillow fight and in general put on a slapstick performance that lacks variety. The laughs center in the spilling of the boats. Running time, 20 minutes.

Okay on any bill.

The Fight

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 1006—1 Reel)

Amusing

A BURLESQUE on the squared ring and pretty good entertainment. Norman Breckenridge, radio announcer, gives a word picture over the air and, he describes the various tidbits of the slugging match, you see the two fighter-comedians giving a literal pictorial interpretation of the description. For instance, Breckenridge talks about a haymaker and into the ring comes a farmer with a rake, etc.

Use as relief for heavy feature.

Jazz Rehearsal

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 3760—1 Reel)

Fair Entertainment

AN all-Technicolor back-stage number that hits neither the high nor the low spots. Merely another short that will get by with average satisfaction. The various numbers are tied in with a rehearsal gag which gives the picture its excuse. The vocal and dance numbers never lift themselves above the routine. Eddie Kane and Neely Edwards are featured. Directed by Roy Mack. Running time, 8 mins.

Good for fill-in spot. Nothing else.

Obituaries

"Where have they gone? What are they doing?" asks Julia Shawell, New York columnist, in discussing the screen careers terminated on that microphonic slaughter block when sound went on a rampage.

"It is an amazing thing to glance over the list of the younger Hollywood element in the season preceding the talkie revolution, and realize how many of them are among the missing or finding the jobs few and far between," states Miss Shawell. "Pretty young things with flat Middle West voices or monotonous tones which were never flaunted on the silent screen, shout an unhappy finish to a lot of California hopes. Decorations this year are in the hands of set designers and not left to the casting director.

"Even to such seasoned players as Vilma Banky, Renee Adoree, Greta Nissen, Helene Costello and their contemporaries, the upheaval has been devastating.

"Where are Barbara Bedford, Lina Basquette, Betty Bronson, Louise Brooks, Virginia Lee Corbin, Marjorie Daw, Josephine Dunn, Dorothy Dwan, Elinor Fair, Dorothy Gulliver, Georgia Hale, Thelma Hill, Dorothy Janis, Natalie Kingston, Jacqueline Logan, May McAvoy, Kathryn McGuire, Gertrude Olmsted, Mary Philbin, Sally Phipps, Sally Rand, Vera Reynolds, Alberta Vaughn, Joy Auburn, Marjorne Beebe, Virginia Bradford, Doris Dawson, Nancy Drexel, Doris Hill, Nina Quartara, Ann Rork, Laska Winter, Barbara Worth and all the rest?"

Thought for Mother's Day

(FitzPatrick—Synchronized—1 Reel)

Fine Sentiment

TIMELY subject for Mother's Day program. It's a series of quotations upon mothers by a number of great men, whose portraits are presented. It winds up with an old mother joyfully receiving a gift of flowers from her absent son. Running time, 4 minutes.

For Mother's Day programs.

Audio Review, No. 20

(Pathe—Sound—1 Reel)

Fine

THE punch of this issue is the singing by 1,500 midshipmen, grouped in a solid phalanx in front of historic Bancroft Hall at the U. S. Naval Academy, of the spirited "Anchors Aweigh," the famous Annapolis song, ending with a rousing football cheer. The Academy band accompanies them, and the result is thrillingly impressive. During the singing flashes are shown of Uncle Sam's warships, most of them exceptional close-ups in heavy seas. Every man, woman and kid in every audience will eat this up. It's great. The direction is credited to Tom Hogan.

A tour of Havana, depicting especially the drinking places of the Cuban capital, is entertaining, but aggravating to the thirsty.

Spot this in with a weak feature. They'll remember the "Anchors Aweigh" number.

Songs of Mother

(Pathe—Talker—½ Reel)

Passable

A VAN BEUREN Song Sketch built around mother songs, with a father, sitting at a piano with his two children, playing the songs his mother taught him, with flashbacks to his boyhood days. Director Oscar Lund has missed a fine opportunity to produce a short of wholesome sentiment by using adult players whose voices rasp on the ear and by giving century-old settings to the flashbacks. They didn't dress and live like that when father was a boy. The children were excellent. Running time, 6 minutes.

Will get by satisfactorily if run with a melodrama.

Poor Aubrey

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 3674-75—2 Reels)

Some Laughs

FRANKLIN PANGORN gets off a few laughs in this comedy playlet by George Kelly. He's a poor clerk, trying to sell the idea that he has money. When wifey's girl friend calls, he puts on plenty of dog, but his act is ruined by mother-in-law, who rides him plenty. Just fair. Running time, 18 minutes.

With musical or heavy feature.

South Sea Pearl

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 3829—2 Reels)

Good Subject

DONE in Technicolor, this musical skit of romance in the South Seas, registers as a good subject, but it seems that with the story material and lavish production values much more could have been done. The music, however, is fine. The scene is a South Sea Island cafe, where the crooked proprietor and his pretty wife try to rob a young Frenchman of his pearls. A dancing girl saves the jewels. Gaston Glass is just fair in the leading role. Running time, 21 minutes.

Where light musical is needed.

A Battery of Songs

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 972—2 Reels)

Not So Good

AS he explains in this, Waite Hoyt, Yankee pitcher, is a ballplayer. His name probably is good for some draw at the box office, but the subject doesn't register. Fred Coots, song writer, is featured with him in this, but the only thing that holds it up is the "Do Something" number, and that's been done so much better before that this doesn't rate much by comparison. Running time, 12 minutes.

Where musical turn is suited.

Taking Ways

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 983—2 Reels)

Funny

ANN CODEE and Frank Orth in a fast-moving skit, which has some good comedy bits and a laugh finish. It's about two yeggs who come to rob a house where the husband is German and the woman French. When the husband tries to give the robbers a statuette of Bismarck, as "the greatest soldier who ever lived," the wife starts a real argument championing Napoleon. It's novel and funny. Running time, 17 minutes.

For any bill.

Prison Panic

(Universal-Sound—1 Reel)

Good

THE adventures of Oswald as a warden with a convict mouse. Not as funny as many of the previous Oswald cartoons, but it contains a sufficient number of original gags to keep the chuckles going. Will please generally. Running time, 6 minutes.

Use it to leaven a heavy program.

The Wolf's Fangs

(Universal-Silent—2 Reels)

Horses, Horses, Horses

THE old formula. Royal mounted cop, the villain, the girl and—what a lot of footage devoted to the chase of the bad egg before he's captured! If they had been headed due north they would have bumped into the North Pole. Ted Carson is the hero of this abbreviated Western, but he looks more like a soda jerker. Your audiences have seen this plot several thousand times. Director, J. Levigard. Running time, 16 min.

Run it with a feature comedy if you must.

Sinking in the Bathtub

(Vitaphone Variety—1 Reel)

Hit Cartoon Comedy with Music

LAUNCHING a new series of Vitaphone Varieties which will be extremely popular if the pace is maintained, "Sinking In The Bathtub" is decidedly clever and original; resulting in plenty of laughs.

Idea incorporates cartoon action in rhythm to musical accompaniment of popular tunes in Warner and First National features. In this case, "Singing In the Bathtub" and "Tip Toe Through The Tulips" were used.

Action opens with lady love in bathtub when boy friend calls, to the strains of the first-named number. It's a laugh riot. Then they swing into the second melody with the orchestra, and comedy action is built around the tune for more laughs. Finale brings the characters into the open for a fast-tempo chase.

For laughs and originality, this one ranks with the best of cartoon comedies.

Good subject for any bill anywhere, especially where positive laughs in large numbers are required.

Get a Load of This!

"Theatre Fan" forwards the following squawk to the open-forum column of the N. Y. Telegram:

Notwithstanding the death of the legitimate theatre, due to high prices and "standing in" with speculators, I note with dismay that the movie magnates of Broadway have gradually raised their prices from 25 and 50 cents to 65 and 85 cents.

This in face of the fact that they have dispensed with their orchestras.

How long can they get away with it? Not long, say I. There are thousands of fans who believe as I do, that 50 cents is plenty for the best movie ever presented, and until the latter price is put into effect again we will remain away.

IMPRESSIVELY beautiful shots of Soledad Canyon, near La Jolla, Cal., highlight three units in this new "Audio Review." They're really worth while, far above the usual type of outdoor shots. Supporting this appears Marguerite Agniel, authority on exercises, who performs pet calisthenics in a manner most graceful. The opening unit reveals the inside workings of France's dear old champagne industry—we're sure it will make the drys here green with envy. Running time, 10 minutes.

Fine material to offset a comedy with music.

Peace and Harmony

(Educational-Talker—2 Reels)

Low Slapstick

WHOEVER picked slam-bang flour-throwing slapstick for Eddie Lambert rates a severe reprimand. It's pathetic to watch Eddie dodging doors and kitchen contrivances, when he has, in such short time, built up a nice following because of intelligent vehicles which give him the opportunity to create belly-laughs solely via his humorous Jewish dialect.

As a slapsticker, it's just ordinary, hitting the midway line between good and bad. Running time, 19 minutes.

Don't count on this too much for comedy support. Use it with a good cartoon and a feature with music.

Getting a Raise

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 3800-1—2 Reels)

Tame

A SUBTITLE announces this as the first of a series based on J. P. McEvoy's syndicated feature, "The Potters," but the director has muffed the possibilities. It starts off promisingly enough, with flashes of the home life of the Potters, expertly cast in character, but it drags from then on and winds up with old man Potter staring blankly at the camera and waiting for the fade-out. Needs a punch ending. The first episode is about Potter's attempt, at his wife's instigation, to get a raise. The boss talks him out of the idea with a lot of bologney about loyalty. Too much long-winded dialogue in it. Director, Bryan Foy. Running time, 13 minutes.

Run it with a society picture for contrast.

Diverting

"BUDDY TRAPS," a juvenile billed as "the marvel drummer," wields the sticks in a notion store, marching from counter to counter, up ladders and down, drumming to orchestral accompaniment on dishes, pans, vases and other bric-a-brac, ending with a clog dance and a song in a shrieky voice. It's a novelty that is fairly entertaining owing to the youth of the drummer, who has a good stage presence. Running time, 7 minutes.

Spot it in with any kind of feature.

The Collegiate Model

(Vitaphone Varieties No. 1007-08—2 Reels)

Fair Short

ONA MUNSON, musical comedy lead, is featured in this mildly amusing skit on college life but has little to do. Ona is the campus belle with all the boys at her feet. She favors one of the gang—the boy who works in Einstein's clothing store to help defray expenses through school. Only boy friend isn't doing so well. Ona thereupon hits upon the idea of selling the rest of the crew the famous Einstein three button collegiate model and does. Harry Rosenthal, lead in the successful stage play "June Moon," is on for only a few minutes, but in that short space of time steals whatever there is to steal in the picture. And that isn't much. Directed by Murray Roth. Running time, 14 mins.

Need strong support.

Schulberg Confers on Product

B. P. Schulberg, general manager of West Coast production for Paramount, and Harold Hurley, assistant to David O. Selznick, are in New York. Schulberg will confer with home office executives of Paramount Publix concerning next year's product, remaining here long enough to attend the annual convention of the sales department to be held at Atlantic City May 16, 17 and 18.

Warners Form Club; New Home Dedicated May 12

The Chicago Warner Club has been officially organized here with about 200 charter members composed of officers and employees of the local Warner exchange and affiliated companies. The following officers of the club have been elected: H. F. Neil, president; T. R. Gilliam, vice-president; W. B. Lyman, secretary; Ralph White, treasurer; Ethel McCarthy, recording secretary. Permanent club quarters, it is planned, will be established in the new Warner building at 1307 South Wabash avenue, the dedication of which, on May 12, will be the club's first function.

Membership is drawn from the personnel of the following companies: Warners, Vitagraph, First National, Vitaphone, Brunswick, Witmark, Harms, Remick, and De Sylva, Brown & Henderson, all of which are to have quarters in the new building.

Sam E. Morris will officiate at the dedicatory program arranged for the new building. Other Warner officials who will take part in the program are: C. C. Ezell, general sales manager; Max Milder, Vitagraph central division sales manager; Ned E. Depinet, general sales manager, First National; Gradwell Sears, First National western sales manager, and Paul J. Swift, general manager Vitaphone.

Theatre Changes and Closings In Midwest

The Film Board of Trade here reports only three changes in ownership of Chicago theatres during April. Two suburban houses are also listed. The balance of the changes are in outlying towns. Chicago: Mrs. C. E. Rice's Hamlin to Adam Schumacher, Sr.; B. Nathan's Ideal to Ideal Plaza Theatre Corp.; Alexander & Geoarmy's Willard to M. O. Wells. Suburban: Gregory & Bernasek's Palace, Cicero, to Piccadilly Theatre Corp., and E. W. Retzer's New Maywood, Maywood, to Karl Rau.

Changes are reported at the Globe, Atwood, Ill.; Rose at Byron, Ill.; Palace at Crown Point; Ritz at Gary; Photoplay at Lovington; Tivoli at Mishawaka, and the Capitol at Rockford. The following closings are noted: Community, Ashley, Ind. (fire); Ladd, Ladd, Ill. (indefinitely); Lincoln, New Berlin, Ill. (permanently); Colonial, Oglesby, Ill. (for summer); Dreamland, Rockford, Ill. (permanently); Family, Sheffield; and Lyric, Tuscola, Ill. (indefinitely).

He-Man Stuff

Gene Couer, Pathe News manager here, is decidedly not a "joiner," but look what happens, regardless:

Over on Clark Street, above the old Cozy Theatre, there are some rooms filled with dusty trophies of nondescript wars and outlandish expeditions—rusty muskets and dusty sabres, moth-eaten animals' heads and blood-stained loin cloths once worn by proud head-hunters in the vicinity of the Antipodes. Around the dining and card tables here daily and far into the night gather groups of inconspicuous men, freed for the time being from unimpressive office jobs, who smoke and lie to each other in the gloom of the trophy rooms. Once, they were high-spirited, hot-blooded, reckless youths who roamed the world poking into its neglected and sinister corners. For men who have known such spring-times there must be a memento of those carefree, ruddy days, that is also an escape from the humdrum of office routine imposed by the later years. So they organized the Adventurers' Club. They are greedy for tales—not to be listened to so much as to be matched; not to be awed by so much as to be "reminded" by. Gene Couer's duties, they decided, implied "adventure." He was one of them. He should belong. Two ambassadors, conferring with him, asked, "What have been your greatest adventures?"

"In the winter-time," Gene replied after proper reflection, "it has been reading a good book at home with my feet propped up on a warm radiator. In the summer-time, it has been dozing under an apple tree in the country."

His visitors were somewhat taken aback, but seven days later in the morning's mail, his membership card arrived.

B. & K. Stage Previews for Audience Slant

Each Thursday Publix-B. & K. stages an extra "pre-view" performance at the Oriental at which new stage acts are tried out and the incoming feature screened. The object of the innovation is to get the audience reaction to both acts and picture. The reception given each will assist the management in programming the acts at their outlying houses later, as well as giving them an idea of what to expect in the way of drawing power. The same information will be obtained from the picture's reception, and the house is thus assisted in making its preparations in advance. Better programming of short subjects to fit in with both picture and stage show later on is also afforded by the "preview."

The extra performance will follow the last regular Thursday night showing. No attempt will be made to make it pay, as the object is purely utilitarian. Those attending the last regular performance will be permitted to remain for the "preview," but the box office will remain open to catch the drift-ins, regardless.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

"Passing The Buck"

THE oldest alibi in the show business is "passing the buck" when something goes wrong; but if you've got the guts to forge ahead in this, or any other business, you should be big enough to recognize the responsibilities that are placed upon your shoulders when you take charge of a theatre.

The fact that your porter is no good is a direct reflection on you if the theatre happens to be dirty. If your cashier develops that "forgetful complex" when a patron gives her a five-dollar bill, it's just because she feels she can get away with it. You are to blame. Ditto for any and every part of your theatre or staff.

We have yet to meet up with the "perfect" manager; not that he doesn't exist, but his duties are so widespread and numerous he must be a miracle man to get by without slipping up once in a while. But if a manager is alert, keeps his eyes and ears open for comment or criticism, he will instil into every man on his staff the importance of proper service, cleanliness of the theatre, good sound and projection. He can take each angle separately and perfect them to that point of efficiency where his supervision and watchful eye should be his most important task.

It can't be done over night, by any means; but going slowly and carefully about each and every angle will gradually lessen the danger of friction and poor management and he can then turn his attention to the selling of his shows. Most theatre owners and chains prefer their managers to spend a portion of their time during the afternoons, outside the theatre—meeting and serving on the Chambers of Commerce, the merchants, co-operating with the school authorities, arranging tie-ups, and the other hundred and one business-building slants that can only be accomplished by getting out and around the community.

A jump to your neighboring towns and theatres to see what is going on will never get you into trouble and you might pick up some interesting and profitable pointers from your brother showmen. It also gives you an insight as to the way they are running their theatres and selling their shows.

It is all part of your education, and since there is always something new in the show business, you can well afford to put your mind in a receptive mood for anything and everything helpful to your theatre.

But to get out and see other places and to know how things are being done you must first get your own house in perfect working order and not let the place run on your staff's idea of theatre management. Their ideas and suggestions may be fine, but you are the "goat" if anything goes wrong, so see that they post you on everything before they act.

"Passing the buck" may sound all right to you, but it does leave a rotten impression on your superiors; so shoulder the blame and try and eliminate as much of it as you possibly can.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

B. V. Sturdivant Sold Indianapolis On 'Vagabond King'

And now for an account of how Indianapolis, Ind., became "Vagabond King" conscious. We guess we've covered nearly every opening possible on this picture but we find that there is bound to be one or two new angles used by various managers and publicists throughout the country that will make interesting reading. So here goes for the way B. V. Sturdivant, Director of Advertising and Publicity for the district put it over.

Since we have space only for the highlights we will have to skip over the newspaper ad campaign and the teasers used and go to work on another angle. The Mayor of Indianapolis was requested to invite the Mayors and their wives of the fifty leading cities in Indiana to be his guests. The local Chamber of Commerce joined in, providing a noon luncheon for them at headquarters, and furnishing automobiles to drive them about the city, with dinner the night of opening at one of the biggest clubs of the city.

As the theatre had been closed all day in preparation for the event, at seven-thirty in the evening, several thousand people were thronging the front of the house. A battery of camermen greeted the distinguished party, with the newsreel men, specially detailed to the event talking pictures to be shown later on in the local house. A "mike" was installed on the sidewalk, with the celebrities hello-ing into it as they entered the theatre.

The front of the house was gaily decorated with flags, special lights, cut-outs, etc., while the inside of the theatre and the lobby was transformed into an attractive flower garden by one of the local florists. To effect what might be called showmaking history, a special transportation rate was introduced for the opening by the Traction company. The new low fare created a great deal of comment and did a lot to bring in hundreds of extra patrons. The company also detailed four of their men to cover every advantageous spot along the line, and post up special paper and cards to the effect that new rates were being instituted.

Through a tie-up with the manufacturer of a well-known toilet soap, four men were sent out to fix up window displays, tying in the soap with the picture. The men, in three weeks, covered over eleven hundred windows and a good many of them were located in the city itself. From the photos we are reproducing you can get a general idea of what sort of an effect the tie-up made. Incidentally, the upper photo shows the Governor and the Mayor of the State just before entering the theatre.

Every book store and music dealer in the city tied up the music and the book over a week in advance of the picture, with some knockout displays being achieved. Through a tie-up with the local radio station the theme songs were played at least twelve times a day for four weeks prior to the opening and the station also plugged the celebrities who were to appear, and the reduced transportation rates.

The newspapers came through with a special rotogravure section devoted almost entirely to the "Vagabond King," with two full pages of advertising being bought by the Power and Electric Light Company, plugging in the premiere. Every street car entering the city carried some sort of a plug on the picture. The national tie-up with Philco radio enabled the house to get in a lot more extra publicity.

The entire campaign was timed to begin hitting the public's eye about ten days before the opening and so well was it done that two hours before the box office opened, lines two blocks long had gathered. And after all, when you can get them there that early, why worry about a picture clicking?

Edw. Landsborough Is An Active Showman From Canada

Another Canadian showman, who though his hands have been filled what with building a new theatre and one thing or another, has been quite busy, but still finds time to send us in a little account of his activities is Eddie Landsborough, manager of the Regent Theatre in Galt, Ont., Canada.

On his showing recently, of "Welcome Danger," he used the Season Pass gag that we have reproduced on these pages many times. A dodger in the form and size of a pass was made up and bore copy which from first glance seemed to read: "Regent Theatre—Season Pass," but on closer inspection was found to carry copy to the effect that the reader was not to let the season pass without seeing Harold Lloyd in "Welcome Danger."

Since this was the first time the gag had been used in Galt, it was certainly very effective and it did a lot towards putting the picture across. Okay, Eddie, since you're so busy at present why we'll just have to excuse you. But we warn you, it will all have to be made up when you get that new house finished and just as a tip we want you to know that we expect to be in receipt of a great campaign for the opening.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

What's Wrong With Theatre Managers?

Here is how the head of one of the largest chains in the business views the manager. If any of his observations fit your case, it would pay you to give the strictest attention to what he says. It will help you.

We're not telling who this executive is. For all you know it may be the head of your own circuit delivering a message directly to you.

Here are the questions we put to this executive:

(1) DO YOU CONSIDER THE AVERAGE HOUSE MANAGER NEGLECTFUL?

ANSWER: Not so much neglectful as careless. Their intentions may be perfect, but the majority of them are inclined to let things slide by until they assume serious proportions.

(2) DO THEY IGNORE HOME OFFICE ORDERS AND REGULATIONS?

ANSWER: Unfortunately, the first mistake a house manager makes is that he does not take these orders seriously enough and his attitude becomes indifferent. This later changes to laziness, with results that are both distasteful to the home office as well as the offender.

(3) DO YOU FIND THAT THEY ATTEND TO INSTRUCTIONS PROMPTLY?

ANSWER: Direct instructions generally receive immediate attention and in most respects we experience no difficulty when orders are issued calling for immediate action.

(4) WHAT CONSTITUTES THEIR MOST SERIOUS OR CONTINUAL OFFENSE?

ANSWER: The same answer that applied to Question 1 applies to this question, because it is not a deliberate offense they are committing, but merely an unfortunate careless attitude.

(5) WHAT TYPE OF MANAGER DO YOU PREFER ON YOUR CIRCUIT?

ANSWER: A good house manager, exploiteer and theatre operator with the ability to first perfect a well organized and clean theatre and then turn his attention and time to selling his shows.

(6) DO YOU PREFER YOUNG, MIDDLE AGE OR ELDERLY MEN AS HOUSE MANAGERS?

ANSWER: Age does not count at all on this circuit. Ability, enthusiasm, willingness and energy are the most important factors and a man is only as old as he makes himself by reason of how he tackles the problems he encounters in the operation of his theatre.

(7) SHOULD EXPLOITATION AND PUBLICITY WORK DOMINATE OVER HOUSE MANAGEMENT?

ANSWER: An efficient manager first organizes his theatre and perfects the operation of it to the point where he can turn over the supervision to his assistant. After that, he should turn his attention to the exploitation, publicity and selling of his shows, with his organization so lined up that he need only keep an eye on all of the departments.

(8) WHAT CONSTITUTES THE MAJOR CASES FOR DISMISSAL?

ANSWER: Insubordination, lying down on the job and getting no results.

(9) WHAT IS YOUR IDEA OF THE IDEAL TYPE OF THEATRE MANAGER?

Answer: A man makes the best manager who possesses enthusiasm and imagination, doesn't cry over bad business, but goes out determined to better conditions and devotes every ounce of energy and ability to see that his theatre is managed properly both on the inside and outside.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

YOUR PROBLEMS AND MINE!

P.'s Problem:

He received no co-operation from the Chamber of Commerce. Likewise the newspapers. To his propositions, the local merchants turned a deaf ear. And no sympathy was received from the various civic fraternities. So what was a new man in a strange town going to do? Being a showman, he set out to do something about it, and in the paragraphs below you learn in his own words:

P.'s Solution:

Good managership of a theatre business is simply good salesmanship so far as outside contacts are concerned. And a good salesman must always get the other fellow's viewpoint. I believe one primary cause of difficulty with the newspaper editor is untruthful advertising. When I have a good picture, I advertise it in proportion to its merits. Naturally, no manager would advise the public that he was exhibiting a poor picture. But the editor doesn't expect him to do so! He does want him to observe in his ads and "readers" a sense of proportion, which will preserve the confidence of the public in the newspaper. Be considerate of his hopes for the public's confidence, and you will gain his.

The Chamber of Commerce is always interested in boosting its own community. Moral: Co-operate! When something of real importance is going to take place in my city, I work with the local C. of C. to have motion pictures taken of it, getting nationally known cameramen to come, and showing the pictures in my own theatre as soon as I can secure them. A theatre must put something into its community if it expects to get anything out of it, and the Chamber of Commerce is usually insistent upon that basic principle.

Then there's the problem of religious and civic opposition. We give benefits for various religious, fraternal and charitable organizations without demanding guarantees. Occasionally our friendly newspaper editors act as our "ambassadors incognito" to invite the ministers of the city to performances of worthwhile pictures having special religious significance or background, as for instance "Ben Hur," "King of Kings," "Noah's Ark," etc. I have found that it is also of more than immediate box-office consequence to emphasize, through advertising and by special performances, the educational element in pictures like "Evangeline" and similar attractions which link the theatre to the schools.

The merchants' primary interest in a tie-up is its advertising value for his business, not your show. We put trailers on acknowledging the advertisers' co-operation, give them slides, and similar inducements and good space on heralds and other literature. Get the other fellow's viewpoint, and he'll be more likely to get yours. At least that's my philosophy! F. P.

Fred Dollinger Hooks Up With Fox Met. At Blenheim

His many friends will be glad to know that Fred Dollinger, former manager of the Grove and Freeport Theatres, in Freeport, Long Island, for the A. H. Schwartz Century Circuit, has hooked up with the Fox Met. Chain as manager of the Blenheim Theatre in New York City.

Fred is a showman of many years experience and in the past has owned and operated some fine movie houses. He has spent a good many years as company manager and advance agent with some of the largest music comedy and vaudeville productions. One of the real pioneers in the movie industry, his name is known to many showmen, and we feel sure that at the Blenheim he will display more of that selling work which characterized his showmanship of former years. ....

Congratulations Fred, and now that you're located around the city we look forward to seeing some signs of showmanlike activity proceeding from your section because we know that you are more than capable in putting over any attraction you are handling.

Lobby Display For "Cohens and Kellys" Aided Meyer's Biz.

A very attractive atmospheric lobby display, featuring a novel touch, was created recently by Fred Meyer, managing director of the Alhambra Theatre in Milwaukee, Wis., for his showing of "Cohens and Kellys in Scotland."

The accompanying photo will make clear the point we are endeavoring to stress in the matter of the traffic signal that greeted patrons and passersby from the lobby of the theatre. The tower would alternately flash on a red and green light. The red light would show a stop sign while the green light would immediately follow it up with a "Go See Cohens and Kellys" plug. This little stunt created a great deal of comment from everyone in the vicinity and was a valuable exploitation plug. We want to mention at this stage of the story that should you decide to use this gag it will fit in with almost any picture.

The lobby too, as you will note from the photo, is colorfully dressed in Scotch atmosphere. The box-office was made to appear as a huge golf bag of colorful plaids, which, featured against a background of three sixty by forty panels, a shadow box, and cut-outs, all stood out strikingly. A plaid background was used on all the displays. To sell the picture about town Meyer also arranged to display a telegram which was sent from Hollywood by the stars of the film. Through a tie-up with the local Western Union twenty-two window displays were secured for reproductions of it and this with a number of other stunts sold the town on the picture.

If time and space would permit we would like to elaborate on the many other angles he used but with such showmanlike activity going on around Milwaukee, we know that he will supply us with some more accounts in the near future. How about it, Fred?

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

His Many Tie-Ups Are A Big Help To HowardWaugh'sBiz

Some showmanlike angles were put over by Howard Waugh, manager of the Pal ace Theatre in Meriden, Conn. in selling "The Case of Sergeant Grischa" to the town.

He tied up the local library to the extent of inducing them to purchase a number of copies of the book. The library featured a display of stills and the books in a prominent place and in addition distributed a large number of bookmarks which plugged the theatre and the library, so with over five hundred of these bookmarks going out a day the attraction certainly was nosed around.

Besides distributing the book-marks in the library, Howard also secured permission from the schools superintendent to distribute a couple of thousand to the children, to good results. Post cards were sent to all of the prominent residents and church goers of the town, informing them that the picture was on the "high class" scale similar to "Disraeli." Through the co-operation of the heads of the local ministeries, Howard was enabled to effect this very valuable angle.

Another important tie-up, since he was bucking almost direct opposition, was a display he arranged in the auditorium of a school. The local newspaper had been conducting a cooking class for women and a large number of the feminine populace of Meriden were attending. This was knocking business to pieces but had to be tolerated, so when the opportunity presented itself Howard siezed upon it and got in a plug for the house that was noticed by over twelve thousand women.

By using these few mighty good angles he was enabled to sell the picture to the town, and though we haven't an official record on hand to show just how well it clicked, we figure that it was oke because the smile that broadens Howard's classic countenance in the above photo is anything but disheartening.

Al. F. Weiss Jr. Had A Novel Stunt As Street Ballyhoo

Al F. Weiss, Jr., employed a man to act as a sleuth in running down clues in behalf of "The Bishop Murder Case," playing at the Florida Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla.

The sleuth carried a magnifying glass in one hand and an enlarged book under his other arm which was lettered, "Van Dine's THE BISHOP MURDER CASE—Florida Now." The man also wore a sign on his back, "Looking for a Clue to THE BISHOP MURDER CASE—Florida Now."

At the weekly bridge party held on the Florida's mezanine, Weiss gave as a prize for each table, the novel of the same name as picture—Bishop Murder Case. This affair took place in advance of picture and helped to popularize by the many favorable comments.

Okay Al, we are glad to see that you are continuing the live-wire showmanship that has characterized your work for so long. Incidentally, it seems to us that we don't see your name in front of us as much as we'd like to, so what do you say about remedying this condition? Let's have some more, much more frequently. Oke.

EXPLOITATION REVIEWS!

"THE NEW ADVENTURES OF DR. FU MANCHU"

(PARAMOUNT)

If you've played "The Mysterious Dr. Fu Manchu," you'll know how to handle this new one. It's more or less up to you whether you think the picture's reception will merit any plugging. From the standpoint of this reviewer, the film contains so many melodramatic spots that it will be well worth your while to play it up as a "thrill picture." It will appeal to young, old, middle age and any other age that you can fit in. But let them know in advance that they are going to be thrilled.

To play it up in your ads, providing you have played the first "Fu" picture, it is advisable that the word NEW be used in big type and occupy a prominent part of your newspaper and other advertising lay-outs. Harp back to the diabolical exploits of Dr. Fu in his first picture. Run lines like: "He Thrilled You and Chilled You in 'The Mysterious Dr. Fu Manchu.' Now he'll grip you as never before!"

Here's your cast and from them you can pick out the favorites of your town. Warner Oland as Dr. Fu; Neil Hamilton as Dr. Jack Petrie; Jean Arthur as Lia Eltham; O. P. Heggie as Nayland Smith and William Austin as Sylvester Wadsworth. In your newspaper, providing they liked the first, you could introduce them as though they were personal friends of your audience such as, "Thrill to the further adventures of Jean Arthur and Neil Hamilton," etc. For teaser-effect copy something on this style: "Fu Returns!" "Danger! Fu Is Coming!" "Watch Out for Fu!" "Help! Danger! Police! It's Fu!" Work these teasers up so that you can get in the full title a couple of days before playdate and then shoot with your regular layouts.

On your front displays bear in mind that the picture presents the elements of mystery, melodrama, tension and thrills. Look up the adjectives we have been running and pick out a load of Diabolicals, Sinisters, Startling, Mysterious, etc., and sell it with effective copy. In your art work have Warner Oland looking at Jean Arthur and Neil Hamilton. As much as possible keep interest keyed up by showing scenes of action, such as Fu leering at O. P. Heggie, whom he holds captive, also Fu and his sinister smile, and as well, the two lovers (in order to get in the romantic plug).

The picture has no theme songs, so play your book stores heavy. If the dealer hasn't copies of the New Fu story on hand, use the old one and work your copy around them, such as: These books thrilled you, the picture thrilled you, and now with the New Adventures of Dr. Fu Manchu You'll Be Astounded at Fu's Daring! On the rest of your local tie-ups your stills will fit Jewelry stores, Ladies' wearing apparel, Men's stores (Hamilton and Arthur are garbed in wedding attire and this shot can be put to many uses). Automobile agencies, travel agencies, scenes are laid in England. You should be able to tie up almost any store in your town, since it is the judicious way of using copy that counts and nothing else but. So long as your copy will help you and the dealer, you'll get tie-ups.

For advance heralds, if possible secure a lot of laundry checks. This will cost hardly anything as your ushers can paint loads of them. Use red paint, not black. On the back of the herald reprint whatever copy you care to use to sell the picture, using little or more as local conditions warrant. For other advance plugs, mount a couple of wax mannequins, dressed in Chinese costume, on a truck and use as a street ballyhoo. Use another dummy in your lobby or use a good cut-out. If you have a portable phonograph, secrete it behind the display and play an effect record of shrieks, groans and cries. Put cut-outs about your house, in the men's room, foyer, staircases, etc., and play green spots on them. The ghoulish effect will do a lot towards selling the picture from the thrill angle and, as we stated before, that seems, to us, to be the best way to sell it. And, also, on your trailer shoot a deep green background into the opening and closing of it. When you play the picture you will probably dope out many novel ways of putting a thrill into the opening and closing of the picture.

"SONG OF THE WEST"

(WARNER)

Here's a funny situation. The picture is adapted from the musical comedy, "Rainbow," which did a Brodie in New York. So that leaves it up to you. If having a "Broadway Musical Comedy" appeal means anything in your town, take advantage of it. If not, let it alone. The stars of the film are really names. John Boles, Vivienne Segal, and Joe E. Brown, the last named two musical comedy favorites. The picture is done entirely in technicolor.

A little difficulty may present itself to you, inasmuch as the picture is a period or costume play and it will probably be hard for you to secure models of the clothes worn by the Forty-Niners, but this need not hold you from plugging the picture. Plant a bunch of straight still of Boles with your local dealer and use copy like this: Hear Handsome John Boles Sing in "Song of the West." The same goes for Vivienne Segal. Since Joe E. Brown is a comedian and his "pan" can be worked on local tie-ups, especially soda-fountains.

The theme songs are well worth plugging. "Come Back to Me," "The One Girl" and "West Wind" constitute the Vincent Youman's score. Plug 'The One Girl," as it seems to be the outstanding number of the trio. If you've played "Hit the Deck" and your patrons went out humming the Youman's tunes, plug him in your ads as the composer of "Hit the Deck's lilting song hits." In a couple of shots Joe E. Brown is seen strumming a guitar. These scenes will help your music store tie-ups. Since the story is of "Gold Rush Days" and features the United States Cavalary, there's an opportunity for a very advantageous tie-up if you are located near a barracks or army base.

As a street ballyhoo, you could use a couple of men, dressed as prospectors and seated on back of a burro or donkey. For floats, cut-outs are the best thing advisable. Streets stunt should prove easy as they do not require that a great deal of attention be devoted to securing special costumes, or backgrounds. For this picture, the simpler the better.

In your newspaper ads plug the story as "A Glorious Romance of the Early West." Plug Boles and Segal as "Two Thrilling Voices Blended in Song Rendering "The One Girl," etc. Plug Joe E. Brown as the funny man of musical comedy fame. On teaser campaigns we suggest the lines "Looking for Pay Dirt?" "Headin' for the Rainbow Trail!" You'll have to figure out your local audience for this one. History dates would also be appropriate to use for teasers. Run them in the form of a contest of perhaps six dates. Tie-up your local newspaper on this. Don't have the answers submitted until the day before the picture plays. On the opening day, through the newspapers, announce the winners.

A funny teaser line would be "Hasty to You, Ma'am," an expression used by Brown, who plays Hasty, a mule skinner, throughout the picture. Incidentally, Marion Byram is Joe's love interest, but though she makes a hit in the picture, we would not advise plugging her in this one. If she clicks with your audience give her a big play in her next picture. The kid is cute and clever and she'll work in a lot more.

On your front display use your regular stuff and try to sell it with the "Glorious Romance of the Early West" angle. For an advance plug in your lobby "stake out a claim" (the prospector equivalent to a discovery of gold. The land is staked off and the spot entered in the recorder's office by placing a pile of dirt and rocks on the floor. Sprinkle with gold flitter. Place pick and shovel alongside and if you have a good cut-out use it as well. Place a card alongside with copy reading: "Men, Women and Children Traveled 3,000 Miles Cross Country to Strike This 'Pay Dirt.'" See "Song of the West"—Glorious Romance in Technicolor (playdate).

Schools tie-ups can be engineered by offering free tickets for the best water color drawings depicting scenes of the early west. Appeal to the kids, in your newspaper ads, by plugging Joe E. Brown. For the sweethearts and women use Boles and the next day Boles and Segal. There's plenty of fine catchlines you can use in connection with your newspaper advertising and by giving a little more attention to them than usual you'll find that this angle will be a great help towards selling the picture.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Irwin R. Waite Of Austin, Texas Enrolls In Club

Here's a little autobiography of one of our latest Club members. Irwin R. Waite, manager of the Majestic Theatre in Austin, Texas.

He has been associated with the Publix Circuit for quite some time now and as he has been in the show game for a good many years we believe this dope will prove mighty interesting. He has worked at the Bijou Theatre in Springfield, Mass., and also at the Poli Palace and Strand Theatres, where in those houses, he received the training for the position he now holds. In 1923 he accepted an assignment with the Publix outfit and left for Miami Beach where he handled the Community Theatre until 1929, moving then to the Rialto, Arcade and Stanley in West Palm Beach.

In addition to working in the show game, he has also had experience in other lines, having served for a time as a show card writer, newspaperman, park concessionaire and piano salesman, but all these endeavors merely served to make him a better theatre manager, and we know from the work he is turning out down there in Austin, that he sure can handle a show house.

The photo we are showing above will give you a line on the prominent place his membership certificate holds down in his office, and also, that magazine he is holding in his hand is our own "one and only," the Motion Picture News, or as Irwin calls it, "The Showman's Bible," and if you'll pardon our saying so, we remark that the office certainly looks dressed up. Thanks, Irwin for shooting your photo along to us so promptly, and we also want to thank you for that little clipping about ourselves that the Austin Statesman printed. Keep us posted now on whatever you are doing down there to sell your shows so that we can pass along your ideas to the rest of the Club.

Lewis & Silverman Sold Town "Sally" By Using Fine Gag

When it comes to turning out a couple of ideas that sell you can depend on Lewis and Silverman of the Avon Theatre, in Watertown, N. Y., to pull them if they have a special message to get across to the patrons of that mighty fine house.

On their recent showing of "Sally" they made a tie-up with the Postal Telegraph where for a small amount they send out a number of telegrams. The messages were given to all of the prominent persons in town by a uniformed messenger and were sealed in a regulation envelope. They were presented to the Mayor, Chief of Police, Fire Chief, City Council and almost every other person of prominence in the town. As this was the first time it had been done the gag clicked wonderfully and the message that the letter bore concerning the picture was conveyed to them in a personal manner.

The copy on the telegram, in case you might care to make the tie-up on some other picture, read, "We are using the Postal Telegraph because it is the best and fastest method we can use to tell you that, etc. (Picture, playdate, star, technicolor). In addition to this stunt they also promoted one on "The Virginian" that clicked. They tied up with the Jefferson Historical Society and secured a display of over ten thousand dollars worth of old-time guns. The display was placed in one of the most prominent windows in town and attracted almost endless comment.

Well, boys, with the way you are going up there it is no wonder that G. W. Lampe calls you two a couple of go-getters and if he hadn't already named you so appropriately we would have tacked it onto this little story. And now to prove your right to that name you'll have to keep us supplied with some good stunts for the Club pages.

Tie-Up With Local Drug Stores Was Aid to E. F. Coppack

One of the first popularity contests of the spring season was engineered recently by E. F. Coppack, manager of the Royal Theatre in Kansas City, Mo.

Through a tie-up with a chain of local drug stores and a nationally known cosmetic manufacturer a plan was conceived whereby the most popular girl in Kansas City would be presented with a trip to Hollywood as a reward for her popularity.

The chain drug stores furnished windows to plug the contest and also advertised it in their stores. A special full page ad was run weekly by the company and the announcement of the contest was prominently carried in the center of the page. To boost business at both the store and the theatre the contest was arranged so that ten votes would be allowed for every fifty cent purchase at the store and the same number for every ticket at the theatre.

Coppack tied in the local newspaper and they printed coupons daily which entitled the reader to five votes for the contestants. In addition to this the paper also gave the contest a lot of publicity in the form of stories and pictures. Almost every possible angle was covered by Coppack in putting it across and the increased box office revenue derived from the stunt proved the strength of his showmanship.

N. T. Prager Hit City Broadside On "Hit the Deck" Gags

A campaign that would do credit to a world premiere opening in a key city was engineered and executed recently by N. T. Prager, manager of the Missouri Theatre in St. Joseph, Missouri, for his engagement of "Hit the Deck."

As the opening gun in the campaign, teaser ads were shot in the daily newspapers, ten days in advance, with the space being increased daily. Readers were mailed to twenty-five country newspapers within a fifty mile radius of the city, while over a thousand half sheet cards were staked on highways at one hundred foot intervals for over four miles out of town.

Due to the fact that the stars in the picture were born in Missouri, three advance stories were secured in the local newspapers. On the screen, special teaser copy was used for a ten day advance plug on the picture. By tying up with the local drug stores they featured a "Hit the Deck" sandwich, which the clerks sold on percentage, with passes being given to the ones totalling the highest amount of special sales. Two department stores with soda fountains also entered the tie-up.

An animated shadow box, with the animation consisting of battleships riding the waves behind a row of dancing girls and gobs, was erected in the main lobby and created a fine flash. Special invitations were mailed to all "Smiths" who had served in the Navy to attend the performance as the theatre's guests. The front of the house was decorated with eight hundred muslin pennants in blue and white, which were made up by the house employees, the only cost involved being the purchasing of the muslin.

One hundred one sheet banners were placed on street car fronts, the local traction company furnishing the space gratis. As you will note from the photos the tie-ups secured were very valuable. One photo shows the theme song tie-up in the window of a prominent department store and the other will give you an idea of how the "special" sandwich gag was handled. The theme songs were also plugged over two radio stations in the city and a special broadcast of the picture itself was arranged on the last three days of the playdates.

Prager covered many more angles in his campaign which included among them the placing of tire covers on the back of taxicabs, banners strung alongside busses, gummed stickers pasted about the city and the rubber stamping of fan movie magazines sold on the news stands. He also used a little stunt that we feel sure you will want to use on one of your future attractions since it will fit in almost any spot.

Twenty-five linoleum mats, of the type sold by department stores at about a quarter each, painted in oil with the attraction, theatre and dates were left on the Saturday night before the opening within store vestibules. With the result that fifteen of them were permitted to remain there and the theatre for a small amount received some excellent publicity.

The entire campaign met with great success and the picture hit a new high in business. And just before we sign off on this one we'd like to state again that there is a number of valuable points in it that will probably fit in with some picture you contemplate showing at a future date, so it will pay you to look over the angles carefully. We want to thank Prager for passing this along to us and we hope to record more of his work at a future date. Incidentally, Norman, we haven't a photo of you in our files. Why not shoot us in one together with a little "personal" dope about yourself?

They Request Them And Buddy Webber Says It With Music

This is just a little announcement to let his friends know that Buddy Webber, organist of the Capitol Theatre, Harold Kopplin's house, in Miami, Fla., is still going along like a house afire.

A short while ago we showed you how he sold the patrons on "Singin' in the Bathtub," and published a photo of the stunt. The gag was typical of the work he does whenever novelty is permissible. However when he gets a straight song to play he works it into the form of a request. At the conclusion of a new number he is introducing he will state that it was requested by a certain person in town and announce that anyone else desiring late numbers or past numbers played, send him a note.

The next week, when he plays a request program he has the names of the parties requesting the numbers projected on the screen. This serves to stimulate interest in his music and helps towards bringing in more request numbers, as the people seem to like having their names presented along with the songs. In addition to this Buddy also features a twenty minute organ recital every morning before the picture and this is a great aid towards filling the seats for the "early bird" show.

We expect in the future to pass along some very fine novelties from this section of Florida and since the Capitol boasts a corking showman in the person of Harold A. Kopplin and a cracker jack organist in Buddy, it looks as though our hope will be fulfilled.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Frank S. Mickley Sells Them Plenty In Allentown Pa.

It's been some time since we've had Allentown, Pa., represented on our pages and we were thinking of taking drastic measures to rouse that town since we know there's some mighty good showmen there, and, to make us hot under the collar, they are usually active. So we were beginning to wonder, and just as we started to get set to take those measures we spoke about, Frank S. Mickley came to the rescue.

Mickley is the manager of the Capitol Theatre in Allentown and is one of our very active members. It seems that he has been pretty busy cooking things up for his house and now that his campaigns have all clicked, we have a few things to tell you about. On "The Mississippi Gambler" he procured a number of playing cards and imprinted them with copy on the picture. The cards were then distributed in every mailbox throughout the city, and to stimulate interest he printed a little notice, on the bottom of them to the effect that any one holding the ace of hearts was entitled to a free admission. This stunt made a decided hit with the town and was the means of securing plenty of business on the picture and good will for the house.

Another stunt Mickley used, this time on "Cohens and Kellys in Scotland," was effected through a tie-up with a local confectioner. The confectioner furnished him with a quantity of butter skotch kisses, which were placed in pay envelopes and bore copy relating to the picture, and also a credit line for the confectioner, and distributed about town by a girl dressed in a Highland costume. The value of this little bit of exploitation was seen in the extra days that the picture was held over at the house.

So that you can see what Frank looks like we are reproducing above a picture of him seated at his desk, and if you'll look closely at it you will be able to discern the emblem that adorns the wall of a manager's office in almost every part of the showman world, the certificate of membership in the Managers' Round Table Club. Oak, Frank, we're certainly glad to know that you're stepping right along out there in Allentown and the only other thing we want to say now is that we hope you'll prod the rest of those showmen out around your district and tell them not to be keeping us in the dark. And incidentally, Frank, let's have some more of those hand drawn ads so that we can include one or two in a future lay-out.

Car License Stunt Gave Roy Slentz A Newspaper Break

One is more often criticized than praised for his deeds is an old saying, so in Pueblo, Colo., Roy Slentz tried to bring the average up a bit by handing out a few compliments in the form of tickets to see "Burning Up" at the Colorado Theatre.

A most effective tie-up was arranged with the Evening Journal in the form of a careful driving contest. The newspaper placed men on the streets in the business district to jot down the car license numbers of all drivers showing particular care in the guidance of their cars.

Each day, ten license numbers were scattered through the want ads—and any person finding his license number on this page was entitled to a guest ticket to see "Burning Up." This tie-up appeared on the want-ad section for one week in advance of picture's engagement and aroused all sorts of interest for the picture as well as somewhat curbing the reckless driving on the part of several.

An eight-column streamer across the top of the want-ad page was secured each day along with a two-column space containing copy about the picture and explanation about the contest, how the car owner was to get his guest ticket, etc.

"LAFF-O'-THE-WEEK"

With the publishing of "The Battle Rages," last week, we really started a battle. We have received no less than a dozen different jokes concerning showmen and their famed "wise-cracks." Some of these we will incorporate into "Lobby Laffs" and thus save a few hairs from turning gray on the classic cranium of Dick Kirschbaum. Others we are going to use weekly as a special box. So if you have a good joke, send it in to us and see whether you will be represented in the "Joke of the Week Box."

To-day's wheeze concerns the flip crack coming from M. M. of New London, Conn., who upon being informed that a certain showman in the West has a habit of arraying himself in the best atmospheric costume procurable to plug his picture, such as a Highland costume for "The Campbells Are Coming," etc., blandly inquired of your chairman, "What's that guy gonna do if he books in "The Naked Truth"?

And that's the humorous side of the showman. We want to show that side, too. So shoot us in your best concerning an experience that befell you. Or perhaps you know of a humorous experience encountered by a fellow showman. At any rate, we want to pass along a "Joke-of-the-Week" and we know you and you and you all want to win a special place on the page.

Nice work, Roy, and this dope on "Burning Up" arrived pretty near at the same time as the happy thought that we ought to be getting after you for some more of your activities. Suppose you stick a note on your diary to send us one each week, so that your brother members and showmen can see what you are doing and possibly benefit by your long experience running a theatre.

Henry Roemer Is Now An Editor But He's Still Active

One of our members who sort of strayed away from the show business to take over the editorship of a newspaper in Anacostia, District of Columbia, but who still maintains the active interest he has always showed in the CLUB is Henry Conrad Roemer.

Though he is not actively engaged in the show business any more, Roemer still applies his showman knowledge to all of the theatre advertising the paper receives. So when the new Fairlawn Theatre under the managership of Lloyd Wineland opened in town he set to work to help him turn out a co-operative double truck ad that was well made up. A number of firms who participated in the construction of the theatre were represented on the pages as well as the local merchants.

An excellent campaign was put across for the opening of the theatre and the house came in for a lot of good breaks in the newspapers. The president of the local bank made the dedicatory address and a large number of men prominent in the affairs of the town were also introduced. The Chamber of Commerce and local business organizations gave it a big send-off also.

We notice that in his newspaper Roemer thinks enough of a movie star cross word puzzle to run it as a regular feature which again proves the worth of showmanship in almost any sort of a racket. We want to thank him for the continued interest he has shown ever since he became a member of the Round Table Club and we [illegible] like to hear more about the Fairlawn, for now that it has been formerly opened it will of course be necessary to exhibit showmanship t okeep them coming in.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Better Late Than Never!

Being just a week late don't help matters very much, but knowing Al Unger as we do leads us to believe that he will understand that the omission was not our fault. Right Al?

But we must tell you that Al is the wide-awake manager of the Fulton Theatre in Jersey City for the Fox Metropolitan chain. His name and picture are by no means new to the Club pages, as any one of our regular followers will tell you; but since we formally introduced his entire group of brother managers last week, we hasten to add his. And whats' more, we'll be telling you something else about him in an early issue of the Club pages.

Then we must add the following, which will make the count 100%:

MEYER COHEN is the manager of the Strand Theatre in Jersey City. As a hustling hard worker you must go some to equal or beat him. Perhaps one of his best qualifications is that sunny smile of his.

MAURICE BROSKI keeps himself busy managing the Franklin Theatre out in Nutley, N. J., and chalks up another exceptional showman for this fine circuit division. Maurice gained his present knowledge of showmanship in the school of experience.

WILLIAM BURKE, manager of the Rockland Theatre up at Nyack, N. Y., is one of the two newcomers to the Met. Chain, but we predict a long and successful stay if he keeps up the fine start. We're rootin' for you, Bill!

ARTHUR BERGOFFEN manages the Palace Theatre in Bergenfield, N. J., and is the other new manager to join the Kutinsky-Sheridan group on the other side of the river. We ought to promote some good material from this wide-awake showman.

John S. MacNeill And "Scotch Giant" Set Utica Laughing

Up in Utica, N. Y., the patrons of the Fox Met. Theatres, Upstate Playhouse division, were treated to a hearty laugh recently when John S. MacNeill, City Manager of the division exploited "Cohens and Kellys in Scotland."

MacNeill secured the services of a midget who he dressed in a Scotch highlander's costume. The midget walked about the street and handed out novelty heralds which read "I Am A Scotch Giant." The rest of the herald, which was made up in the form of a folder, carried sales copy on the picture.

By looking closely at the photo you can obtain some idea of how effective this ballyhoo must have been. The gentleman towering over "The Scotch Giant" is Mr. MacNeill himself, who is responsible for the creation and execution of the very showmanlike stunt and we guess we don't need to say that the gag clicked wonderfully, as the reaction at the box office proved it.

Since Mr. MacNeil has shown us what he can do in the way of show merchandising we're going to keep hot on his trail from now on, not only because he represents the live-wire showmen who comprise the Utica part, Upstate Division, but because we know he takes a very active interest in the exploiting of his attractions. So listen, John, we want to hear some more from you in the very near future in order that we may pass these ideas of yours along to the rest of the Round Table bunch.

Street Ballyhoo Sold The Picture For Marsline Moore

Here's a very effective ballyhoo that was used by M. K. Moore, manager of the Worth Theatre in Fort Worth, Tex.

The photo shows a truck, with a trailer attached, that cruised about the principal streets of the town, letting the residents know of the attraction at the theatre. The display was constructed of beaverboard and painted in striking colors.

You will notice the plug that Moore gets in for his short subjects in the banner he has strung alongside the truck. We are also showing you in the photo on the other side, the "flash" he creates on his marquee and front of the house by using a flag and a valance to plug the star and the picture. If you look closely you can also notice that he has devoted space on his marquee to his shorts.

As we declared recently in our special short subject section, there's a lot of dough to be grabbed by properly plugging your shorts and so whenever you come across anything that your patrons especially like, then give it a plug along with your regular feature, because it will more than make up for it.

Gaston's Cookie Gag Proved Sweet Plug For "Honey"

Anybody looking for novelty in a truck ballyhoo should apply at the door of the Casino Theatre in Marshalltown, Iowa, and ask for Dick Gaston, the manager.

A glance at the photo we are showing with this little story will give you an idea as to the effectiveness of his ballyhoo for "Honey." He procured a new truck and complete kitchen outfit from local dealers. The kitchen outfit included a cabinet, table, range and stools. The truck was used on Main Street, the opening day, with the four girls making heart shaped cookies.

The cookies, as they came out of the oven, were inserted in oil paper sacks, which bore the theatre imprint and ad on the picture. A phonograph on the truck played the theme songs from the film and helped to attract attention to the ballyhoo. The truck was also parked in front of the most patronized stores in town and larger distribution was made.

The cost of a gag of this sort was very small, the only money expended being the cost of the baking material. This was the first time the town had ever seen so high powered a stunt and you can bet it attracted plenty of attention. Another stunt he used on the picture was a full page ad he promoted from the local merchants, in which he tied-up bakeries and furniture stores, as well as other merchants. As a theme song plug he arranged for the local furniture store to give out free copies of one of the theme songs, especially fitted towards the store's product, to the first fifty women asking for them. In this manner he secured some good-will for the house, as well as the dealer. Incidentally we'd like to point out in this photo, since so many showmen seem to be taking advantage of it, the use Dick makes of his marquee, by erecting cut-out letter signs. These signs have been proven to be very good for flashes and attention getters and may be constructed at small cost.

We want to hand Dick a little compliment for the showmanlike way he handled this campaign and we'd like him to know that we want to head more of his work in the near future.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING!

Long ago we stressed the importance of your newspaper advertising and called to your attention many angles that should have guided you out of the pitfalls to bad copy. This advice was aimed, especially, at the men who had to make up their own newspaper copy, in addition to their many other duties.

We are not going to play "teacher," for the simple reason that YOU know your own conditions better than anybody who happens to be hundreds or thousands of miles from your town and theatre. But regardless of where you are located, there are a few common-sense angles worthy of more than passing consideration.

First: Your preparation of copy. Remember, no newspaper composing room man can read your mind. Even though you may not have a thorough knowledge of type faces or sizes, you can show, by reason of the way you lay out your ad-copy, just what portion is to be played up. The best way to do this is to draw a box of the exact size of the ad you are making up. Then pencil in your copy, mats, etc., in proportion to the size you want it set.

Second: Mats. Can be broken up so that any part of them can be worked into the ad. Have a talk with your composing room man if this is not clear to both of you. Don't drop an effective mat because it won't fit your allotted space. Try to work out some way to use the most important parts of it.

Third: Proofs. Of course, the question of proofs is not so easy to discuss, since every paper and theatre work the angle out themselves; but on all important advertisements, such as the advance announcements or opening-day ads, you should try to arrange your copy several days in advance so that the paper can show you a proof before it is run. You at least get a chance to alter or correct your advertising in this way.

We have published many newspaper ad layouts to show you what the other fellow is doing. We shall continue to do so as fast as our limited time permits us to make up such layouts. It's a great idea watching how others make up effective newspaper ads and should guide you to many new ideas and angles along these lines.

A. H. Vincent Was Wide-awake and He Cashed In On This

A. H. Vincent got up a special program for the Firemen's Ball that gave a two weeks' line-up of pictures at both the Publix-Rex and Publix-Sterling theatres in Greeley, Colo.

Inasmuch as the Firemen's Ball took place on March 17th, the programs were in the shape of an Irishman's high hat and of course followed green.

Underneath the line of the space allotted for the name of the dancing partner appeared, "'The Girl Said No.'—Sterling, Mar. 17-19." And in this manner was given the titles of coming pictures at both theatres and the playdates for the last two weeks of the current month of March.

The programs in themselves were decidedly novel and made an instant hit with the huge throng present at the Ball. And it also proved an excellent medium of giving out the list of coming pictures at both theatres.

Burr Cline Woke Up Mankato With Spring Trade Week

Heeding the call of spring and deciding that Mankato, Minn. needed something to keep spring fever away, Burr Cline, manager of the State Theatre went to work and displayed some corking showmanship in his initial spring business building campaign.

With the co-operation of the local merchants, he planned a Spring Trade Week. The Merchants' Association got solidly behind it, and in this manner he was enabled to secure plenty of window space, etc. By examining closely the cut we are showing, you can see the attractive ad he ran in one of the local papers announcing the special week. On top of the page you will notice the slogan slug which was carried in all advertising, both of the theatre and merchants, during the campaign.

Special cards, announcing the week, were put in convenient and prominent locations throughout the town. By having a number of auto banners made up, Cline let the week in for more publicity. The muslin banners were placed on the backs of autos and on the trucks belonging to the merchants. The banners were paid for by the tradesmen, as were the cards.

On the Saturday before the week officially opened, a parade of new cars, trucks, and farm machinery was staged. The procession, stretching about three blocks, proceeded through the town and attracted plenty of comment.

Just to give you some idea of how this parade was received by the residents of Mankato, we'd like you to know that the newspaper devoted space on the front page to an announcement regarding the celebration, and also carried a proclamation from the Mayor which requested that every one join in. Another parade on the closing of the week was run with the local high school band being featured.

In the theatres the slogan slug was used in all trailers, and this aided in keeping the week before the eyes of the residents of the town. Over five thousand programs, announcing the Trade Week and the theatre's attractions were mailed to rural residents. We are reproducing a number of photos with this article which will serve to give you an idea of how well the campaign was executed. We want especially to call your attention to the picture showing the twenty-four sheet used as a plug. It would pay you to study its copy carefully in the event that you care to use this stunt at any time in the season.

The upper left hand photo in the lay-out will give you some idea of the way Cline sells his shows. He has strung a banner alongside of a street car and there's no getting away from the fact that he sold the picture plenty by this medium. To get back to our subject again, if you will look at the lower photo on the left you can discern, somewhat dimly, a band that paraded about town preceded by a motorcycle in which sat a boy bearing aloft a banner. This was also an excellent means of exciting interest. And with every one in the city pulling for the week, you can bet the results were wonderful.

We want to thank Cline for passing along this contribution and we want him to know we deem it a pleasure to show such fine work. We hope that he will continue the interest he has shown in the past, and if he does we are sure that the future will hold many mighty nice things for his fellow-members in the Managers' Round Table Club.

Street Ballyhoo Proved An Aid To Arthur W. Pinkham

Arthur W. Pinkham was doing such good business with "Sunnyside Up" playing at the Strand Theatre, Dover, N. H., that he asked that it be held over another day.

In order to let the people know about the extra day's showing of the picture, Pinkham used an excellent stunt that was the talk of the town.

Pinkham had a man wearing blue glasses and carrying a cane to give the impression he was an aged man. This man stopped buses leading in directions away from the theatre. And when the bus door was opened, he would inquire in a loud voice to that all the occupants of the bus could clearly hear, "Does this bus go to the Strand? I hear they are playing "Sunnyside Up" another day—Thursday, but I want to go there now and avoid the crowd."

After the man's story was told, the bus driver would advise him to take the bus going in the opposite direction.

Pinkham received many comments from the bus drivers; they telling him that the sales talk at the door of the buses carrying the factory and mill people home, caused a lot of discussion on the trip. It is plain that this must have refreshed the memory of many regarding the holding over of the picture.

Pinkham squared himself with the bus drivers with passes as they stopped the buses with full knowledge of the stunt, which is good work in any man's land, right?

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

"Clancy In Wall Street" Hit High In Providence, R. I.

Providence, R. I., was treated to a taste of high powered showmanship recently when "Clancy in Wall Street," world premiered in that city.

A week before the opening of the RKO Albee, the local telephone company, co-operating with Foster Lardner, manager of the house, installed a switchboard in the lobby, with a regular exchange operator in charge. As the patrons passed the board, on their way in and out of the theatre, they would stop to look at it. Taking her cue from this, the girl sitting at the line, displaying signs of unusual activity, would answer into the mouthpiece: "Yes, this is the RKO Albee. Yes, "Clancy in Wall Street?" Next week, starting Saturday. Yes, a very fine comedy. Oh, yes, Charlies Murray is in it. I'm anxious to see it too." The girl would then plug in on another supposedly incoming call and repeat the same line of chatter. This certainly got a rise out of the patrons and they were sold on the picture.

In addition to this stunt the telephone company also installed a phone-typewriter in the lobby. Reams of paper issued from this machine all day long, carrying messages about "Clancy," motion picture news direct from Hollywood, announcments about the News Tribune contest and local news items. The messages were prepared by Richard Farrell and Lardner and transmitted from the office of the local phone company. Both these very important services were secured from the phone company at no cost to the theatre.

On Saturday, the day of the opening, since the papers had been featuring a story about it, a plane, supposed to have come from Hollywood, circled about the city at the noon hour, with the pilot putting the ship through a series of stunts, and dropped off a parachute jumper, to whose back was strapped the can of film. The jump was made directly over the What Cheer airport, and as the aviator hit the ground, a waiting car transported him and the film to the theatre. The papers gave this a big play, with pictures and stories and the house came in for some valuable publicity. The gag was followed through on Monday and Tuesday with the distribution, from the air, of thousands of heralds.

Through a tie-up made with the Postal Telegraph Company, Lardner and Foster were enabled to procure an automatic transmitter which was installed in the spacious lobby of the Albee. A card over the display announced that anyone wishing to send a message over the machine to Charlie Murray in Hollywood, expressing their liking for the picture, might do so free of charge. This stunt made a big hit with them and a lot of good-will was secured when each person was given a copy of the message on Teletype tape

The entire campaign was well planned and executed, and, as we remarked before, Providence received a thrill. Of course, many more angles than we have set forth here were covered, but since they were of the regular showman routine variety, and are a necessary part of every campaign, we have tried to enumerate only the highlights of the campaign so that the Club might witness to what great heights the modern showman is rising.

"HOW'DY, BOYS"

Recent visitors in Club headquarters during the past week or two included, among others:

"Ducky" Myers of the Majestic Theatre in Chillicothe, Ohio, and one of our fondest recollections of the Gus Sun party on Lake Erie in 1928.

Frank Ambruster, formerly of Steubenville and East Liverpool, Ohio, and now trying to get set around the New York sector.

F. W. Tierney, from Watertown, N. Y., and all full of "pep and ginger." Watch this chap; before very long he should be doing great things.

Larry Jacobs, ace publicity man now engaged in putting over Columbia's specials—and what a job he's making of it, too. Lots of high-powered stuff in Larry.

Eddie Hitchcock, publicity director for the N. Y. Paramount Theatre, and making a bigger rep. for himself here in New York than he had out on the Coast.

There were lots of others, but we don't always remember their names when we sit ourselves down to write about these visits.

But the "latch-string" is on the outside and there's a hearty welcome on the mat; so make the Club an important stop when you hit the Big Town.

SMART DISPLAY!

Credit Max Shagrin, general manager of the Hollywood Warner houses, with one of the most effective displays ever conceived or executed. Close inspection of this reproduction will reveal the "inside" dope on how he arranged this marvelous piece of workmanship. Over 20,000 pennants were utilized for the largest sign of its kind ever constructed in Southern California. It covered the entire front of the Warner Theatre Building in Hollywood, with the letters "Second Anniversary" fifty feet in height. Special street decorations carrying out the same color scheme and special banners with standards set in the sidewalk, helped the idea out considerably.

We might add, that other tie-ups for this Anniversary Celebration were a prominent feminine star serving coffee to lady patrons every matinee during the week. Also personal appearances of a famous director every night. Special editions of the local newspapers were gotten out, also emphasizing the great event.

The picture reproduced above, in itself, is the greatest compliment we can possibly pay Mr. Shagrin; it would be a pleasure to tell you all lots more about himself and his activities.

"PROF." BILLY STILLMAN!

We took a trip over to Jersey City the other night and dropped in on Billy Stillman at the Ritz. It is indeed a pleasure to report that Billy is pepping that house up wonderfully. On this especial night he had been plugging "The Low-Down on the Dempsey-Tunney Fight at Chicago."

He distributed a few thousand heralds about the town and signed them "By One Who Knows." We came in while the film was going on and there was Billy standing alongside the sheet lecturing while the picture was being unreeled. To those who are not in on the know, we'd like to inform you that Billy was connected in the capacity of personnel manager to the late "Tex" Rickard and had served with the boxing promoter ever since the Dempsey-Carpentier fracas; so he was ably qualified to lecture.

The stunt clicked for a million with the patrons of the Ritz and Billy let the house in for a lot of favorable publicity. Since he has been at the theatre, he has been turning out some great stuff and we know, in fact he told us, that some more showmanlike stunts are on the way.

Meet Bert Leighton Of Union City, N. J. New Club Member

Over on the Jersey shore we have a good many up-to-the-minute showmen who are members of the Round Table Club and now we want to introduce at this time, another live-wire in the person of Bert Leighton, a representative showman.

Leighton is the manager of the Fabian Theatre in Union City, N. J., and while we haven't any very complete dope on his career proper we do know that he is far from being inactive as some very good stunts have been engineered around his division. He turned out a campaign not so long ago on a production that would sell in any town.

With competition pretty hot in Union City, he must be on his toes all the time for the showmen in the vicinity are certainly "early risers," as our pages have many times shown. In fact, the most recent account we ran was one showing a corking tie-up that G. P. Josephson promoted with a local auto dealer.

We want to welcome Bert into the Club and we feel that he more than expects to keep in line with his "competitors" over there in Union City. So what do you say about it Bert. Being from Missouri, we have to be shown and we think you can show us.

Joe Goetz Burned Up Everything To Sell "Burning Up"

According to this account, which we are printing for the reason of showing you that Joe Goetz, hustling manager of the State Theatre in Dayton, Ohio, is still burning up the town, you'll get the low-down on his work with "Burning Up."

Since the picture featured an automobile racing background, Joe went to work and tied-up the local Cord automobile dealer and the Firestone Tire agency. Through these tie-ups he managed to secure a full page of publicity and ads in the Sunday edition of the Dayton Journal. And since this was run in the automobile section the theatre got a plug in twice, as the regular theatre ad was run on the amusement page. The house occupied a prominent spot on the full page spread and looked like a million bucks.

The photos we are reproducing will give you a line on a couple of other stunts that were pulled by Joe. On "Forward Pass" he dressed his ushers up in the uniforms you see in the picture. These suits, brand new, were obtained free of charge from the local sporting goods dealer, who received a credit card in the lobby. On the opening day of the picture he invited the local boys' patrol (an organization of youngsters who patrol the streets surrounding the schools, to safeguard the younger kiddies), to witness the show. The boys paraded to the theatre and lined up in front of the regular kiddie business. The ushers, in football uniforms were stationed every ten feet and kept order in the ranks. This formation caused lots of office workers to lean out the window to see what was going on and thus their attention was drawn to the picture.

The other photo shows a bunch of trophies that were promoted by Joe from local sporting dealers. Every school in Dayton was awarded two of the cups. The display was placed in the lobby in front of an attractive cut-out plugging the picture. The cup angle let the theatre in for a lot of publicity and plenty of good-will and before we close this all too brief article we would like to say that this is typical of Joe's showman ability and is certainly a credit to him. Good work, Joe, and don't forget we're always glad to hear from a real live member like yourself because we know that you have something that will be of benefit to your brother members in the Club.

Eugene J. Lang Is Now In Line For Congratulations

We had been wondering what had happened to Eugene J. Lang, manager of the Ward Theatre in New York City, when we received word from some of our scouts concerning him.

It seems that Eugene has been very busy lately, not only at his theatre but also at home. For now he is the proud papa of a charming little baby girl, born on St. Patrick's day. So you see he's plenty busy now. What with attending to his daily duties at the theatre and rushing home between jumps to see the Lang heiress, he's had his hands full.

With such a great event befalling you Eugene, you can bet that you're excused from active participation in the Club's activities for a little while because we know that when you begin to step out things will be going along "bigger and better" than ever. We want to extend our congratulations and wish the young lady and yourself and wife all the happiness in the world.

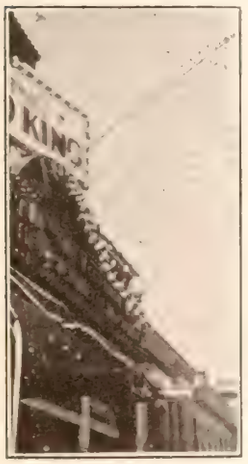
MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

William Evans Is Now Located In So. Norwalk, Conn.

Well, here's news. Bill Evans, former manager of the New Capitol Theatre in Danbury, Conn., is now knocking them over for the Warner outfit out in South Norwalk, Conn., at the Rialto Theatre.



While he was at the New Capitol we passed along some good accounts of Bill's work, especially the radio gag he pulled in connection with Rudy Vallee's picture, so we know that he is wised up on the show selling game. We are unable to state whether Bill's house is ideally located for good exploitation at this time but we don't feel that it's necessary to find out, as we have discovered when a showman wants to sell his shows he can sell them no matter where he is located or what kind of a local situation confronts him. In fact, we are proving it with the "Problems" we are running.

So listen, Bill, knowing that you are capable of turning out some good stuff we are looking forward to the things you and your assistant are planning at your new house because there should be some stuff in them that will prove of interest to your fellow members and will no doubt be of the sort that can be put to good use by them. We want to wish you lots of luck at the Rialto and also want you to know that if you continue the good work you did at the New Capitol you'll more than put the house across.

Montague Salmon Sold This Picture In Showman Style

What probably caused more comment than any other one thing in Montague Salmon's campaign on "The Vagabond King" playing at the Rialto Theatre, Macon, Ga., was the displaying of an all-electric flag, which sure was a great gag.

The idea of the electric flag was to help emphasize the all-color angle of the picture. One of the local electric companies furnished the flag gratis—using 450 lamps and making a splendid replica of the American flag.

The flag was the talk of the town—and before the week was over, it is doubtful if there was anyone who hadn't seen it.

Among many other stunts in exploiting the picture, Salmon especially got excellent results on a telephone gag that hadn't been used in this particular manner in Macon before: Two girls called nearly every telephone subscriber in town. And if a man answered the phone, the girls would start off, "Hello Bob, don't make any plans for next Monday night. I want you to take me to see The Vagabond King at the Rialto Theatre." And if a girl answered, the conversation would be, "Hello Sue, let's plan to see The Vagabond King next Monday night at the Rialto Theatre. I wouldn't miss it for the world."

And of course when people on the other end of the line began to feel that they were the wrong party, the girls would excuse themselves. But, the message about the picture was gotten over in a nice way and no doubt helped to publicize it greatly.

Capitol Theatre In Wheeling W. Va. Plugged By Odlum

Another showman whose name deserves to be listed along with the "honorables" of publicity fame is G. B. Odlum, who handles the publicity for the Capitol Theatre in Wheeling, W. Va., or, since the Capitol is a million dollar or so house his title is director of public relations.

One of his recent stunts to boost good-will for the house consisted of starting a "Family Night" in which the entire family, ma, pa and the kids, were entitled to view the show for one price. And special prizes were offered for the largest families present. The first night a family of eighteen won the award. The stunt was put on as a regular weekly feature at the house and certainly boosted good-will. Another good-will stunt was engineered with the local high schools. Special rebate tickets were printed and sold there. The tickets entitled the students to listen to a special lecture on showmanship and also participate in an inspection tour at the Capitol, as well as seeing the show. They were taken around the various parts of the theatre and shown the workings of the organ, the stage contrivances, the heating plant, the cooling plant, the sound equipment, projection machines and almost everything else. When they left they were presented with pieces of film showing the sound track and every student left the house feeling that the Capitol couldn't be beat.

To bring in trade from the rural regions a special ticket was included on the regular mailing list program which entitled the holder to two tickets for the price of one. The gag did a lot towards making new friends for the house and also jacked up business a little. Another good one used by Odlum is his Capitol bulletin which is issued weekly to the various dealers in town informing them of the coming attractions and showing them how they can benefit by book tie-ups, shoe tie-ups, and anything else that would be of value to both the theatre and the merchant. This angle met with immediate favor with the merchants of Wheeling and they had windows booked up ahead for special displays.

On the picture "Sarah and Son," a special circular letter was made up and sent to all the prominent women's clubs in the town. The letter was printed in typewriter type on good quality paper and plugged the show from the woman angle. With the box-office receipts showing the success of the idea

Thanks "G. B." for giving us this dope on your activity, and we hope that in the future we will have a lot more accounts to pass along to your fellow members because they too like to be kept posted on what the other fellow is doing to sell his shows.

"THE HAPPY MEDIUM"

Here we are back on the usher question. But, honestly, boys, don't you think a little more care and judgment should be exercised?

There seems to be a mania with lots of managers to either overtrain or undertrain their service staffs (better known as ushers). Why not seek the happy medium? Pay more attention to their dress and appearance. Are they clean or shabby looking when they go on duty? Are they badly in need of a haircut? Are their shoes shined every day?

The idea of making West Pointers out of them has proven bad dope (except in New York where the "de luxers" still herd the customers like cattle for no good reason). It is far better to make them put on a sunny, smiling appearance than snappy and short-tempered. They should be liked and respected by the patrons. If they are, those standing-room-only nights won't be nightmares to you.

And as for your assistant: Have you ever adopted the idea of putting him into a tuxedo? It's good dope and makes a decided impression on the people coming into the house, besides dressing up the whole theatre by reason of his floating around looking after the aisle ushers and things in general.

Every one on your staff, from front doorman and cashier right through to the doorman and ushers, should radiate a cheery, pleasant atmosphere. It will hold more good-will than all the overtrained army type could ever hope for.

Patrons Checked In At Crane's B. O. With This Stunt

To act as a daily reminder to persons eating in various restaurants and cafes, Ed. A. Crane devised his own meal checks for use in these establishments; the checks carrying copy about "The Vagabond King" playing at the Florida Theatre, Daytona Beach, Fla.

The checks were headed at the top "Things to do today" and then followed nine blank lines for the insertion of figures, etc., and the 10th line had copy reading, "Plan Now to See and Hear Dennis King in The Vagabond King—Paramount's supreme achievement in technicolor."

The checks were used every day during the run of the picture and proved an excellent reminder to those who hadn't seen th picture.

Crane also stepped out with plenty of decorations on the theatre front, marquee and lobby as well as flying a banner across the street in front of the theatre. Several excellent cooperative window displays were also secured to help publicize the picture.

And Now For Some Low-Downs on Roy Drachman's Career

We are going to present now a little dope on Roy Drachmann's career in the show business because we feel that his brother members in the Club are as interested as we in knowing something about him.

His father, Manny Drachmann, was one of the first exhibitors in the United States, having started over twenty nine years ago in Tucson with a large amusement park that contained all kinds of entertainment devices and featured all types of attractions from cock fights up. He also owned two of the first theatres in town.

Growing up in such a theatrical atmosphere it was a cinch that Roy would never work in any other kind of business. So after breaking in about the age of six by handing out programs, he rose in later years, to the position of usher, and in the intervening years mixed this up by working as doorman. Of course, all this was done while he attended high school and the University of Arizona. He left school in 1926 and took over the management of his father's two theatres, the Opera House and the Rialto, doing all the buying and booking, which position he held until the house sold out to its present owners and Roy was retained as manager.

We have shown you many interesting accounts of his work in the past and most everyone knows that he is a very active showman. Just to give you a couple of more lines on him we are reproducing a group of photos which show some of his work. The little "No Parking" card in the upper left photo was used in conjunction with "Song of the West" but as you will notice it can be used on any picture. The card was placed near all hydrants or any other place where traffic was ruled off. The rest of the photos show some of the excellent art work his artist Wm. Van Dycke turns out. And in the lower right is a photo of an electrically lighted beaverboard "flash."

And now that we've given you all we know concerning Roy we'll have to let his future work speak for itself. So, let's start shouting Roy and we'll record the echoes on these pages.

David Silverman Made A Valuable Tie-Up With Band

You'll find a lot of real active showmen on the Fox Met. Chain of theatres and one of these live-wires is David Silverman, manager of the Belmont Theatre in the Bronx, N. Y. C.

In connection with his recent showing of "General Crack" Silverman promoted a tie-up that proved of value to the theatre. He invited the Bronx County American Legion Drum and Bugle Corps to the theatre as his guests. The entire band turned out, uniformed, in full force and paraded to the theatre under the directions of Drum Major Arthur Roane. And they made such a ballyhoo that the police reserves had to be called to keep the crowds in front of the theatre orderly.

The band, after parading through the streets, stopped in front of the theatre and played several numbers to the delight of the crowd. They then went into the house to witness the show and before leaving played a number as a prologue to the last feature. In addition to the band, various legion officials were also present as guests.

The newspapers gave the story a big play in their pages and Silverman secured some very valuable publicity from the Bronx Section of the Evening Journal as well as the local Bronx papers. It is almost unnecessary for us to say that this stunt did a lot towards selling the picture for it speaks for itself. With such showmanship being displayed up around the Bronx we hope that Silverman will keep us in touch with the rest of his activities in the future. What say Dave?

THE "ALL FOR ONE AND ONE FOR ALL" SPIRIT!

HAROLD KOPPLIN Says:

". . . You know, after all, one man can only have an idea—but it takes a heck of a lot of heads and hands and work to put it over. . . . Don't you think that in the Round Table Club pages, instead of saying what a great guy Harold Kopplin or John Jones is, you could say, "Gee! He must have a great gang." . . . ?

Manager,
Capitol Theatre,
Miami, Fla.

Ed. Note:
The Managers' Round Table Club was founded, not to boost showmen to the skies, but to boost their work whenever it merits it. As the theatre manager is the brains behind the organization, it is only fitting and proper that his name be mentioned in connection with his "ideas." The interchanging of such "ideas" has become the by-word of showmen today. When they want something new, they trade in the "old idea" and reach for a MPNews instead of a wheeze. "We are not here, boys, to praise Caesar, nor are we here to bury him." We are here to laud Caesar's work, the one thing really deserving of praise, for "actions speak louder than words." So, please fellers, don't develop the impression that we are painting pictures of him. We're not. It's the work done by Caesar that is truly deserving of praise. DO WE ALL AGREE?

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Another Exploiteer To Enroll In Club Is Emanuel Weisner

So many ace showmen all over the world have been turning in single and double truck ads that we wondered whether any limit would ever be reached in their originality. It seems that whenever a picture calls for a big spread some hustler steps out and grabs off a couple of pages of space in a newspaper.

This double truck we are showing you is the work of Emanuel P. Weisner, exploitation man for the Circuit Theatres Inc. in Milwaukee, Wisconsin and is certainly worthy of any showman. In order to insure the ad being thoroughly read, Weisner injected a little novelty into it in the form of a license number contest. All of the ads carry the car number of some resident of the town. A note on top of the page announces the stunt and informs the patrons that free tickets will be awarded.

Nearly every prominent merchant in the neighborhood of the theatre was represented in the ad and it is a safe thing to say that it sold because, if we may swipe a line from some place "Such showmanship must be deserved." We want to thank Weisner for shooting this double truck along to us, and at this time we'd like to announce that if you have used a single page co-operative ad or perhaps a double page, and you've injected some novelty angles into it, then shoot it in to us so that we can pass it along to the rest of the Club. With summer on the way, we believe the showmen in the Club will be turning out some very novel ads of this sort and we want to look them over.

Now that you've been represented on our pages Emanuel, don't remain a stranger to us, but keep us posted on what you are doing to put the Circuit Theatre's houses over the top, and just as a tip, we'd like you to know that we've got some crackerjack exploitation men on our rolls and it will take some fast stepping to keep up with them but we've got an idea you can do it. What do you say? Are we right?

M. Meriweather Is Securing Lots Of Good-Will In Town

Every once in a while we look over our fast growing file of members and sort of check up on their activity. So when we came across Miller Meriweather's name we started to wonder what had happened to him, but, fortunately, the very next day we secured some dope on him.

He has been very busily engaged handling the Concord and Roxie Theatres in Concord, N. C., and his activity had prevented him, up to the time of our news, from letting us know what he was doing. Since we were aware of the fine work he had done when he handled the Lexington Theatre in Lexington, N. C., we could hardly understand the delay.

Meriweather gives us a little hint that he is lining something up that will be of value to his brother members and in the very near future will shoot us something on it. One of his activities now is the special benefit shows he puts on for all civic organizations in the town, and we understand, the little novelties he injects into the programs have gotten him a lot of good-will.

"MORE BLESSED TO GIVE——"

Summertime. . . . . People sweltering on the streets in the oppressive heat. . . . . You stand in the cool of your lobby and watch. . . . . "Twenty Degrees Cooler Inside," your display proclaims. . . . . You're happy. . . . . You're Cool. . . . . And even though business is a little cool, too, you're not bothered. . . . . The seats are empty but you don't care. . . . . It's not your fault if the patrons want to go down to the beach. . . . . That's to be expected. . . . . It's the breaks of the business. . . . . Even you're kid trade has fallen off. . . . . The kids are at the "ol' swimmin' hole." . . . . Or perhaps they are out in the country, enjoying the cool green of the shaded meadows. . . . . Lucky kids, those youngsters. . . . . But how about the less fortunate ones?

You never thought of that, did you? . . . . No need to apologize. . . . . It's human. . . . . You'll generally find that when a person feels contented he never gives a thought to anyone else. . . . . As we said, it's human. . . . . Listen. . . . . Why don't you give a thought towards the other bunch of kids in your community, town or city? . . . . The kids who live in those squalid, paint blistered, "nine-families-in-one" shacks down by the railroad tracks, or along the river front. . . . . They've never been to the country. . . . . Summer to them is the time when they suffer. . . . . But then, so is winter. . . . . Poor kids—they're always suffering. . . . . Christmas means Santy Claus to them. . . . . But Santa is only a name. . . . . And summer means heat. . . . . Heat that tortures their little bodies as they roll around on a straw-filled mattress, trying to sleep at night. . . . . It's not so bad in the day. . . . . They can find a little relief in the alley someplace. . . . . A smelly, filthy alley—but still cool. . . . . Not a beautiful picture, is it? . . . . But it's the truth! . . . . YOU wouldn't like to go through it. . . . . Maybe you think of this once in a while. . . . . You stand in a cool theatre and say, "Boy, it's hot—pity anybody on the streets today." . . . . Don't pity them! . . . . Do Something About It!!

The grown-ups don't need your help, but those kids do. . . . . Make a few inquiries. . . . . Investigate. . . . . You'll find that you can help a whole lot. . . . . Instead of letting those empty seats in your house go to waste, invite those kids in. . . . . Run a free show for them. . . . . Many of them have, perhaps, rarely seen a movie. . . . . Give them a break. . . . . If somebody were to tell you that you were responsible for the future welfare of those kids you'd say he was crazy. . . . . But you're wrong. . . . . By letting them see your shows you're educating them. . . . . Keeping them up on the times. . . . . Helping them along to grow up good citizens and a credit to the greatest and most human nation in the world. . . . . When you know business is not going to be so could in the summertime, why let the seats go to waste. . . . . Proposition your local dealers to get together and supply you with some ice cream, candy novelties, anything you can get your hands on. . . . . And when you invite a thousand or so kids to your house, give them the treat of their lives. . . . . Let them see that there really is something worth living for. . . . . Don't wait until Christmas to open your heart. . . . . Do it now!! . . . . And do it every time you can!! . . . . It's one of the great things you will really do in your showman career. . . . . A person with money, able to pay your admission price, is paying for happiness. . . . . But the poor kids can't do that. . . . . You've got to give it to them. . . . . Let them visit that movie house they've walked by so often and looked at so longingly, with its glittering, shining front, and with awe-filled eyes surveyed the imposing looking doorman with his brass buttons. . . . . Open your heart! . . . . You'll never regret it. . . . . And when you listen to that chorus of laughs, and Aahhs and OO's and Gees coming from the happy, contented youngsters, whose experience here is going to help them through the heat-filled nights of summer, then if your eyes don't fill with tears you should go see a doctor.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Shindler & Weaver Secured Loads Of Publicity On This

Nearly every theatre comes in for a good publicity break on a house opening by asking that the name for it be selected by residents of the town or city wherein the house is located, but it remained for a couple of showmen in Dover, Del., to make a state-wide affair out of it.

Twelve newspapers were used to carry the announcement to the public that the one submitting a name for the new theatre which would meet with the approval of the contest judges would be awarded a cash prize. As was anticipated a large number of "Capitals" and "Capitols" was received but "Capital" was the name chosen. In order to avoid any dissension on the part of any of the contestants a plan was put into effect whereby whenever a "Capital" was submitted it was numbered in the order of its receipt. The lowest number won.

The award was made on the stage of the theatre by the local Mayor, with the management inviting as guests all the contestants who had submitted the "Capital" name. The contest lasted six weeks and many names were sent in. The schools were tied in on the contest and special blanks were given to the children. To secure good-will for the house, a board of judges was recruited which was composed of three representative business men and a representative of the theatre.

A good follow-up on the publicity was obtained by a discussion that started concerning the proper spelling of the word, since most theatres used "Capitol." After a couple of days of newspaper stories, it was finally decided upon that "Capital" would remain that way because of the fact that the dictionary defined it as "of first rank or importance" and because a couple of showmen handled the campaign and the house they felt that the name fit perfectly.

Another good-will stunt that netted the house some profitable publicity was a special demonstration and inspection of the sound equipment which was given to the heads of all the civic organizations, the local teachers, school principals, superintendents of public schools, pastors and city officials with a radius of thirty miles.

The sound equipment company cooperated by furnishing several reels showing the recording and reproduction of sound, together with a representative of the company who lectured on the film, and explained the equipment. After the showing the guests were divided into two groups, in charge of guides, and taken backstage to inspect the screen and horns. From there they went up to the booth and watched film being run through the machines so that they could see clearly the actual workings of the equipment.

They were all very enthusiastic about the show and probably went back and told everybody they came in contact with about the tour and in that manner gave the house some very valuable publicity that ultimated up at the ticket window with the listener laying down his dough. We want to thank Benjamin Shindler, the manager, and G. Park Weaver, his assistant, for passing this along to us and also reveal that they are the men instrumental in putting the stunts across. Let's hear more concerning what you showmen are doing to sell your shows down there Mr. Shindler, so that we can pass it along.

O. G. Finley Used A Stunt That Was Good Biz. Builder

O. G. Finley got the co-operation of eight merchants on a stunt that greatly publicized "Happy Days" playing at the Victory Theatre, Tampa, Fla.

A three-quarter co-operative page of the merchants and theatre announced details of the contest in a streamer across the top of this section.

In the windows of the merchants listed on the co-operative page were pictures of some of the most popular motion picture stars of the day. A ballot was furnished by the Victory theatre or any one of the eight merchants to be filled out by the contestants.

The rules further stated that opposite the merchant's name on the ballot, fill in the name of the star whose picture you find on display in that merchant's window and deposit the ballot completely filled out in the "Happy Day" contest ballot box in the lobby of the Victory Theatre.

Four prizes ranging from a month's pass to a week's pass for two people were awarded to the winners.

The stunt created an unusual amount of interest as was evidenced by the number of answers submitted. And the stunt also caused plenty of talk for the picture's box office success, too.

This was nice work on Finley's part, and it seems to be more than a coincidence that each succeeding report of the Publix managers in Florida adds to our already high estimation of their ability. Incidentally, "O. G.," you might tell Wally Allen we are still waiting for that photo of himself in a bathing suit and we promise not to use it as a "Lobby Laff."

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Meet The Famous Three Musketeers Of Chillicothe, O.

A sixteenth anniversary is certainly something to be proud of. Or at least that's the impression we gather from the corking way the famous "Three Musketeers" of the Majestic Theatre in Chillicothe, Ohio, sold the gala event.

Ducky, Mike and Greenie, the Lemons trio in reality the Myers Brothers and Greenbaum, set to work and what they did was nobody's business. They secured a special sixteen page section of one of the leading dailies, the "Scioto Gazette," which was devoted entirely to the theatre and contained messages of congratulations from every dealer in the town. And to give you an idea of what these pages looked like we are reproducing a couple of them.

In the ones we are showing you can see the special "dedication" page, also the page run by the theatre. One of the other pages will give you an idea of the ad paid for by one of the largest representative electric companies in the southern part of the state. This page is typical of the congratulatory ones run by some of the largest organizations, while the other pages will give you an idea of how everybody engaged in business in the town was anxious to hand the "Three Musketeers" a compliment. So complete a campaign it had never been the town's pleasure to witness before and they certainly sat up and took notice when this special edition came off the press.

The paper, though, was only one phase of the activities of this showmanlike trio. The entire street leading to the theatre was arrayed with pennants and flooded with electric lights. Anyone turning the corner and coming onto the scene would think that a mardi gras was in session. Thousands of electric lights were called into play and at night the street was as brilliantly lighted as the noon day hour.

Souvenirs, bearing the inscription "16th Anniversary, Majestic Theatre, 'See Em' Where You Hear 'Em Best'," were distributed throughout the town in the form of pencils for the men, vanities for the ladies and balloons for the children. And to top off the campaign some of the finest pictures of the year were shown at the house.

Of course, the trio covered almost every other possible angle but if we were to set them down here in detail we are afraid that we'd be devoting a "special edition" to them too. So, we've tried to give you a general idea of the highlights of their work and endeavored to show you what a bunch of real showmen can do when they set out to put anything across.

Just as a personal answer to Duckie's query as to whether Gus Sun is going to resume his Cedar Point outings this year, we want to tell him at this time that we're totally in the dark because from the gang of vaudevillians hanging around the Palace in New York here, waiting for time, it looks as though for a "time" the outing is "out." Incidentally, Ducky, somebody told us that you once played the vaude hoofer who became famous by applying at the radio station for the "Eastern Standard Time," at forty per.

SHOWMANSHIP—PLUS!

By [illegible]
Vancouver, B. C., Canada

Did you ever have the feeling that something was left out of your broadcasting, excellent though it is and not to be improved yet somehow asked for human quality which to us you feel does not contain the right note of appeal? Have you ever read a play, and then seen it acted on the stage by human actors. What a difference! The players bring the whole dead script to life and surround it with life and warmth, with pathos and tears, with laughter and humor.

Well, that was the way I felt about advertising! I felt it needed the human touch, and even if I myself had to be that human touch, it would be better than nothing. So I made a start on radio announcements. I made a few tentative try-outs, and then started in seriously when I booked Warner Bros. "Gold Diggers of Broadway."

I first of all tied up with four music dealers, and procured from them various records, vocal and instrumental, of the songs and music of the play. Then from 12 to 12.30 each day I gave a personal broadcast. I told, in interesting style, something about the play and the players, the fact that it was an all-color production, and other little items which were calculated to interest my listeners, and arouse their curiosity about the picture. This talk was suitably interspersed with music, and naturally there was more music than talk. What I did say I carefully rehearsed, so as to pack the greatest possible amount of information into short snappy sentences.

I did this for the whole week preceding the running of the picture, and in addition to my own talk at noon, also arranged for talks to be made during the day from three other stations in Vancouver. This was continued during the week the picture was being shown at the Dominion theatre.

The results soon started to show. I had a number of letters from my audience of unseen and unknown listeners, many of them congratulating me on the new form of theatre advertising, and telling of their enjoyment of the music. Many of them intimated they would now have to come and see the picture. The week at the box office also showed results, and I had more than a high percentage week, and I largely attribute the results to my radio advertising, and I may say the cost was almost ridiculously small.

I have also used the radio, and am continuing to do so, for a whoopee hour every Saturday night from 12 to 1. For this I use local talent, and with an occasional announcement about the Dominion theatre regarding current and coming attractions, that whoopee hour has become quite popular, considering the competition. I have received far more letters regarding it than ever I expected to do, and all of them have been kind enough in their expressions to encourage me to continue my efforts in this direction.

I use a slogan, "If it's at the Dominion, it must be good." This is used constantly, so that listeners soon begin to associate the whoopee hour with the Dominion theatre, and I feel sure it is helping the business of the house, no doubt helping to tighten up the slack in the box office returns, which might otherwise remain slack and perhaps get slacker.

I hope my ideas for this sort of thing may be of use for other managers, and of course, the idea can always be varied and used in various forms.

WHAT ARE YOU WAITING FOR?

MORE NEW MEMBERS!

BEN B. FRIEDMAN is the manager of the Fortway Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., and if we remember arightly Ben was presented a number of times on our Met Activities pages and it seems to us that he did some corking work in connection with a recent Promotion Month. And for that reason Ben, how about promoting a couple of stamps and some paper and letting us in on your work, because we know that your brother managers on the circuit would like to hear about you too.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

RUDOLPH STRAVITZ manager the Empire Theatre in Rahway, N. J. We have many fine showmen located right across the river from us and it's safe to say that Stravitz is right in line with the very active ones. So listen Rudolph, why don't you shoot us in a photo of yourself and also a line or two setting forth your work and your career in show business to date.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

AL UNGER hardly needs an introduction of this sort since he has already appeared on our pages. But to those new members who are unacquainted with Al we'd like them to know that he is the manager of the Fulton Theatre in Jersey City, N. J. Since everybody must sooner or later crash the Club by going through these portals we felt that it was about time for Al to be represented here. So now let's have some more of your showmanlike work Al, because we're always interested in hearing from you.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

RICHARD REDING is the ass't manager of the Robin Theatre in Warren, Ohio, and comes to the Club nominated by Chuck Copperman. We are a little late in presenting Richard on these pages but we are sure that in view of the many applications we receive daily he will excuse us and send in a photo of himself and a little dope concerning himself so that we can present him more properly.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOSEPH LUNTZ is one of our very active contributors. Joe handles the Valley Stream Theatre in Valley Stream, L. I., and since he has been at that house, the Club pages have carried a number of accounts of his work. In fact, so many that he is already known to a large number of his fellow showmen. This little paragraph is really not necessary to introduce him, but then Joe, you know we can't break an iron clad ruling. So here you are.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

R. C. GLASMANN manages the Orpheum Theatre in Ogden, Utah, for the Publix outfit and since we know a good many showmen in Utah and especially around Salt Lake City and Ogden we feel that Glasmann should turn out some nice work. So what do you say "R. C.," how about letting us in on what you are doing to sell your shows at the Orpheum.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. F. BROCK is the manager of the Tennessee Theatre in Nashville, Tenn. He has been represented on our pages before and though we are a bit late in presenting this little informal "intro" we know that considering the press of affairs at headquarters he will pardon our oversight. We want to thank "W. F." for the interest he is taking in the Club and also state that we are very glad to pass along the fine stunts he engineers.

JOSEPH L. CAUDELL is the manager of the Richmond Theatre in Rockingham, N. C. The Richmond is a pretty little four hundred and fifty seat house and it is our guess that Caudell thinks a lot of it and does many things to boost it up in the town. Are we right, Joseph? If we are, why not give us a little dope on yourself and your work.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

RAY M. HENDRY manages the Capitol Theatre in Salt Lake City, Utah, and with such a big quota of showmen out there in Utah it appears to us as though we are going to pass along some treats to the rest of the Club. For no doubt Ray wants to keep right in line with the rest of the showmen out there. Isn't it so Ray? And when you send in your contribution don't forget your photo.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. C. CARPENTER is the manager of the Park Theatre in Cobleskill, N. Y. Carpenter has been in the show game for some time now and we know that he is certainly working hard to put the house across up in his neck of the woods. And lister "J. C.," the rest of your fellow members would like to know how you are progressing. So don't keep us in the dark concerning your activities but sit down and drop us a couple of pages once in a while.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

M. T. VARNELLE is the manager of the Capitol Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., and is another showman to be added to our rapidly swelling roll of live-wires from this district. With so many of your brother managers on the Fox Met chain lining up in the Club "M. T." we've got an idea that competition is going to be pretty strong and we hope to find you right out in front.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CLEMENT PERRY manages the Marcy Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., for the Fox Met chain of houses. There's been some good examples of work displayed around the Marcy in the past and from what we have been hearing at Club headquarters it is continuing to be displayed. Keep us posted on what you are doing Clement so that we can let the rest of the world in on any new stunt that is pulled at your house.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

IRVING LEFF is the manager of the Ambassador Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y., and comes to the Club proposerd by Lou Smith. Seeing that Lou is sponser for Leff that is about all the recommendation we need concerning his ability. However, Irving, we would like to pass along your picture and a little dope concerning yourself. So when you give us news of your show merchandising don't forget our request.

THE Club is anxious to publish photographs of every member and would, therefore, appreciate receiving as many as possible for use in future issues of the Club columns. If you have not already done so, PLEASE send us your own photo at once. Thank you.

SOUND and COLOR

—with ECONOMY

SONOCHROME expresses every mood of the picture . . . or its dominant tone . . . or its prevailing lighting . . . by means of sixteen delicate tints. And these tints are so adjusted that they give faithful reproduction of sound. Thus, Sonochrome supplies two features of the modern motion picture...sound and color . . . at the cost of ordinary black-and-white.

¶ "Hello, Mr. Exheebitor. I want to thank you veree much for the nice way you have received my first two American picturrs—'INNOCENTS OF PAREE' and 'THE LOVE PARADE.' I hope that they made a great deal of monee for you. Yes. ¶ Now I have a picturr which I know you will like even more—'THE BEEG POND.' ¶ I will tell you why: In the first place, the storee of 'THE BEEG POND' takes place almost entirelee in America. It is a moderrn, up-to-date storee. The people in it are all—what you know—veree regularr. I have the role of a beeg American beezness man. Also I make love to a veree charrming American girrl—Mees Claudette Colberrt. Eemagine—being paid to make love to her! You saw her in 'The Lady Lies' and 'Young Man of Manhattan'—you see what I mean. ¶ Yes, I sing some songs. You have probably hearrd them alreadee on the radio—'You Brought a New Kind of Love' and 'Loving in the Moonlight'. Veree popular songs. ¶ 'THE BEEG POND' is a bright, funnee, fast moving romance. I am surre that your people will enjoy it. It is doing a nice beezness where it is playing. ¶ I hope that you will call up Mr. PARAMOUNT and ask him for 'THE BEEG POND'. Thank you veree much."

Swing High is a Whiz Bang!

By

Arthur James

NOT very long ago we predicted good pictures for the new season and we took care to indicate that they would not all come from one company or one group. It is, therefore, with the highest satisfaction that we call attention this morning to "Swing High", Pathé's dramatic musical and all talking circus production with some 18 stars in the cast and with an appeal of the most absorbing entertainment for the masses and the classes everywhere that we have encountered this season.

WITH an old fashioned durable melodramatic plot, with circus atmosphere, circus color, with music of the engaging circus type, with panoply and palpitating performance—you see, we are already in the circus—"Swing High" swings along.

THERE is enough of comedy, there is splendid melodrama, tense, exciting and absorbing, and "Swing High" is our notion of a big bang-up box office satisfier. And—it's good for children from six to sixty, something the picture business needs badly, right now.

PATHÉ makes good on the prophet's prediction and you can spell the word prophet either way.

PATHÉ

The Greatest Novelty and Money Maker of the Age

MOVIE-OF-U

UNLIMITED OPPORTUNITIES FOR TREMENDOUS PROFITS AND STEADY INCOME

A DELUGE OF QUARTERS AS GREAT AND AS ENDLESS AS NIAGARA FALLS

A MONEY MAKING MACHINE

This amazing novelty makes it possible to take different moving pictures of yourself, or yourself and friends, put them in one small screen frame, then animate them all by the pressure of a finger tip.

Imagine what this means! A moving picture with all the vividness, realism and movement of the living person—eyes, mouth, hands and body move just as they do in life—a moving picture marvel that does everything but talk. A moving picture, a screen and projection machine, all in one. That is what you hand the public for a quarter.

EVERYONE MAKES THEIR OWN SCREEN TESTS

The "MOVIE-OF-YOU" cabinet-machine enables anyone to get a screen test. The thousands of potential Chaplins, Bows, Fairbanks, Barrymores, Pickfords, Garbos, Jolsons, Swansons, Lloyds and Talmadges will come crowding to the "MOVIE-OF-U" to learn how they register and what their possibilities are for the films.

$90 IN ONE HOUR

It requires only ten seconds to make the movie of the individual or individuals and the whole series is completed in six minutes.

"MOVIE-OF-YOU" cranks out 360 pictures in one hour. (The action is almost entirely automatic.) At a quarter each, the machine's earning power is $90 for every hour you have it in operation.

In six minutes you have a finished moving picture of yourself, developed, completed, in a frame 2⅜ x 4 inches to take home with you. Unquestionably, this is the greatest money-maker of all time. For amusement parks, for fairs and dance palaces, steamships, for summer resorts, for all-year-around business in any community, the "MOVIE-OF-U" machine will prove a gold mine.

And what an opportunity for enterprising proprietors of motion picture houses! At last, your lobby can earn money—big money—through the use of one of these cabinet camera machines. Your lobby will take on new interest, new life. The "MOVIE-OF-U" will be as big an attraction as the Feature Picture you are playing.

All you need is the machine and an attendant, then get ready for the profit deluge.

Our demonstration studio in operation is located in the Eltinge Theatre Building. Territorial rights for exclusive sales agencies are now available. Act fast and reap the reward. It will be the best business move you have ever made!

A prominent screen star but it could be you.

The American public is motion picture mad. There are 120,000,000 people in this country and 70% of them believe that they could make good on the screen if they were given a chance. You are going to make it possible for them to give themselves screen tests the same as they would get at any one of the gigantic studios in Hollywood. They won't want just one — they'll repeat again and again. Each one will mean a quarter to you and as the quarters pile up they turn into dollars and the dollars into hundreds.

"JOURNEY'S END" WITHOUT BENEFIT OF HOLLYWOOD

THE CRITICS GIVE THANKS that "Journey's End" is not Hollywood.

It is by Hollywood, but not of Hollywood.

"It would have been so easy," says Richard Watts, Jr., in the New York Herald Tribune, for the cinema business men to toss aside some of the austerities of the original text and substitute their quota of the shoddy qualities that are supposed to come under the head of box-office."

But the screen version of the Great War play emerges almost without flaws, and leaves only the fundamental question of whether you prefer your voices straight or screened. Martin Dickstein of the Brooklyn Eagle finds the film version the better exhibition. "In this case the audible screen convincingly demonstrates that as a dramatic medium it is superior to the stage." The reason:

"For the major part the talking film interpretation of 'Journey's End' does follow the original production faithfully enough, it is true, but it is in those passages which could not be depicted within the limits of a stage that the film achieves its most satisfying moments.

"Thus in the climactic scenes, which picture the raiding party stealthily making its way across No Man's Land (the episode which was left to the imagination in the stage production), 'Journey's End' offers you one of the most dramatic bits of action that the theater has ever provided."

The original "Journey's End" has celebrated a full season run on the New York stage, and over that in has been written about it, in these pages and elsewhere, here is its story in brief:

"'Journey's End' tells about that chapter in the war which concerned a group of British officers who made their headquarters in a dugout up near the front line in 1918.

"Perhaps you needn't be told again about the battle-hardened company commander, Captain Stanhope, who was content to go on fighting so long as he had plenty of whisky to keep up his courage.

"And then, you may remember, a new second lieutenant came up to the line to join Stanhope's company, and this Lieutenant Raleigh was the brother of the captain's sweetheart back in England. Stanhope's one consuming fear was that Raleigh would write home and tell his sister that the man she loved was not the clean-living fellow she had known before the war, but a swearing, nerves-shattered drunkard.

"And so Captain Stanhope developed a keen resentment toward his junior officer, an attitude which was never quite overcome until young Raleigh was fatally wounded on the morning of the big attack."

The screen version was directed by James Whale, who was also responsible for the New York and London productions. Mordaunt Hall gives in the New York Times the story of the hurry to Hollywood of London's leading man:

"A good idea of the pains taken to make 'Journey's End' a distinguished work is to be gained from the fact that when everything was ready for the film, Mr. Whale, after looking at many players, insisted on having Colin Clive, who was playing Captain Stanhope in the London stage production, impersonate the leading character in the film.

Maurice Browne, the London stage producer, granted permission for Mr. Clive to go to Hollywood to act in the talking picture.

THE film version of "Journey's End" is a meticulously faithful reproduction of the successful stage play, for which Heaven and Dr rector James Whale (who directed the stage production) be praised. Frankly, this reviewer expected that some stupid motion picture official would step in and insist that the war angle of the story be given the attention that could not be afforded on the stage. Such a thing would have been disastrous. The story is primarily a study of the re tions of a gal- lant group of Englishmen stationed in a front line dug- out and the valiant efforts of these men to behave like hu man beings un der the trying conditions o war, create at atmosphere o stark dram that

THE screen version follows the book of the play closely. The only added scenes are those provided by the scope of the movies and they, too, and justified both by their own artistic success. These are scenes of the trenches outside the dugout, interpo- lated views of the front, of lines of sand- bags and hideous mud-drenched pas- sages, as effective and realistic as any shown anywhere on the screen. No English rose gardens are presented, though skeptics had expected them. The girl and the somewhat perfunctory romance of the play are omitted, of course, and the

as a talking picture is a sensitive, faithful and brilliant photograph of a great War play. The story is a pattern loosely and skillfully woven around the lives and char- acters of certain British officers in a front line sector—their amusements, memories, meals, relations to each other—all unified by the abstract presence of a power bent on destroying them, and which does in the end destroy them. These soldiers are heroic, but with a kind of heroism never before depicted on the screen—a makeshift heroism, concocted in despair as the best way to behave in circumstances which are absurd, insane, horrible. Captain Stan- hope is played by Colin Clive, who has the part in the stage Journey's End in London; the rest of the excellent cast was recruited in Hollywood. Last shot: the scene darker, the shelling outside harder, the only sign of life in the dugout a guttering candle which slowly goes out.

Salesmen To Be Retained But Study of Minimum Account Problem to Continue

He's Good, Too

Mark Hellinger sat with "Bugs" Baer the other night in a cabaret. And, to hear Mark tell it, they watched "the master of ceremonies summon different celebrities to the floor. He finally chose one actor, clapped his hands vigorously and announced him as 'the new Al Jolson.'

"The actor began to sing. He was suffering from a cold and his voice sounded badly. 'Bugs' nudged me.

"'Who is that guy?' he asked.

"'That,' I replied, 'is a gentleman who was announced as the new Al Jolson.'

"'Bugs' nodded wearily.

"'For my money,' he murmured 'let's have the old one half soled and heeled.'"

RKO May Go It Alone in England And Continent

Final decision is in the offing, but indications point strongly to opening of RKO's own exchanges in Great Britain and the Continent. For a number of years, the company has been releasing in England via Ideal Films, Ltd., a subsidiary company of Gaumont British.

Earl Kramer, formerly with Universal and for some months in the RKO sales department, will represent the organization abroad if the move is finally determined upon. RKO, it is understood, is being influenced by the belief that the company has now reached the status where it must operate its own organization throughout the world.

Plan to Drop Sales Forces, Broached Last Year, Is Abandoned

While study of the sales problem presented by "minimum" accounts is being continued, advent of the convention season this year finds plans for dropping salesmen abandoned by distributors. Although the problem is by no means solved, the plan to substitute sales forces with a mail order system of operation is definitely out.

Last year, a number of meetings were held to discuss the problem. Several companies, it is stated, were ready to go to bat in the matter of discontinuing service to unprofitable accounts. There was no desire to shut off service to the little fellow, but rather an attempt to circumvent an unsound economic situation.

Sales heads at the time are understood to have contended that the $7.50 and $10 accounts could not be served at a profit and to have made the point that only through development of a mail order business, could a remedy for the situation be found.

"U" Executives Blocked Plan

Circuits, it was contended, furnish the bulk of the revenue for pictures to a degree that makes retention of salesmen unfeasible, so the discussion went, and accordingly the mail order idea was advanced as a way out of the present situation.

R. H. Cochrane, vice president, and Lou B. Metzger, general manager, of Universal, took the lead in opposing any cutting down of sales forces in favor of the mail order proposition.

With 60 to 80 per cent the range in grosses obtained by distributors via chain bookings closed in New York, several distributors today are minimizing more and more the revenue rolled up from small town accounts. Circuit buying has trimmed distributors' sales overhead considerably and, while the percentage in practically all instances is lower than ever before, it is believed in some circles that this item of expense could be trimmed further were it not for the fact that serving small towns is invariably more expensive than the rental taken from them.

After Record Bookings

One of the purposes in making a determined play for small towners is the distributor's desire to roll up as many accounts as possible. In financing, experience has proven that it carries weight with the underwriters to be able to make the statement that some pictures have played to 10,000 accounts, regardless of the fact that some distributors generally deny the economics of small town selling.

The Big Cat

An extra gal called up a Mrs. Rose, head of a casting department, and the repartee went something like this, to hear Walter Winchell tell it:

"Oh, Mrs. Rose, have you anything for me today?"

"NO!" was the reply.

"But, Mrs. Rose, do you think you will have anything for me this week?"

"NO!"

"But, Mrs. Rose, you never have anything for me!"

"Oh, don't bother me! ! ! "

"Very well. Goodbye, Mrs. Rosenberg."

Norma to Star in One a Year; Coast Wondering

Hollywood—Norma Talmadge, long one of the bulwarks of the United Artists program, will make only one picture a year with the star taking lengthy vacations between productions, according to an inside report which is creating plenty of gossip among those who have heard it. Her present talker, a version of "Du Barry," is nearly completed.

With Miss Talmadge going to the one-a-year schedule, United Artists will probably replace her missing releases with three starring productions with Joan Bennett, who has just signed a new long term star contract with U. New Contract for Shearer

Hollywood—M-G-M is planning to sign Norma Shearer on a contract calling for two starring pictures yearly. These would be designed as specials with no more of the program variety to be made by the star. Miss Shearer would get $150,000 per picture, it is stated.

Vol. XLI NEW YORK CITY, MAY 17, 1930 No. 20

UP FRONT AND ON THE FIRING LINE

IT was twenty degrees below zero. Dog weather, snow swirling, wind screeching on high. Up country there was work to be done. Pictures had to be sold. Accounts had to be called upon. Old Mother Nature was doing her best to slow down the machinery, but the wheels of business had to go on. T'was up to the salesman to do his stuff.

So out came the car. The ice was knocked off the tank, the gas dumped in and the brakes tested. The windshield was frozen so completely it was opaque. But the job was calling and delays were costly. Chilly fingers dug into a pocket, fished out a dime and picked a spot over the wheel. Then the hunt for a knife to whittle out as much glass as that thin dime covered. That accomplished and a line of vision established, the salesman was off.

Through the Line

How he got through, nobody has been able to figure to this day. Yet the incident happened some time ago. But he did. Through snow banks, that protesting car groaned and the groans of the machine were matched one for one by the fellow who did the driving. Tough lines, you bet. But the job went through to its finish.

This is just the yarn—one of many—of a nameless film salesman. Day by day, or rather night by night, these men on the firing line stand at their posts. Sleeping in jerkwater town hotels, traveling over terrible road beds on rattling trains, giving up many of the comforts of ordinary existence, they are writing a romantic and brilliant, but always unsung, chapter in the history of this business.

Mergers and the Future

You hear nothing of these knights of the road. Yet it is from their ranks that many of the leaders of the industry have sprung. The Kents, the Graingers, the Feists, the Schnitzers, the Reismans clear through the executive line-up have served the apprenticeship. It's all behind them now, but the grief and the hardships were theirs to fight against. They know.

Today the chamelon-like drift of the business has precipitated a series of mergers, one more gigantic than the other. In the wake of these amalgamations—some arrived, others on the way—has come speculation over the status of the salesman. Circuit after circuit is linked up in ever-growing chains. Sales executives, comfortably ensconced behind their desks in New York, are now writing bulk business covering theatres all over the nation without leaving the city to do so. It may be sixty percent of the domestic gross. Some estimates reach as high as eighty. Accept the high figures, if you are so inclined.

That Vital Twenty Per Cent

That remaining twenty percent, piled up in $7.50 or $15 or $75 bookings week by week throughout the year is, nevertheless, vital to the economic survival of every distributor in the business for it represents the profit on the balance sheet.

Sales managers know it. They know, too, who is bringing in the money that makes dividend checks possible. You can't get away from the facts.

The man on the firing line is doing the work. Hustled, bustled and shoved by his sales manager in New York, but indubitably and beyond all argument the one factor that rates the credit.

The Outpost of the Business

The salesman is indispensable. His field may be curtailed by consolidations, but his spot, as an industry factor, is unshakeable.

He is the industry's outpost, the man on the front line contacting with the public via the exhibitor. He can't be replaced, because he delivers a service in dollars and cents that no other known force in the industry can supply.

Lilyan Tashman, in New York for a pleasure trip, is sporting a black eye, sustained when she fainted after hearing some bad news. That puts a crimp into her vacation trip, for about the time the shiner disappears she'll have to return to the Coast to resume work.

Speculate Over Disposition of Comerford Allies

With the 71 theatres completely owned by the Comerford chain now part of the Paramount Publix holdings, speculation is rife over what will happen to an approximately equal number of houses in which Mike Comerford has a partnership interest.

Total holdings of the chain embrace 157 theatres about half of which have gone over to Publix. Disposition of the others depends largely on the decisions reached by partners themselves.

For instance, in Binghamton, N. Y., Dave Cohen and Ned Kornblite are jointly interested with Comerford in local exhibition. Bernstein Bros. are the Comerford allies in Elmira; W. H. Benton in Saratoga Springs; Bill Dillon in Ithaca and Rome, and Julius Friedman in Forest City, Pa.

William Roberts and Andrew Hourigan have considerable holdings in towns adjacent to Wilkes-Barre, and in these Comerford has an interest. In and around Sunbury, Pa., Jesse Blanchard runs a number of houses in association with the Comerford interests. F. Dean Rundell, operating in Waverly and six Pennsylvania towns, is another of the major Comerford partners.

Publix Providence Plans Being Awaited After Deal

Providence—With the Strand almost ready to open after six weeks of darkness, theatre men are wondering just what Publix intends to do here. Following the sale of the Comerford-owned houses in Pennsylvania, rumor spread that the Fay chain would be annexed by Paramount Publix, which recently bought the Strand.

Edward M. Fay, who controls six theatres in Providence, told the newspapers that he had heard the stories of negotiations, but knew nothing definite of the plans, if any.

Syracuse Speculates on Effect of Comerford Deal

Syracuse—Local effect of the Comerford-Paramount Publix deal is being awaited with interest here. The Kallet chain, a subsidiary of the Comerford circuit, operates the Regent and Avon here. Closing of the deal means that Paramount has gotten the jump on Radio-Keith-Orpheum in plans for invasion of the subsequent run field.

Independents Get Better Break Under Clearance Agreement Drafted

Los Angeles—With trial scheduled for June 17 of the government's criminal conspiracy case against West Coast Theatres, its officials and several distributors, growing out of alleged "freeze-out" of independent exhibitors, through excessive protection, steps are being taken to adjust the situation.

In line with this plan, new zoning and clearance schedule for southern California is practically set, C. C. Pettijohn of the Hays office having made a special trip here for the purpose. The new schedules were drafted by Fox West Coast Theatres, the Film Board, the M. P. T. O. of southern California and individual independent exhibitors.

A permanent zoning committee is being established, representing the conferees to rearrange future zonings due to new theatres, closings and other changes, so that the schedule will be flexible for a long time.

Independents receive a better deal under the new schedules than they ever had before. The conference now is working on zoning the balance of the territory.

Free from Politics

The meetings here were free from politics and neither the national exhibitor organization situation or the 5-5-5 conferences were brought into the discussions.

There is considerable interest throughout the industry in the forthcoming conspiracy trial. Jail terms loom for defendants if convicted.

The action is based in part on alleged agreement of distributors to refuse to serve theatres charging ten cents admission. Harold B. Franklin, Fox West Coast chief, has stated that he welcomes the government action in order to settle the legality of protection.

Jack White, Out In Educ'l Row, To Join "U"

Hollywood—Jack White, producer, who has been associated with Educational for a number of years, will be absent from the company's roster next year, it is understood. White, about three months ago, went to New York to negotiate a settlement of his contract with Educational, it is said, threatening suit unless the company bought up his contract which had then but a few months to run. He received a cash settlement, it is said. The row started over production policy, so the story goes, Educational wanting White to make a certain type of comedy, and the producer insisting that he do things his way. White now is in Europe and, it is said, will join Universal upon his return.

Effective July 1

Hollywood—Production code of ethics, drafted under auspices of Will H. Hays, became effective March 31. The first pictures under the plan will be released around July 1.

Fox-Paramount To Battle for Hold in N. W.

Seattle—The stage is set for a keen building race this year between Fox West Coast and Paramount Publix, which have been waging a keen fight in key cities along the Coast.

Fox West Coast is planning an undetermined number of Washington theatres and plans to build or acquire ten in Oregon alone. Montana, Idaho and California also are to get new theatres in the circuit's big expansion.

Paramount intends to build 12 theatres during the next year in the Pacific Northwest, according to Robert Blair, Northwest division manager of the circuit. He made this announcement in hitting the report that Jensen & Von Herberg of this city are to take over operation of the company's theatres in Washington, Oregon and Idaho. J. & V. were the dominant exhibitors in this territory, until sale of their holding to North American Theatres, which subsequently sold them to West Coast.

25 W.C. Houses Called For This Year by Warners

Hollywood—Building or purchase of six new theatres, with 25 more to be added to the Coast chain before the end of the year, are called for in expansion plan of Warners, states M. A. Silver, general manager of the Coast circuit. The program, he says, will involve $10,000,000.

Six sites are under consideration at present, with a number of others to be sought by company scouts.

Three More Bought

Warners has acquired the Siskind chain at Lawrence, Mass. This circuit is composed of three large houses, the Empire, seating 2,400, the Broadway, seating 2,000, and the Palace, seating 1,700. Renovations, involving an expenditure of $250,000, will be made.

British Merger Seen as Blocked by Filmcraft

London—British Filmcraft probably will prove the hitch in proposed merger with British Screen Prod. and International Talking Prod., as underwriters of the firm object to the deal.

The Insiders' Outlook

THE struggle is still on. Suggested—or ordered, more properly—by the Hays association, the committee handling the proposed code on advertising is still manfully on the job of attempting to evolve the "do's and don'ts" which will control the future direction in which advertising copy is destined to travel.

To date, there has been some talk, most of it in generalities. There are those who maintain the first precepts under the new order have been set down in paper. There are others who aren't so sanguine over progress made to date. But nobody is doing any talking, the order not to do so being that strict.

The boys will develop a code. No question about that, since all choice has been removed from the matter. In the meantime, the spot on the flywheel seems to be growing.

In Milwaukee, some smart egg turned out copy for "Ladies of Leisure" that induced more than a flurry of excitement. The picture ran afoul of the censors in Chicago so this unknown thought it clever to play up the fact that Milwaukeeans would see it intact. And so advertised. The kick-back carried was as gentle as a mule's.

Anyway, to get back to the code. The text is a dark secret. There's no text yet as a matter of fact, but when it is written, approved and put into actual practice, you might look for some evasively worded clauses that will give the gang all the latitude it thinks it needs.

Headaches

Heap big trouble is these days. Those important overseas markets are responsible for large-sized headaches in executive offices, East and West. Never knew so many expert production and foreign managers ready to admit they didn't know on whose toes they were treading.

The course of American-made foreign language talkers hasn't been at all encouraging. As a result, the plan to make 'em in Hollywood has been socked midships or thereabouts. The popular impression prevailing today is that producers will have to manufacture in the country of distribution, but a number believe there isn't enough money in the venture to make the effort worthwhile.

On the other hand one of the ironies of an ironic situation is the danger confronting the well-advertised, highly popularized American star who faces a complete and perfect wash-up abroad. Just what American damage that will do to American grosses on the other side is problematical, but the worry over the situation is very much present.

If foreign countries want talkers—and they seem to be veering in that direction rapidly—American "names" are out of the running except in sporadic cases. It follows that German, French, Italian, Spanish and other players will have to be developed to suit the tastes of those nationalities. During the development period, what's going to happen to foreign box-offices and American rentals? The answer is: plenty.

C. C. P. Silent

Hollywood — C. C. Pettijohn has no comment to make on the controversy growing out of printed reports concerning leaders of Allied States Ass'n, who are threatening to terminate the 5-5-5 conferences. "The tempest in a teapot" caused by the publication of comment credited to "a Haysite," that Al Steffes wants Publix to give him a theatre, and that H. M. Richey is connected with an "audacious" stock selling scheme, is being regarded by the Allied heads as inspired by the Hays organization, who have called upon the association for repudiation of the statement, or proof of the charges.

Funny Twists

Some weeks ago, a certain executive—nameless for this narrative—tried, by dint of much persuasion and clever ground work, to inject himself into a company picture where he wasn't wanted. It didn't make much difference to him. He insisted and finally thought he pulled the trick by planting a fake yarn through a third party who broadcast it in spots where he figured it would do the most good. The selection, it is admitted in due modesty that becomes youth, was Empeenews.

The yarn was published, but it didn't take The Insiders long to discover that the truth had been stretched beyond recognition. Thereupon, this executive—he's had loads of headline space since the day he walked into the industry—caught plenty in this very column. He rated—and got—plenty of raking over live coals.

Now here's the laugh:

The original story so suited his purpose that he secured twenty-five copies, planted them in banking circles that counted and waited for the invitation he was seeking, but which didn't come. But the bankers, it is a matter of record, found The News so interesting that they subscribed. You see, they wanted to keep in touch with the picture business and with us, they agreed that reading M. P. N. was a swell way to do it.

Later when The News began to expose some of the inside transactions for which this smart executive was responsible, these self-same bankers began to investigate, discovered a few choice tidbits they couldn't countenance and handed our executive friend his walking papers.

72 Hours Straight

Winnie Sheehan's seemingly permanent New York residence has been broken up and the new generalissimo at Fox is en route to the coast. At the minute, he is vacationing in the Mid-West and has just discovered how much he needed sleep. It seems Winnie dozed a few days ago and before he knew what had happened something like 72 hours had slipped by.

Sheehan's battle during the last five months or more has been terrific. No sleep, unending conferences and, until recently, the spectre of years of lost effort dangling before him. That, however, is behind him and the future holds much.

The Clarke Slant

While this chatter concerns the revamped Fox outfit, it is well to add to the record how Harley L. Clarke feels about motion pictures. The Fox president is a utilities man by background and experience. He regards motion pictures in the same light. That, plus the fact that he is extremely partial to mergers. Tuck these bits of information away in your mental encyclopedia. They may help to explain what is to come.

Universal, Once Bidder for Theatre Power, Out of Exhibition by Fall

War vs. Chain Stores

"A new battle on evolution is raging in the South," states The Nation. "This time, however, the issue is not religious but economic; it has to do with the theory of the economics of distribution," declares this publication.

"The battle, which is being waged on many fronts, is between the small retailer, taking the fundamentalist position, against the chain store, an exponent of modernism in distribution. Within the past few months the immediate fight has been crystallized by one crusader, W. K. Henderson of Shreveport, Louisiana, who has sallied forth through his radio station KWKH to give battle to the chain-store devil and to the 'evil hosts in Wall Street.' The thing, however, has been a long time in coming and can be traced back to the vast economic revolution that began in this country ten or fifteen years ago."

Tiffany to Make Only 26-30; Sales Meet Postponed

Tiffany is to have between 26 and 30 pictures on its new year's program. The definite number has not been decided, nor has any date been selected for the company's sales convention.

Under terms of its five-year franchise, Tiffany must deliver a minimum of 26 pictures and a maximum of 52. However, it is understood there is little likelihood of more than 30 pictures being produced.

The company's sales convention probably will be postponed several weeks, due to decide to concentrate on sales of "Journey's End."

Tiffany Making Talkers Abroad; Buys Paris Firm

Tiffany has completed plans for production of multi-lingual talkers in Europe in French, German and Spanish. The company is buying the Wilton-Tiffany-Brockliss firm at Paris and will either buy or build a studio in France. The firm also plans to produce in Germany, and already has made German versions of "The Lost Zeppelin" and "Mamba." French and Spanish versions of "Mid-Stream" are to be made. The Wilton-Tiffany-Brockliss deal will give Tiffany the Capucines theatre as a Paris first run outlet.

M-G-M—Joan Crawford Jam Denied on Coast

Hollywood—There is no trouble between Joan Crawford and M-G-M as reported, with relations declared very amicable. A reported temperamental outburst by the star some time ago was settled speedily.

Major Interests Sold, Next Come Partnership Houses 150-160 Strong

With its major theatre operations disposed of to other interests principally Paramount and Warners, Universal's partnership interests in the 150 to 160 houses now tied in with the company will be cleaned up by October. At that time, Universal will have withdrawn completely from the exhibition field.

Chief among the remaining holdings are an approximately fifty per cent interest in the Griffith Bros. chain, which operates principally in Oklahoma, and about a twenty-five per cent interest in the Schine chain, now known as the Upper New York State division of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc.

It was several years ago that Universal Chain Theatres, Inc., was organized. From the inception of the company, acquisition in the theatre field moved along at a rapid gait. When the race for theatre dominance became more acute, the inside story has it, Universal figured it a better business policy to turn back its holdings to realize financial returns on realty values and leaseholds.

Golf Ducats, Tea, Fortune Tellers, New B. O. Lures

Seattle—Local downtown film houses are "pulling plenty of stunts" to get business, particularly at matinees. Jensen & Von Herberg at the Liberty is employing a fortune teller to tell patrons' "past-present-future" without cost during the day, and serving free tea and cakes to ladies between 3 P. M. and 5 P. M. daily, all for the admission price of 25 cents. At the Seattle Paramount, another fortune teller is giving patrons the lowdown on themselves and others, and the theatre also gives golf tickets that are good on a local miniature course. John Danz, at his Columbia, is content merely to employ a fortune teller. His patrons must look elsewhere for golf instruction or refreshments.

Wide Film on New Warner Lineup; Won't Make Many

Hollywood—The Warners are figuring on a limited number of pictures on the 1930-1931 schedule on wide film. Decision will probably be made shortly after Jack Warner has an opportunity to discuss the matter with Harry M. Warner in New York. Jack leaves in a few days.

Yes, Mr. Brown

Hiram S. Brown, by defeating James H. Turner in the final round in the first flight of the R-K-O golf tournament, was awarded the company championship trophy. Forty contestants divided into five flights in the tourney.

The New Blah-Blah Racket

SOUND TRAILER

"The George Spitzmore production, 'The Trial of Minnie Schmaltz,' a Blox Goofytone Monotone picture, presents Mamie Snooks in the finest role of her entire career. Miss Snooks in the part of Minnie Schmaltz, the girl who murdered the millionaire, Anton Sugarpoppa, because she didn't know the gun was loaded, will bring tears to your eyes as she tells the sad story of her life of degradation. And now I present Miss Snooks—

"Hello, folks! Say, Jimmy, it was awfully nice of you to say that about me. And say, folks, this is what I think about Jimmy—he plays opposite me in this picture, you know—I think he's the best actor ever. And, honest, I know you'll like 'The Trial of Minnie Schmaltz'—it's one hundred per cent talking all-star Blox Goofytone Monotone production—"

Hell Pops and K. C. "Pan" Goes Back to 4 Bits

Kansas City—After three weeks at 25 cents top, the Pantages here has hiked its admission to 50 cents again. The exact reason for restoring the 50 cents scale is problematical, although Louis Charninsky, manager, declares it is because future bookings are too big to warrant the smaller prices.

However, there seems to be three sides to the story. With the Pan showing first run pictures at 25 cents and the same features bought for the suburbans to be shown at 40 cents, neighborhood operators began to protest to the exchanges. M. B. Shanberg, who heads 'The Friendly Theatres," a group of de luxe neighborhood houses, was one of the principals who objected to the Pantages policy. Whether or not Shanberg brought any pressure to bear on the matter is not known but something caused Charninsky to revert to 50 cents top rather suddenly. When asked if the Midland circuit (Shanberg) had anything to do with the Pantages shifting policy, the Midland office said: "We don't know a thing about it."

Deny Service Refused

It had been reported that several exchanges refused to sell Charninsky pictures at the low price scale. But in each instance the exchange manager, when asked about it, gave the same answer: "I don't know a thing about it."

But Charninsky admits the 25-cent cut in scale caused plenty of "hell to pop" among exchanges and suburban managements. The Pan went back to 50 cents top last Thursday with no complaints from the regular patrons. In fact, the first few days of the old scale has given the house capacity business. Feature is "The Arizona Kid."

U. S. in "Biggest Anti-Trust Move," Hits at Sound Licensing Agreements

Alleges in Suit That Patent Pool Is Monopoly of Radio Industry

Washington—Cross-licensing agreements on sound film patents and equipment between RCA, General Electric, Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., RCA-Photophone, RCA-Victor, RCA-Radiotron, American Telephone & Telegraph, Western Electric, General Motors and General Motors Radiola will be tested for their legality in the anti-trust action brought against these firms by the Department of Justice.

The action, it is declared by opponents of the alleged monopoly, is "the biggest anti-trust proceeding ever begun by the Government." It is the direct outgrowth of the deal recently announced by which General Electric and Westinghouse are to acquire control of RCA in exchange for patent rights.

This patent pool, it is alleged in the suit filed at Wilmington, Del., gives the defendant firms joint control over the radio industry and its developments, killing outside competition.

The proposed reorganization of General Electric, Westinghouse and RCA, it is alleged, is a set-up that "would have the effect of perpetuating the control already obtained by the defendants."

"The patent arrangements originally made between several of the defendants have been steadily increased in number and enlarged in scope until the defendants now practically have control of radio business and its development. This control has been brought about by a novel method of cross-licensing patents.

Legality Questioned

"The suit is concerned chiefly with the legality of these patent arrangements. The petition filed alleges that the defendants, most of whom are competitors, by issuing patent licenses to one another, have created a patent combination or pool through which they exercise joint control over the radio industry and that competition among them has ceased, and that no outsider can obtain a license except on terms jointly prescribed by the chief defendants.

"The petition also alleges that the proposed reorganization recently submitted to stockholders of Radio Corporation would have the effect of perpetuating the control already obtained by the defendants.

"The defendants, on the other hand, have earnestly contended that they are doing nothing more than they are authorized to do under the patent laws.

"The situation is an intricate one, and it is desirable that these vexed questions be settled in the courts."

Flothow Joins Rogell

Rudolph Flothow, for five years with Tiffany Prod. in an executive capacity, has become vice-president of Al Rogell Prod.

Climaxes Lengthy Probe

Washington—Institution of anti-trust proceedings against General Electric, American Telephone & Telegraph, Westinghouse and others, climaxes years of investigation by the Dept. of Justice, the Federal Trade Commission and by Congress. Filing of the suit has been pending for some time, but the matter was precipitated by action of RCA stockholders in approving proposed exchange of control of RCA for patent rights owned by General Electric and Westinghouse. Even before this action, there was considerable likelihood that RCA's activities were due for litigation.

Young Welcomes Suit; Wants to Shun Politics

Anti-trust suit brought by the government against RCA, General Electric, Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co. and other firms is welcomed, according to Owen D. Young, chairman of the executive committee of RCA, because the companies prefer to have the questions involved settled "out of politics."

"The Radio Corporation of America welcomes the suit of the Government of the United States to test the validity of its organization, which has now existed for more than ten years, and in every step of which the Government has been advised," he declared.

"In 1919, when the company was organized, no one concern in the country had the necessary patents to enable it to develop the radio art and create a business. Each of several had some, and each could block the other. The purpose of the organization of the Radio Corporation was to release the art by grouping patents enough in one place so as to enable sending stations to be created and receiving sets to be built. That this was accomplished is shown by the rapid development of the radio business.

"In order to promote competition in the art and in the business, and to avoid patent litigation which would have prevented development, licenses have been issued to 34

Decisive Victory

Washington—"A decisive victory for the independent industry" is the description given the government's anti-trust action against the alleged radio monopoly by Oswald F. Schuette, executive secretary of the Radio Protective Ass'n. He says the action follows three years of activity by the association.

"This suit should mark the end of the reign of terror by which the Radio corporation and its affiliated companies have sought to monopolize the radio," he said.

Fox, Nathanson To Buck Para. In Secret Deal?

Toronto—Battle for control of Famous Players Canadian Corp. was increasing in intensity this week following reports that a "mysterious syndicate" is making bids for sites in various cities of the Dominion. The proposals are believed being made by representatives of Fox and N. L. Nathanson, former managing director of the Canadian firm, who resigned when the trustees blocked his proposal to sell the circuit to Gaumont British. One of the bids is for the Church St. site on St. Catherine St., Montreal, in connection with a project asserted to involve $4,000,000.

Halsey, Stuart has offered a large block of Fox Film gold notes on the Canadian exchange, the first time any Fox securities have been offered to Canadian investors.

Strong sentiment, pro and con, on the Paramount Publix offer to trade four shares for every five of Famous has been stirred throughout the Dominion, in preparation for the special stockholders' meeting, slated to be held on Thursday. During the week, the Famous Players Canadian Shareholders' Protection Ass'n, formed to block the Paramount deal, reported considerable progress.

Wife, "Out-teethed" by D'Arcy, Seeks Divorce

Hollywood—"Impatient, overbearing, egotistical, quarrelsome and temperamental," are some of the choice adjectives used to describe Roy D'Arcy in a divorce action filed by his wife. The pair, whose legal name is Guisti, previously were divorced, but remarried a few days after Lita Grey Chaplin had stated she was to wed the former actor. D'Arcy now is operating a night club in New York.

$6,076,322 Net by M-G-M For 26 Weeks to Mar. 14

M-G-M reports net of $6,076,322 before taxes for the 28 weeks ended March 14. Gross profit was $9,163,203 and operating expenses $3,654,031.

Big Anti-Trust Suit Against Electrics To Bring Showdown on All Patent Rights

Supreme Court To Get Patent Suits

Anti-trust suit filed by the government against the big electrics and other parties to the cross-licensing agreements covering radio and kindred patents is headed straight for the Supreme Court.

There is little doubt that the government will stop short of either victory or a Supreme Court decision, which, it is hoped, would clarify the patent situation, so far as monopoly is concerned. The companies, too, may be expected to carry the fight to the last ditch to settle once and for all the issues involved in the case. Their positions in the sound picture and radio fields would dictate such a course, it is believed.

Dissolution and Injunction Asked By Government

Washington—Dissolution of RCA Photophone, RCA-Victor, RCA-Radiotron and General Motors Radio Corp. and an injunction restraining them from engaging in interstate commerce is asked by the Government in its anti-trust action against RCA and other members of the so-called patents pool.

The Government wants to restrain the defendants "from continuing to carry out, directly or indirectly, expressly or impliedly, the said combination and conspiracy, attempting to monopolize and monopolization, and from entering into or carrying out directly or indirectly any similar combination and conspiracy and monopolization of interstate trade or commerce."

Other demands of the Government included:

1. That the combination, conspiracy and monopolization complained of be held in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law.

2. That the defendants be perpetually enjoined from performing or continuing to perform any and all other acts described in the petition "as means of creating, maintaining or effectuating said combination and conspiracy."

3. That the contracts and agreements between and among the defendants be declared unlawful and void and that the defendants be perpetually enjoined "from entering into similar contracts or carrying out the terms of said agreements or understandings."

Stock Deal Ban Asked

4. That the defendants be perpetually enjoined from agreeing with other defendants not to compete "with such other defendants in any line of interstate trade or commerce."

5. That the defendants, other than the Radio Corporation of America, be perpetually enjoined and restrained from purchasing or otherwise acquiring capital stock in the Radio Corporation of America, any of its subsidiaries or operating companies.

6. That the General Electric Company and Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company be ordered to divest themselves of all stock in the Radio Corporation and that the Radio Corporation be ordered to divest itself of any property, facilities or assets acquired from General Electric or Westinghouse under the recent merger.

7. That jurisdiction of this cause be retained for the purpose of enforcing such degree as may be entered and enabling petitioner to apply for the modification or enlargement of any of the provisions on the ground that the same is inadequate, and for the purpose of enabling the defendants to apply to this court for a modification of the provisions on the ground that it has become inappropriate or unnecessary.

General's Suit Against Stanley Starts Monday

Involving patent rights of far-reaching proportion in sound recording and reproducing, General Talking Pictures' infringement suit against the Stanley Co. of America gets under way on Monday at Wilmington, Del. The action is a test case to determine if Western Electric and users of its equipment are infringing on patents of the General company, covering De Forest Phonofilm equipment.

Buddy Rogers' Brother To Get Paramount Trial

Hollywood—Paramount Publix will give a screen trial to B. H. Rogers, younger brother of Buddy Rogers. Buddy is entirely satisfied with the arrangement, but had nothing to do with it, it is said. The younger Rogers is to get about $100 weekly on a regular stock company contract.

Paramount 2d Quarter Earnings to Beat Records

Paramount Publix earnings for three months ending June 30, 1930, are expected to show a substantial increase over the same period last year, when net of $2,550,000, after all charges, established a new high for any second quarter's return.

U. S. Decides Time Is Ripe to Get Court Test of Monopolies

Washington—[illegible] patent manipulations can be carried by patentees in maintaining the monopoly conferred in effect upon the holder of a patent monopoly by the patent laws, is involved in the Government's anti-trust action against the electrics and allied firms in the so-called patent pool.

The companies concerned have consistently claimed that they have done nothing more than they are entitled to do under the patent laws.

Patent monopolies have been the most intricate of all phases of anti-trust proceedings, and while several cases involving patents have been brought by the Government, they have never stood the test of the courts.

The situation, it is commented at the Department of Justice, is so involved that it is believed the time has come when the courts should finally indicate the limit to which patent manipulations may be carried.

concerns to make radio receiving sets and to 14 concerns to make radio tubes. Between them, as the public knows, competition is severe. These licenses provide a royalty payment, which was intended to represent the fair contribution of the licensees to the expenses of the research and the cost of the original patents. It was intended to be less than the royalty payment would have been had the patents remained in scattered hands. All these licensees are licensed under all new inventions and have the benefits of all existing research of the radio corporation and its associated companies in the field which the licenses cover.

Says Arrangement Wise

"This arrangement seemed wise. As a result, an industry was born, thousands of people were employed and millions were enabled to listen, without charge for programs. There can be no question of benefit to the public. There is apparently now, looking backward and because of a recent court decision in another industry, some question in the mind of the Department of Justice of a technical violation of the law. Certainly, if there be anything illegal in the set-up of the Radio Corporation, its officers, directors and stockholders are more deeply interested in that question than either the Government or any other group can possibly be. It is very glad, therefore, that a test case has been brought. It prefers very much to have such a question out of politics."

Sills-MacKenna Teamed Again

Hollywood—Fox has cast Milton Sills and Kenneth MacKenna in 'The Sea Wolf." Al Santell will direct. Sills and MacKenna were teamed in "Living for Love."

Big Fox Theatre Move on the Wing; Houses in East Swung Into One Unit

To Produce Abroad

London—Fox is completing plans for production of pictures in England, according to W. J. Hutchinson, managing director of the firm here.

Mayer, Thalberg, Rubin Get M-G-M Contracts to 1937

Clearing of the smoke of battle in the Fox controversy resulted in extension of contracts for Louis B. Mayer and Irving Thalberg, M-G-M production chiefs, and J. Robert Rubin, vice-president and general counsel. The new expiration date is April 1, 1937, indicating Fox's intention of operating M-G-M as a separate company until that time, or retaining their services in case of a merger. Some weeks ago, MOTION PICTURE NEWS exclusively stated that, regardless of the outcome of the Fox squabble, Mayer and Thalberg were to be retained.

Negotiations on the contracts were begun last fall, but the Fox controversy held up final ratification by directors.

Johnson, Sheehan 'Buddy' To Be a Fox Executive

Verifying the report current at the time he was host to Winfield Sheehan at a New York dinner late last winter, Joseph Johnson, commissioner of public works of the city of New York, has resigned that post to join Fox in an executive capacity.

Joseph Johnson

Johnson's duties have not been defined beyond the cryptic statement from Sheehan that the ex-commissioner's abilities "as an analyst will be of great value in the conduct of a business which, to succeed, must feel the pulse of the public."

Johnson and Sheehan were newspaper men together and were in the N. Y. Fire Department during the Gaynor administration in 1911, and have been politically sympathetic for many years.

Movietone News Force to Hold Own Sales Confab

Fox Movietone News sales department will hold a convention of its own at the Park Central, New York on May 22. Truman H. Talley, general manager of the reel, and George A. Roberts, of the sales force, will preside.

Move on for New Holdings— Arthur, Oldknow and Zanft Co-Advisers

Fox Metropolitan Playhouses Inc., Fox Midwesco and Fox New England Theatres are to lose their identities in favor of Fox Theatres Corporation. Plans are under way to expand the holdings of the company in the Eastern part of the country in consonance with the theatre activity of Publix, RKO and Warners.

The theatres will be operated by Harry C. Arthur who, with Oscar Oldknow and John Zanft will function as a nadvisory board. The Fox office is reticent about expansion moves, but it is held to be inevitable that the company will have to dig in to protect its holdings against aggressions of other nationally-operated chains. Consummation of the Midland deal in Kansas City, as noted last week, is the first step.

Arthur held a two-day meeting of his division in New York this week with another slated for Monday. Joe Leo's withdrawal as Fox Metropolitan president was followed immediately by resignation of William Brandt, general manager under the Leo regime. So far Fox Metropolitan is undisturbed, but there are reports of impending changes in several directions. Gabriel Yorke, who has been handling the New York run of "Song O' My Heart" was placed in charge of advertising and publicity for that circuit and James Keefe in a similar post with Midwesco.

Headquarters for the Eastern division will be maintained at 1600 Broadway. This move divides the Fox theatre holdings into two divisions.

71 Players Under Contract at Fox, Wurtzel States

Hollywood—Fox now has 71 players under contract, according to Sol M. Wurtzel, general superintendent of the studio. In addition, there are seven associate producers, 19 directors, one stage director, 27 writers, 16 composers, five dance and ensemble directors, 34 dancers, 24 singers, two fashion creators, a test director, a music teacher and other officials and technicians.

The actors include John McCormack, Warner Baxter, William Collier, Charles Farrell, Edmund Lowe, Victor McLaglen, Will Rogers, Don Jose Mojica, Milton Sills, Frank Albertson, Robert Ames, Edwin Bartlett, Rex Bell, Humphrey Bogart, El Brendel, Robert Burns, Walter Catlett, Thomas Clifford, John Garrick, George Grossmith, William Harrigan, Mitchell Harris, Ted Healy, Gus Howard, Warren Hymer, Richard Keene, J. Franklin C. of C. Officer

Hollywood — Harold B. Franklin, president and general manager of Fox West Coast Theatres, who came here two years ago to direct activities of the chain, has been elected a director of the state Chamber of Commerce.

Leo Gets 90 Day "Vacation" With Future in Doubt

Joe Leo, relieved from his duties as president and general manager of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., a few days ago, has been given a ninety days' leave of absence after which, according to official advices from the Fox home office, he is "to report for other duties."

What those duties are to be is not defined. Leo declares he holds a three year contract given him together with nine other Fox officials as part of the deal whereby William Fox sold his control to Harley L. Clarke. Fox officials are reticent on this angle and have no comment to make on the Leo situation.

In the interim, the former theatre operator is planning a trip to Europe with his brother, Jack, former vice-president.

Oldknow, New Fox Exec., Old Hand at Exhibition

Atlanta—"Home town boy makes good" was the newspaper reaction locally to appointment of Oscar Oldknow as executive vice-president of Fox Theatres by Harley L. Clarke. While the trade at large may look upon this 31-year-old executive as an equipment man by virtue of his post with National Theatre Supply Co., as a matter of fact Oldknow is an exhibitor.

Oscar Oldknow

He owns several theatres in the Southeast, one the Carroll at Carrollton, Ga., reputed to be the second house in the state specially built for sound.

Ralph Block Appointed Fox Associate Producer

Hollywood—After three months on the Fox payroll as a writer, Ralph Block has been elevated to the post of associate producer at the Fox plant. Block's first assignment will be supervision of two features—"Scotland Yard," to be directed by William K. Howard with Edmund Lowe starred; and "Time Out," from original story by Owen Davis with Sidney Lanfield assigned to direct.

Films, Minus Sophistication, One of Highlights of Annual Convention

Atlantic City.—A series of talkers geared directly for kiddie entertainment will be Paramount's answer to the increasingly important problem of too much sophistication in pictures for minors.

Jackie Coogan has been signed to star in "Tom Sawyer," Junior Durkin will appear in "Huckleberry Finn" and one of the much-to-be-touted pictures on the 1930-1931 schedule will be "Skippy," based on the nationally-circulated cartoon strip.

The designation of a number of pictures for children is considered a highly significant step by Paramount and, when S. R. Kent outlines the new product to the assembled delegates at the annual sales conven on Saturday afternoon, he will duly stress the point.

9 Starring Series

Paramount will release 60 features next season, 110 single reelers, 26 two-reelers and two issues weekly of Paramount Sound News.

Clara Bow, Gary Cooper, Ruth Chatterton, Maurice Chevalier, William Powell, Jack Oakie, Nancy Carroll, Buddy Rogers and Richard Arlen will be represented in the stellar line-up and, as usual, the company will combine stars and leads for special productions.

The convention delegates gathered here on Thursday. The initial business meeting starts Friday with the foreign contingent playing principal role. On Saturday, Charles E. McCarthy will head discussions on advertising and publicity. In the afternoon, Kent will outline product for next year. Sam Katz, operating head of the theatre department, and Ralph Kohn, treasurer of the corporation, are slated to talk as well.

The convention will then break down into

Paramount Set To Film Sixty Talkers Abroad

Sixty talkers in French, Spanish, German, Swedish, Italian and Hungarian are to be made in France by Paramount-Publix, Jesse L. Lasky, company production chief, declared on his return to New York from abroad. The company, he said, has secured services of Serge Eisenstein, Russian director. He has been released by the Soviet government to make four pictures in as many years. Most of the foreign pictures planned by Paramount will be "carbon copies" of American successes, Lasky said. Some of the technicians slated to make the pictures will be sent from Hollywood, he asserted.

M-G-M Holds Features to 50 Average But Increases Shorts 25 Per Cent

Company to Have 60 One and Two Reelers and 104 News Issues

Fifty features, 60 shorts and 104 issues of Hearst Metrotone News will comprise M-G-M's lineup for 1930-31, the sales force will hear at the company's convention which opens Monday at Chicago. The entire sales organization and a number of home office and production executives are slated to attend.

The feature program hits the company average maintained for the last few years, but the short subject program is an increase of 25 per cent. Last year, 48 shorts were scheduled.

Among the group additions to the short feature program for next season are 12 Burton Holmes travel subjects and eight Hal Roach "Boy Friends" comedies. The 12 subjects will be diversified in locale and will be titled "Around the World with Burton Holmes."

The Hal Roach "Boy Friends" series is an idea Roach has had in mind for several years. The average age of the "Boy Friends" players is from 15 to 19 years. Members of the "Boy Friends" troupe are Dorothy Granger, Mary Kornman, Gertie Messinger, Grady Sutton, David Sharpe and Mickey Daniels.

Six Laurel and Hardys

The other new season M-G-M short feature release groups comprise six Laurel and Hardy comedies; eight Charley Chase comedies; eight "Our Gang" comedies; eight "colortone revues"; six dog comedies; and four two reel novelty subjects, in addition to the semi-weekly issues of the Hearst Metrotone News.

In the novelty group of new season shorts are two features with music: "The Song Writers' Revue" and "Gems of M-G-M," together with two sketches, "The Rounder," a comedy with George K. Arthur and Dorothy Sebastian, and "Copy," a short newspaper drama.

Feist to Be Chairman

Felix F. Feist, general manager of sales and distribution, will serve as chairman at the "Chi" confab. The five vice-chairmen are William F. Rodgers, eastern sales manager; Edward M. Saunders, western sales manager; Thomas J. Connors, southern sales manager; Frederick C. Quimby, manager, short feature department; and Howard Dietz, director of publicity, advertising and exploitation.

Other convention officers comprise J. S. MacLeod, manager of the exchange maintenance department, who will serve as business manager; Ernest Morrell, of the M-G-M transportation department, who will act as assistant business manager; and Selwyn Levinson, sound technician supervisor, who will also serve as assistant business manager.

Jay A. Cove, M-G-M sales development manager, will be chairman of the general convention committee and will be assisted by F. C. Quimby, reception and house committee; Alan F. Cummings, program and sessions committee; Edward W. Aaron, theatre party committee; William D. Kelly, screening committee; Si. Seadler, publicity committee; William R. Ferguson, exploitation and decoration committee; Ernest Morrell, transportation committee; Jack Flynn, entertainment committee.

Schedule Summarized

The program of activities for the four days of the convention has been summarized as follows:

Sunday, May 18—Meetings of group committees. The entire convention body will attend "The Little Show" in the evening.

Monday, May 19—Analysis of the exhibitors' problems of last year in relation to the future. This includes a study of how best to develop and expand the service work inaugurated by M-G-M last year, also consideration of the problems of the small exhibitor, and discussion of the problems confronting the exhibitors whose houses are not yet equipped for the showing of sound pictures.

Tuesday, May 19—All-day screening of new season pictures. This preview begins in the morning and continues throughout the afternoon and evening.

Wednesday, May 20—Presentation of next year's line-up of feature productions and short subjects, with a discussion of marketing policies. This will be followed, in the evening, by a banquet and entertainment, terminating the convention.

Never before, according to one company executive, has M-G-M devoted as much time to study of exhibitor problems as will be the case at the 1930 convention. Last season the company inaugurated a sound advisory service to acquaint exchanges and theatre owners with the latest developments in sound technique and application of newest service methods to local houses. After a period of study at the Coast under expert engineers and instructors 14 sound technicians were sent throughout the country visiting exchange centers and theatres to in-

Pathe Out to Top $18,000,000 Record Gross in '30-31; Sales Meet Monday

More Truth Than Poetry

Marilyn Miller's new quip which is going the Main Stem rounds concerns a visit by Marilyn to Reuben's New York delicatessen, where the sandwiches bear the names of well-knowns of stage and screen.

She inspected the cryptic menu, which offered "Jack Oakie Special," "Justine Johnson Surprise," "Winnie Lightner Delight," etc., etc.

"Oh, I say," said Marilyn to the waiter, "is that all you've got to eat here?"

"Oh, no, we have dozens of other selections."

"That's funny," cracked Marilyn, "all I see here is ham."

New York, Scene of First of Four Conventions—20 On New Schedule

Pathe's sales force will be called upon to better this year's record gross of more than $18,000,000 in the series of four sales conventions scheduled by Phil Reisman, general sales manager. The new production policy, which calls for the making of specials only, should assure increased returns this year, Reisman is expected to tell his sales force.

Phil Reisman

With a new line-up in executive management and in production, Pathe this year will present 20 features, with "Seven Keys to High" heading the list. This film, Reisman will say, is expected to stimulate the interest of children in picture entertainment and children's attendance at picture theatres, although it is designed for all audiences.

Pathe's short subjects will consist of 52 two-reel comedies, 52 animated cartoon comedies; 26 adventure pictures made by Tom Terris; six song sketches; 104 issues of Pathe Sound News and 52 issues Pathe News; 26 Grantland Rice Sportlights; 52 issues of Pathe Audio Review and Pathe Review; 26 issues of Topics of the Day.

Reisman and his assistant, J. F. McAloon, and Ed Ballantine, manager of exchange operations, will address all meetings. All salesmen and head bookers will attend the sessions.

The eastern division sales convention will be held in New York at the Moderne theatre on the 50th floor of the new Chanin Building on Monday and Tuesday. Edward McEvoy, division manager, will be in charge. All home office executives will be in attendance.

The mid-western division sales convention will be held at Chicago, May 21 and 22. Harry Lorch, division manager, will be in charge.

The central and southern division will hold a joint convention in St. Louis, May 23 and 24. Harry Graham and W. E. Callaway, central and southern division managers, respectively, will be in charge.

The western division sales convention will be held at San Francisco, May 28 and 29. J. H. McIntyre, division manager, will be in charge.

Those who will be present at Pathe's New York convention include:

Phil Reisman, general sales manager; J. F. McAloon, asst. general sales manager; C. J. Scollard, treasurer; Edward W. Ballentine, manager of exchange operations; Terry Ramsaye, editor in chief; Ray Hall, editor Pathe News; T. S. Delehanty, vice-president and general manager of Pathe International Corp.; Reginald Smith, managing director of PDC, Ltd., London; H. E. J. Spearman, general European manager of Pathe International Corp. on the continent; G. R. O'Neill, director of advertising and publicity; Rutgers Neilson, publicity; Joe O'Sullivan, advertising; Manfred B. Lee, advertising; Joe Rivkin, exploitation; L. H. Miller, sales control; Emmett Cashman, sales control; A. Schubart, asst. to J. F. McAloon; Beverly Jones, asst. editor Pathe Audio Review; Thomas Gorman; William McShea; Edward Helouis, Branch auditor; Arthur Poole.

Branch managers include:

Ed McEvoy, Eastern division manager; S. R. Wolff, New York; L. Garvey, Albany; R. C. Cropper, Boston; H. Gibbs, New Haven; Robert Mochrie, Philadelphia; S. Lefko, Pittsburgh; and C. W. Stombaugh, Washington.

The salesmen contingent:

Boston—M. M. Ames, J. J. Jennings, F. G. Ross, E. H. Warren, C. D. Wilson, J. A. Curran.

New York—E. Carroll, J. J. Dacey, J. J. Felder.

Philadelphia—O. B. Derr, E. Ginzburg, D. F. Heenan, W. J. Madison, A. Goldsmith.

Pittsburgh—G. Collins, N. Ehrlich, H. Price, M. Steinberg, C. Bell.

Professor Warner

"We're going to have to send a new man down to take over our branch office in Mexico. Who'll it be?"

"Send McYittz."

"Is he familiar with the customs of the country?"

"Oh, sure!"

"Can he talk the lingo?"

"He thinks he can."

"Does he know conditions there?"

"The way he talks, there isn't anything about Mexico he doesn't know."

"I didn't know McYittz even had been in Mexico."

"He hasn't. But he's seen every feature that Warner Bros. have made in the last year." —Judge.

M-G-M Pictures To Be Listed at Chicago Meeting

Hollywood—M-G-M is well along on production of the pictures which will be announced at the Chicago sales convention. Plans also are well advanced for production here of foreign-language films.

Among the pictures which, it is understood, will be announced are:

"Trader Horn"; Oscar Hammerstein's "New Moon," co-starring Lawrence Tibbett and Grace Moore; Grace Moore in a story based on the life of Jenny Lind; "Remote Control," two Norma Shearers, Greta Garbo in "Romance" which Clarence Brown is directing with Lewis Stone, Gavin Gordon; John Gilbert in "Dark Star" and "The Way of a Sailor"; "Red Dust" which Fred Niblo will direct; Joan Crawford in "Our Blushing Brides" which Harry Beaumont will direct and "The Great Day" which Harry Pollard will direct.

Marion Davies will appear in two or three pictures including "Rosalie" to be directed by Robert Z. Leonard. Cosmopolitan will supply four pictures including "Never The Twain Shall Meet" which Lionel Barrymore will direct; "Humoresque" and two others. The list also embraces "Passion Flower" by Kathleen Norris which William de Mille will direct; "Tampico" starring Charles Bickford; "Mme. Satan" musical operetta to be produced by Cecil De Mille; "The Singer of Seville" starring Ramon Novarro; "Remote Control" starring William Haines under direction of Malcolm St. Clair; "The March of Time Review"; "Monsieur le Fox" which Hal Roach is directing in several languages; "Billy the Kid" with John Mack Brown, Wallace Berry and Karl Dane which is being directed by King Vidor; Ruth Chatterton in "The High Road"; two starring the Duncan Sisters; "Naughty Marietta"; "Spring Fever" with Robert Montgomery and Dorothy McNulty; "Charmaine", Diane and Madelon.

In addition M-G-M will handle "Rookery Nook" produced by Charles and Herbert Wilcox brothers in England and to be released in America as "One Embarrassing Night."

Foreign Executives Arriving

T. S. Delehanty, vice-president and general manager of Pathe International Corp., is en route to New York and will arrive Monday in time for the Pathe convention. Accompanying him are Reginald Smith and H. E. J. Spearman, who are in charge of Pathe affairs in the United Kingdom and the Continent, respectively.

Majestic Plans Eight Features For New Season

Majestic Pictures Co., Ltd. will produce for the season 1930-31 eight feature all-talking motion pictures. Present plans call for production at the Tec-Art Studios in Hollywood.

The eight have already been definitely set and the stories are: "Today," by Abraham Schomer; "The Divorce Question," by William Anthony McGuire; "Hail the Woman," by C. Gardner Sullivan; "The Trap," by Norman Springer; "The Price Mark," by John Ritchie and John Lynch; "Smart Women," by Harrison Jacobs; "Sentimental Satan," by Abraham Schomer; and "The Comeback," by L. DeWitt Rose.

The first picture, "Today," cast for which will be announced shortly, is scheduled for delivery on August 15, with the balance of the program to follow at intervals of six weeks.

Harry Sherman, president of Majestic, will personally supervise all production, while sales and distribution will be in charge of J. D. Trop, vice-president.

The company has already arranged for distribution with many leading state right exchanges in the United States and has closed with a leading distributor for foreign release.

"Life" Cartoons Reissued

A series of "Life" cartoons, produced by "Life," the magazine and first released four years ago by Educational, have been acquired by Merle Johnson and James H. Harper who will add sound effects and music and distribute through Majestic Pictures. Fred Hall and Arthur Fields will handle the musical end.

Sherman Off For Coast

Harry Sherman has left for Hollywood to start "Today," first in a sereis of eight to be state righted by Majestic Pictures at the Tec-Art studio. It is planned to have the picture completed and available for franchise holders about August 15.

Educational-Christie Deal Is Set, Convention Expected To Be Told

64 Comedies, Kinograms to Comprise 1930-1931 Line-up, Is Report

With indications that the deal for a merging of production interests with Christie will be completed by the end of the week, Educational will have 64 comedies and 104 issues of Kinograms on its 1930-31 program, it is understood. Mack Sennett will furnish 26 two-reelers, and possibly 12 single reelers, according to word from the Coast.

Announcement of the closing of the Christie deal is expected to be made Monday by President Earle W. Hammons, when the company opens the first of three sales conventions. The meetings continue Tuesday. Home office executives and branch managers of the eastern division will attend.

Educational's and the Metropolitan studio would be pooled under the merger plan, it is declared. Educational's studio chief, Jack White, resigned some time ago, it is stated. The deal with Christie has been under way for some time between Hammons and Charles Christie, who is in New York.

Following the meeting the home office executives will then go on to Chicago to confer with the branch managers of the Central, Mid-West and southern states, May 22, 23 and 24.

The third meeting will take place at Denver, May 26 and 27. Here the managers of Educational's exchanges in the Far West and Pacific Coast will meet the home office executives for their sales meeting.

Those who will attend the New York meetings are: E. W. Hammons, president; Bruno Weyers, vice-president; A. S. Kirkpatrick, asst. general manager; S. W. Hatch, general sales manager; D. L. Faralla, treasurer; J. R. Wilson, sales promotion dept.; H. B. Day, field representative; F. X. Carroll, contract dept.; C. F. Catlin, counsel; G. S. White, director of publicity and advertising; R. W. Doidge, production dept.; R. L. Hoadley, west coast publicity representative; B. J. Kearney, purchasing agent; J. F. O'Donnell, traveling auditor; and the following managers: J. A. Bachman, Philadelphia; J. H. Beaver, Washington; H. F. Brink, Buffalo; A. X. Greenblatt, New York; J. Y. Kaliski, Pittsburgh; L. J. Klar, Cincinnati; J. H. Morgan, Albany; H. D. Noble, New Haven; H. R. Skirboll, Cleveland; F. G. Sliter, Boston; J. Oravis, Canadian general manager; J. R. Skirboll, Ohio dist. manager.

In addition to home office officials, the following will attend the Chicago sessions:

Arthur Lucas, Southern district manager; L. K. Blank, Omaha; R. C. Borg, Kansas City; J. H. Butner, Atlanta; W. J. Cammer, Oklahoma City; H. C Dressendorfer, Indianapolis; N. P. Eberley, New Orleans; W. O. Galloway, Des Moines; L. L. Goldberg, Louisville; H. B. Johnson, Minneapolis; J. A. Reynolds, Charlotte; Max Stahl, Chicago; M. H. Starr, Detroit; F. A. Tomes, Dallas; E. J. Weisman, Milwaukee; J. L. Winn, St. Louis.

At Denver the following managers will be present in addition to home office officials:

A. P. Archer, Denver; G. C. Blumenthal, San Francisco; C. H. Messenger, Salt Lake City; J. C. Nelson, Los Angeles, B. W. Rucker, Seattle.

W. E. Wages Advance

Wages of Western Electric employes are advancing even though prices are decreasing, C. G. Stoll, vice-president in charge of operations, told members of the American Management Ass'n. in New York.

Solve World's Problems

Seattle—Proper safeguards against poor films, censorship of objectionable themes or dialogue, and observance and enforcement of all laws and world peace were among the things urged by the annual convention of the State of Washington Parent-Teacher Associations, gathered here this week.

The group passed a resolution protesting against the use of the Literary Digest in school classrooms because the publication used advertisements showing "beautiful women and young girls smoking cigarettes."

crease sound projection efficiency. This service will reach even more exhibitors during the coming year, according to present plans, and the entire convention body will devote at least a full day to study of information brought in by sound service men and consideration of exhibitor problems, in order that the latter's interests may be more completely safeguarded than ever before.

Announcement has been made by F. Feist that the names of new additions to M-G-M's sales "Legion of Honor" will be made public during the convention. Eighty-nine salesmen already have become Legionnaires as a result of notable work in the field, and a number of new selections will be made this year.

Hal Roach will come on from the Coast for the convention, while Burton Holmes will be a guest of honor, and the following persons are definitely listed as going to the Chicago meeting from M-G-M's New York home office:

Felix F. Feist, Edward M. Saunders, William F. Rodgers, Thomas J. Connors, Jay A. Gove, Frederick C. Quimby, Howard Dietz, Silas F. Seadler, Alan F. Cummings, Morris Alin, Frank E. McRoy, Edward W. Aaron, J. S. MacLeod, William R. Ferguson, Arthur M. Loew, Sam Eckman, Jr., Morton A. Spring, Ernest Morrell, William Marsh, Selwyn Levinson, William D. Kelly, and E. B. Original Plan Called For 60, But 20 From Columbia Will Meet Theatre Needs

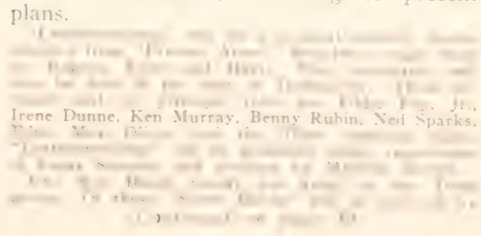
Radio Pictures has shaved its production schedule to 34 features and 30 shorts. Previously, it had been planned to produce in the neighborhood of 60 pictures, which amount was declared necessary to meet the requirements of the company's theatres. However, closing of its reported acquisition of Columbia, which gives RKO theatres that firm's output of 20, enabled the cutting down on the number of Radio pictures.

The company's product, which is divided into seven feature groups and short subjects, will be outlined to the sales force at the annual convention, which gets under way on the Coast May 19. The sessions will continue for five days. Twenty-four of the 34 features planned are to be large scale productions, the remaining ten not so lavish. The company's feature program calls for an outlay of $20,000,000, the company states.

Heading the list will be the Amos 'n' Andy features, temporarily titled "Check and Double Check." Cast and permanent title are to be announced.



Other groups on the schedule are: 12 Titans, three Basil Dean productions, four styled super specials, three Richard Dix productions, two Betty Compson productions and the Victory Nine.

First of Titans Finished

One of the 12 Titans, "Dixiana," which heads the list, is already in the cutting room. Many of the sequences are in technicolor. In the cast are Bebe Daniels, Everett Marshall, Metropolitan opera baritone, Robert Woolsey and Bert Wheeler, Jobyna Howland, Joseph Cawthorne, Dorothy Lee, Ralf Harolds, Edward Chandler, George Herman, Bill Robinson, Bruce Covington, Eugene Jackson, Sam Baker, Pearl Eaton's chorus girls and other. Luther Reed directed. Ann Caldwell, stage librettist and lyricist, wrote the book and lyrics.

"Cimarron," Edna Ferber's novel, is to star Richard Dix. Wesley Ruggles will direct. Howard Eastabrook is doing the screen adaptation. William Sistrom is supervisor.

Victor Herbert's "Babes in Toyland" has been assigned to direction of Luther Reed, under personal supervision of William Le Baron. Everett Marshall, Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey, Joseph Cawthorne, Irene Dunne, Margaret Padula, Edna May Oliver, Ned Sparks, Dorothy Lee and the Tiller Sunshine Girls have already been cast. Fifty percent of "Babes in Toyland" is to be in Technicolor, according to present plans.

Irene Dunne, Ken Murray, Benny Rubin, Ned Sparks,

25 Cartoon Subjects Set

Launching of a new patented method of resynchronizing will be undertaken on the Coast by Charles B. Mintz, independent producer, who is en route to Hollywood. Mintz, who is head of Winkler Pictures, intends to produce next year 12 Toby the Pup cartoons for RKO release and 13 Krazy Kat cartoons for Columbia.

Distribute Chesterfields

Chesterfield has just completed negotiations with Henry R. Arias, president of the Classplay Pictures Corp., by which the latter will make and distribute synchronized musical versions of Chesterfield's first two all-talking productions, "Love At First Sight" and "Ladies In Love." This is especially being prepared for all non English speaking countries.

$2,000,000 in Lab Patents to New Company

Rights, title and interest in all United States and foreign patents covering film processing machines known as Erbograph, Gaumont and Spoor-Thompson have been merged into Cinema Patents Co., Inc., by Consolidated Film Industries, which, it is claimed, has amassed $2,000,000 in patent rights for the new company.

The patents are considered basic, and are said to cover all film processing machines in the industry. Motion Picture News, several weeks ago, told of acquisition by H. J. Yates of Spoor-Thompson patents. Yates heads Consolidated.

Processing machines covered by the patents are already in use, under license agreements, by Paramount-Publix, Fox, Universal, Bell Lab, Eastman Kodak, Consolidated, Bennett Lab, Spoor-Thompson Machine Co., and H. E. R. Lab.

Pending negotiations with S. M. Eisenstein, no announcement was made as to the picture Douglas Fairbanks is to deliver to United Artists for release this fall. Fairbank's production, however, will be added to the 20 announced.

U. S. Files Tax Liens Against Five Players

Hollywood—Five tax liens have been filed by the government against screen luminaries. May McAvoy heads the list with a claim against her by the government for $13,778 in connection with her 1924 tax return. Others are: Carmel Myers, $4,829 for 1924; Norman Kerry, $9,995 for 1926-27; Harry Langdon, $31,367 for 1924 to 1927; Bert Lytell, $21,639 for 1924 to 1927.

Goldberg in Narrow Escape

Utica, N. Y.—Harry D. Goldberg, general manager of the Upper New York division of Fox theatres, is recovering from bruises received when his car was sideswiped by a Ford early Sunday morning. Goldberg is carrying his right arm in a cast, although no bones were broken. His wife's injuries, likewise minor, included a badly cut knee which necessitated a number of stitches at a local hospital.

Newspaper Readers Squawk On Lurid Advertising Use for Film

Milwaukee—Page the Hays office and the new code of ethics it is drafting for advertising men. Plenty of comment, adverse and otherwise, was aroused by the copy used for "Ladies of Leisure" at RKO's Palace Orpheum. The sex angle of the picture was played to the limit for the local showing.

The first newspaper advertisement carried the copy: "Censored in the city of Chicago! You'll see it all here. NOT recommended for children!" Illustrations accompanying the advertisements were of a similar type, while the posters in the front of the theatre emphasized the sex angle by suggestive figures, the type of which are not even seen in the picture.

The reference to its being censored in Chicago appeared to be particularly uncalled for and aroused considerable discussion, not entirely favorable, among the general public. A letter was sent to one of the newspapers which was printed in "What Our Readers Think" department of the paper referring to this particular feature of the advertisement and condemning it.

Studios Steal Beauties, Cries Earl Carroll

Hollywood—That Hollywood has dug deeply into the chorus girl resources of New York, once the capital of feminine pulchritude, seems to be indicated by a wire which prompted Leroy Jerome Prinz, dance director, to desert the coast temporarily in order to supervise dance numbers for Earl Carroll's new "Vanities."

The wire read: "Hurry back. Rehearsals for new 'Vanities' start in ten days. Not satisfied with present supply of girls here. Bring as many of those California beauties as you can. Tell girls you pick they need not be afraid of coming to New York. This is no speculation, as they most definitely will be in the show. It seems that all the beauty in the world has gone talkie. Earl Carroll."

Prinz has just completed a contract as dance director for "Madame Satan," Cecil B. De Mille's new M-G-M comedy with music. De Mille has released him to Earl Carroll, with a proviso for his return. The dance director had been with the New York "eye and ear" producer through a large number of productions, before coming to De Mille six months ago.

Cruze to Produce "The Straw," O'Neil Drama

"The Straw," a play by Eugene O'Neil, America's premier dramatist, has been acquired by James Cruze, who will produce it for Sono Art-World Wide. Although prepartion for actual production will not take place for a while, Cruze has already selected Glenn Hunter to play the lead. A pretentious production is planned, concerning which, Cruze says, all the essentials of plot and characterization will be strictly adhered to in accordance with a promise made with the playwright.

Publix Keeping Close Check on Ads Following Sam Katz Ban on Hot Copy

Loew's Bans Hot Copy

General order to employes to keep advertising copy clean has been broadcast by the Loew circuit. The business, it is stressed in orders to the staff, has progressed "far beyond the point where we need to stoop to questionable advertising."

Thousands of persons, the company stresses, do not attend theatres regularly, but judge the industry by its advertising. These usually are among the leaders in censorship movements, it is asserted. Resort to such copy fools only the ad writer, not the ticket buying public, it is declared.

Ad. Men Duel in Copy; Gate for Newspaper Man

Chicago—Two Chicago chains, both of them heavy users of advertising space in the dailies, had progressed from the normal stage of competition to that of personal and unconcealed animosity. Evidence of it was finding its way into the advertising copy of both chains in the form of box headings in upper case type warning the public not to be misled by the advertised attractions of the other.

These questionable innovations in advertising were confined to one paper which, because of its competition and its anxiety to build up advertising revenue, made it more prone to overlook irregularities. The situation, however, was a constant worry to one of the more conscientious of the paper's theatrical advertising managers. He found that the copy for both concerns would be received in good order, but before the final editions were off the press, somehow or other changes would have been made in it or objectionable copy added.

Discrimination Was Deduced

He made every effort to circumvent both concerns in utilizing his paper's space as a weapon in the personal duel, but in spite of his watchfulness the irregular copy of one, apparently craftier than the other, found its way into print with greater frequency than its rival's. The deduction of the thwarted advertising manager was that his concern was being discriminated against by the paper's ad man whom he believed to be in sympathy with, if not in the pay of, his rival.

The climax came when the chain whose irregular ad copy had been spotted and held out the oftenest, acquired control of its rival's theatres. With the acquisition of the theatres there came control also of the bulk of the paper's movie advertising. The supposed connection between the newspaperman and the erstwhile rival chain continued to rankle in the mind of the ad manager of the successful chain and, with his increased power, he decided to see what could be done about it. The result is that the newspaperman is looking for a job.

eyes saw beauty and in her wanton mind the light of finer things. . . On his canvas she became an angle . . . while her lure unleashed the hunger of his arms and heart." This is the type of copy which was featured in connection with the newspaper ads for the picture.

The picture remained for two weeks, but the advertising copy during the second week was toned down considerably. Through its early advertising it is argued here the theatre could very easily have given the local censorship board a bad impression, when the picture itself was not as salacious as painted.

Copy Pulled at Seattle For Newspaper Razzing

Seattle—Because Harry Mills, dramatic critic and film reviewer of the Seattle Star, Scripps daily publication in this city, chose to give a gentle "raspberry" to one of its recent screen attractions, the New Orpheum Theatre has been "out" of the Star's advertising columns for several days. At least, that is the interpretation put on the incident by the theatre and film men of the territory.

Hot Stuff, and How!

Page the advertising and publicity committee named at the Hays office meeting to put a damper on hot copy. Those ads being used by Michael L. Simmons, advertising and publicity director for Sono Art-World Wide, surely have plenty of warmth. If you've lamped the "Change Your Luck" ads he's been using, with a dark-skinned gal as the come-on, you get what we mean. And his catchline for "The Dude Wrangler," which is an "Oh, Dear" and "The Story of a Pansy Cowboy" striking an absolutely new note. Meanwhile, the proposed code of ethics for advertising still is very much in the embryonic stage, 'tis said.

No Leniency To Be Shown Offenders Is Warning To Theatremen

Paramount-Publix is keeping [illegible] in advertising, following the hot copy ban Sam Katz made. He even followed one of an advertisement on "The Girl Said No" in a Buffalo newspaper, in which Polly Moran and Marie Dressler were referred to as "drunken hussies."

"Because of the enormous importance attached to the policy of clean, truthful, decent advertising, as against the other kind, the circuit intends to enforce rigidly its ban on hot copy," Katz states. His warning includes "every kind of advertising—trailers, radio, posters, newspaper ads, news stories, circular letters, tie-ups or even word-of-mouth advertising."

No Quarter for Offenders

"Show business in the last few years," says Katz, "has elevated itself beyond the reach of those critics who found ample cause for destructive activity through the vulgarity, indecency and untruthfulness which formerly abounded in the industry."

No leniency will be shown for violation of his order, Katz warns, pointing out the responsibility of the individual in protecting the industry's name.

Anyone within the industry, "whose harmful activity" endangers its goodwill, is "a traitor to his source of livelihood and a traitor to his associates in the industry, no matter if innocently or intentionally," Katz asserts.

Dirty Advertising Hit by Wisconsin "U" Prof.

Madison, Wis.—Suggestive advertising of talkies in Wisconsin's daily newspapers was one of the subjects discussed at a meeting here of approximately 40 members of the Wisconsin Daily Newspaper Advertising League.

It was made the subject of a paper by Prof. Helen M. Patterson of the University of Wisconsin school of journalism. Miss Patterson presented excerpts from the advertisements for "Party Girl," "Street of Chance," "Lilies of the Field," "Mexicali Rose," "Slightly Scarlet," "My Ladies' Past," "The Black Watch," and "The Single Standard" as examples of the suggestive advertisement based on sex appeal.

Exaggeration in advertisements of talking pictures cited by her were the numbers of pictures advertised as the "greatest ever made," which was the boast of "Gold Diggers of Broadway," "On with the Show," "Fast Life" and "The Unholy Night."

At Sea on Plans To Hold Foreign Market Business

Sharp differences of opinion on how to handle the foreign language situation prevail in producing ranks. M-G-M and Warners, for instance, are to concentrate activities on the coast. Paramount Publix promises to make 60 next year in six languages, using a studio in Paris as headquarters.

Fox is perhaps exercising the greatest caution of all major companies. Officials of that company take the stand that foreign production designed for distribution in markets where profits are never formidable is not yet economically sound. Therefore, synchronized prints with the usual foreign titles will be used. An exception is "One Mad Kiss," starring Mojica, which is being made in Spanish as well as in English.

One expert in foreign distribution this week asked how talkers made in Hungarian can return a profit in view of the indifferent possibilities of that market. He levelled the same query concerning Italian, French and Swedish talkers. Others are speculating as well.

National Board to Bridge

Annual bridge party of the National Board of Review is set for Saturday at the Hotel Pennsylvania, New York, where Sidney Lenz and Wilbur Whitehead will supervise play. More than 1,000 are expected. All Companies, But Warners, Would Enter That Field If Deal Is Closed

Berlin—Payment of a moderate license fee by American producers to Tobis Klangfilm and withdrawal from the German field by Western Electric constitute the terms of a settlement which Adolph Zukor is endeavoring to work out as a solution to the German sound situation. Motion Picture News learns this on excellent authority and not from a source which might be construed as leaning toward the German patent combine.

Zukor is in Europe as chairman of a committee of two, the other being Nicholas M. Schenck, which is representing all members of the Hays association with the exception of Warners in an effort to remove the kinks from the patent difficulties which beset those companies in a number of European countries.

Germany the Key

Germany has been the hardest situation to crack. There, Western Electric has been kept out by injunctive proceedings filed by Tobis Klankfilm. But Warners, at odds for some time with Western Electric, made an individual deal with the Germans, secured a license and have been cleaning up in Germany with its talkers. The other American companies, compelled to secure permission from "Erpi" to function in Germany, have been kept out pending legal settlement of the differences between that organization and Tobis Klangfilm.

The original claims of patent priority and exclusiveness claimed by the Germans for Germany have gradually been extended to embrace practically all of the Continent. While Western Electric insists that the facts fail to back up Tobis Klangfilm and while W. E. is operating in a number of countries on this side of the water, the general situation is muddled and of considerable concern to American companies.

This is the tangle which Zukor is attempting to unravel not only on his own behalf in view of Paramount Publix's plan to produce talkers in Paris in six languages, but on behalf of the other companies, pooled for the purpose, which he is representing.

In view of their deal with Tobis, Warners will be in a position to issue German operating licenses to its competitors. Strategically and financially, this factor is regarded as highly important.

On Its Own

Foreign production of Paramount Publix which call for 60 pictures in six languages next year, all to be made in Paris, is an individual venture on the part of the company and has no bearing on the pool of producers, formed to iron out the patent tangle in Germany and other Continental countries.

Otterson Mum

John E. Otterson, president of Electrical Research, declares the facts concerning the German settlement of the sound situation are incorrect, and beyond that had nothing to say.

Dean to Make "Escape"

The three Basil Dean productions to be made in England will include "Escape" from the stage play by John Galsworthy; "The Perfect Alibi," stage play produced by Charles Hopkins, and a third yet to be announced.

The three Dean productions are known as Associated Radio Pictures, the result of an international pooling of British-American facilities.

Among the four styled super-specials are listed "The Stalwart," an original railroad drama written by James Ashmore Creelman with Louis Wolheim, Robert Armstrong and Jean Arthur in the cast; "The Old Accordian Man" from an original by Samson Raphaelson, with Joseph Cawthorne heading the cast; "High River" and a fourth to be announced.

Three Richard Dix and two Betty Compson productions are included in the lineup, with "She's My Weakness" and "Bunker Bean," Harry Leon Wilson tale, included in "The Victory Nine," the remaining seven of which are yet to be announced. One of the Compsons will be "Lawful Larceny."

Seven Series of Shorts

Short subjects will consist of: six "Headliners" and six Nick and Tonys, to be made in the East by Louis Brock; six Karl Dane and George Arthurs, six Louise Fazendas and eight Mickey McGuires to be made by Larry Darmour; 12 Humanettes, novelties, to be produced by Frank Newman, and 12 Toby, the Pup, cartoons, to be made by Charles B. Mintz. All of the series, save the cartoons, are in two reels.

Brock has signed W. C. Fields and Clark and McCullough have been signed for the Headliners, with negotiation under way with four other Broadway stars or teams. Mark Sandrich and Monty Brice will direct the series. Nick and Tony comprise a vaudeville team, and this series is to be made with Italian dialect.

Lewis R. Foster is to direct the first Dane and Arthur comedy which will be "Bobbed Wire." Albert Herman continues as director of the Mickey McGuires, with E. V. Durling writing story and dialogue.

Bancamerica-Blair and the Lehmans have exercised option on 50,000 shares of 100,000 on which option is held; Joseph P. Kennedy on 50,000 shares. Of the remaining, 44,000 will be used for conversion of bonds of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Western Corp., and 25,000 for new acquisitions. The firm now is dickering for a number of Greater New York houses.

W. E. Wins Round in Fight Over Patents in Austria

Vienna courts have nullified the Tri-Ergon Austrian patent, involving sound pictures in which incidental music not present in the taking of a picture and recorded on films for reproduction, Western Electric has been advised. Tri-Ergon had sued the company for alleged infringement of this and other patents, and W. E. replied by asking nullification of these patents.

Drinkwater, Not Bader To Write Laemmle Biog

John Drinkwater, member of the English literati, will write and by-line the biography of Carl Laemmle for which Dave Bader has been gathering data for many months. The producer has invited Drinkwater to his Beverly Hills home this summer to whip Bader's information into shape and to supply the author with other necessary details.

Bader, former head of Universal's accessory department, was taken off all other duties some time back to work on the Laemmle biography. His new assignment is exploitation of "All Quiet" in England. He sailed this week to get the new job under way.

Endorsers Elect

Indianapolis—Mrs. David Ross was re-elected chairman of the board of managers of the Indianapolis Endorsers of Photoplays at the annual business session of the organization here. Other officers were: Mrs. Thomas Demmerly, first vice-chairman; Mrs. Carl Day, second vice-chairman; Mrs. James E. Sproule, third vice-chairman; Mrs. Wolf Sussman, fourth vice-chairman; Mrs. Fred H. Knodel, recording secretary; Mrs. J. H. Orndorff, treasurer, and Mrs. E. L. Burnett, membership secretary.

The nominating committee recommended an advisory board to consist of Charles R. Metzger, C. E. Penrod and H. D. Graham, all of whom are in the motion picture business.

Mrs. Sproule, who is chairman of the picture committee, reported that twenty-nine of the thirty-one pictures seen by the committee during April were endorsed. A discussion of various pictures to be shown in the next six weeks closed the session.

Colleen Moore Awarded Quick Divorce Decree

Los Angeles—Cruelty charges won a quick divorce for Colleen Moore from her husband and former business manager, John McCormick. It was uncontested. Miss Moore cited "ugly moods," last-minute breaking of social engagements and repeated insulting of her guests. The star gave her legal name as Kathleen Morrison McCormick. Her mother, Mrs. Adeline Morrison, was in court to corroborate Colleen's charges.

Radio Advertising Service Latest Warner Acquisition

Warners' deal for National Radio Advertising, Inc., gives the company a formidable hold in the field of electrical transcription for broadcasting purposes. By "electrical transcription" is meant recording and eventual reproduction of radio entertainment via records or discs.

National Radio handles radio advertising for Squibbs and other national advertisers, including it is understood Camel cigarettes. The Warners plan to extend the service and to use their own talent in future programs arranged for national advertisers using the radio for exploitation. The plan is expected to swell Warner revenue and also to offer an opportunity to boost talent under company contract.

They say Quaint

A FAMOUS MALE STAR whose first talkie was anything but a great success, has found that when the Hollywood folk think you're slipping, some of them will certainly grease the way down for you. Among other things which were overlooked in the seasons past, but which seem to have been brought up against him recently, is his treatment of his father. He deserves some explanation on this one.

When he was a little boy his father deserted him and he spent his growing years in an orphanage, a childhood which wasn't conducive to sunshiny thoughts about home and family. He had long stretches of bad luck and rough going before he finally arrived and the struggling years left their indelible impression on his social attitude. He often found consolation in imbibing too freely.

But one day his father turned up in Hollywood. You see his son was in the big money and he was famous. The son, remembering the desertion and the lonely years of a charity existence it had meant for him, refused to recognize the father. And some of the sappy sentimentalists, without knowing the facts, started berating the young sheik who turned his back on his humble father, and all that. Which is quite a lot of applesauce because the boy felt he owed no allegiance to his suddenly repentent parent and he saw no reason why he should be a hypocrite for the sake of some gossips who would talk, anyhow.—*N. If there is anything in the lexicon of underworld language that we don't understand, it won't be the fault of the producers. The gangsters certainly have been "glorified" in the recent underworld pictures. Wonder why some of these companies do not engage Al Capone as supervisor? Al could give them a few pointers on gang wars.—N. Y. American.

It is everlastingly to the credit of the motion picture industry that, voluntarily, it has held its medium fairly free from propagandizing influence.

It is because of the careful guidance that has been given the movies of recent years that they have made such strides, and that they have been able to turn aside the censorship movements. Self-censored, the motion picture promises to rise in artistic heights.—Washington, D. C., Post.

Much has been written of the wit and adventures of Wilson Mizner, a Hollywood brilliant. The one-time pride of Broadway was one of the first white men to invade the Klondike. Another was Tex Rickard. When they reached Nome with the other gold rushers, Mizner immediately opened a saloon and gambling emporium. Over the bar was this typical Mizner ethic: "Boost a booster. Knock a knocker and cheat a chump!"—N. Y. Mirror.

The Title's the Thing:

The novelist, seeing great possibilities in the story of Adam and Eve's eviction from the Garden of Eden, wrote a book about it. After deep meditation he named it: "Mrs. Adam of Eden." It had a tremendous sale.

The dramatist, observing the dramatic potentialities of the book, adapted it to the theatre. After deep meditation he named his play "Outcasts from Paradise." It had a record run.

The moving picture producer, noting the success of the play, adapted it for the screen. After deep meditation he named his film "Sinning Wives." It played to packed houses everywhere.—London Opinion.

THE critics would have you believe that hokum is taboo. But they are wrong. There are white haired mothers who sit by the windows, watching for their wandering sons to come home to them. There are wandering sons whose hearts are softened by memories of their childhood. There are little children who reunite their parents. There are men who die in order that the woman they love may be happy. There are prostitutes who reform, and rough men with hearts of gold; and firesides, and cradles, and homes, and mothers' workworn hands. Are these things not as real and true as lust and drug addicts, and child-beaters and shameless courtesans? I will go further. Are these things not realer and truer? We do not exaggerate life in motion pictures. No director would dare to show human beings as Dumas or the writers of moved by such violent emotions, as they are in real life. No director would dare to show such strange happenings, such coincidences as are told every day in the newspapers. No movie director would dare to use as much hokum in his picture as there is in life itself."—Cecil B. DeMille in Motion Picture Classic.

The wide film will be ushered in by a drive on projectors. The wise exhibitor will refuse to be stampeded into a hurried purchase of anything. Comerford Licks Daylight Saving In N. E. Penn.

Scranton, Pa.—In the face of heavy odds and by dint of an exhaustively conceived campaign, M. J. Comerford has been successful in warding off daylight saving in Northeastern Pennsylvania. The mayor's committee, in whose hands the decision rested, late this week voted against adoption of summer time.

The ruling will have an effect on a territory 100 miles in all directions of this city which is the key of the territory, it is estimated, and affects 75 picture theatres.

The fight was a difficult one and, it is considered by those familiar with its details, to be sufficient proof of the importance of the enterprising exhibitor in his community. At the outset, Comerford was faced by opposition fostered by the Rotary, Kiwanis and Lions' Clubs, as well as chambers of commerce, various merchants' associations, clearing houses, golf clubs and automobile associations all of whom favored daylight time as a booster for their interests.

Arranges Counter Hours

To offset this line-up, Comerford got busy with the International Correspondence Schools, headed by Ralph E. Weeks, who registered opposition on the grounds that the confusion created by summer time was bad for general business. He also enlisted John Boylan, representing 27,000 members of the United Mine Workers; Steve McDonald, representing 23,000 members of Building Trade Councils; Ed McCrome, representing 16,000 members of the Central Labor Union and persuaded the Medical Society, formerly advocates of summer time, to reverse their stand. The prestige of dairymen's leagues, grange associations and farmers was also tied into the comprehensive campaign, as was H. T. Paine, representing veterans of the Civil War.

Trailers were shown in various Comerford theatres, speeches made, radio broadcasting arranged and newspaper articles moved into line. By the time the final meeting was held in the city hall, Comerford felt his organization was complete.

Events proved him to be correct, for when the mayor's committee finally cast its vote, opponets of daylight saving recorded a complete victory.

Equity Hopeful

Actors' Equity Ass'n has not given up hope of unionizing the studios, it is indicated in statement of Frank A. Gillmore, president, that "something about Hollywood may be said at our next meeting," which is scheduled for May 26 in New York. He added, however, that any announcement of the association's future plans, as respects pictures, would be premature at present. When Equity dropped the Hollywood fight last year, announcement was made that the move was an armistice.

Fox Budgets $1,300,000 For "Big Trail" Super

Hollywood—Planned as the super-epic on next season's Fox schedule, "The Big Trail" is in production at Yuma, Ariz., under direction of Raoul Walsh. Production staff, technicians, players, extras and others carried by the company to the first location taxed the hotel capacities of the town. Overflow accommodations were secured in auto camps and private homes, while a caterer and his organization were brought up intact from Los Angeles to provide meals for the troupe.

Fox has budgeted "The Big Trail" at a minimum cost of $1,300,000, with final sheets likely to see an increase over that figure. Walsh is carrying a production staff of over 100, including carpenters, painters, chauffeurs, a doctor and nurses. No less than 32 stock men are engaged to look after the 437 horses and 1,500 head of cattle which are being used in the production.

The story itself carries a total of 93 dialogue parts, and players for these roles are on one week minimum contracts. In addition, a large number of extras used as pioneers in the wagon train are carried on contracts for duration of the picture.

Three Grandeur cameras are being used for the wide screen negative, besides a large number of regulation cameras for the standard negative. Walsh is planning on using 250 covered wagons in single shots for his train, even though history claims that the largest wagon train that journeyed west had only a total of 200.

Following completion of scenes on the Yuma location, Walsh will move his scene of operations to various locations in Utah, Wyoming, Idaho and California. Shooting schedule provides for nearly six months' work.

26 of Fox's 48 To Be Ready by September 15

Hollywood—Twenty-six pictures of the 48 which are to comprise the 1930-31 Fox program will be completed and in New York by Sept. 15, according to the schedule being maintained by Sol Wurtzel, general superintendent of the Fox studios. Eight pictures now are in the cutting room, five are in production and six others are ready to start.

Kansas City—Fox West Coast is establishing a special division here, following acquisition of the Midland circuit of 60 theatres in Missouri, Kansas and Iowa. M. B. Shanberg, formerly of Midland, will be chief division executive.

Zukor Swamped

Budapest—Adolph Zukor was "run out of town" when he visited his native Resize, but he was run out by demands for money or other assistance. The Paramount-Publix chieftain was beset by 1,400 applicants for charity out of his "fabulous wealth." Before leaving, Zukor aided some 400 needy and established a fund to provide dowries for poor Jewish brides and a free school for children. For years Zukor has been a benefactor of his "home town" people.

Managers Switched in Fox Topeka Shake-Up

Topeka, Kas.—Several changes in the personnel of Fox Midwest Theatres in Topeka have been announced by Elmer Rhoden, division manager.

Earl Hayes, formerly exploiteer for the National and Jayhawk, has been named assistant manager of the Fox Topeka houses under Harry McClure, city manager. Other changes are as follows:

Don Farquharson, former exploiteer for Midwest Film Distributors, Kansas City, has been appointed house manager of the Jayhawk. Sherman McVenn, who has been doorman at the Jayhawk, has been named manager of the Best. Clifford Sandiffer, former house manager at the Novelty, will be a member of the general exploitation department, while Eldridge Shriver, doorman at the Novelty, becomes house manager. Ray McLain, doorman at the Grand, has been elevated to manager. William Hess has been appointed manager of the Gem.

When the Gem opens with Western Electric equipment on June 15, the Best will be the only Fox house in town showing silent pictures. Improvements are planned for all Fox houses in Topeka.

Fox Convention Plans Set; Clarke to Attend Sessions

The Fox sales convention to be held in Hollywood the end of next week is all set. Harley L. Clarke, new president of the company, will travel on the special train to the coast, thereby taking advantage of the opportunity to visit the studios which he owns but has never seen. The train leaves New York on May 26, picks up Mid-Western members in Chicago and then goes right through to the coast for a week of business.

Walsh-Fairbanks Report Gets Little Credence

Hollywood—Raoul Walsh still has about six months to go on his new picture, "The Big Trial," and there is no chance of his leaving Fox before that time, if he plans to do so then. In view of this, coupled with Douglas Fairbanks' plan to seek services of the Russian director, Eisenstein, little credence is given to report Walsh is planning to join Fairbanks.

Meet Sheehan, Banker

Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager of Fox, has been named a director of the Harriman National Bank & Trust Co.

Canadian Music License Royalty Proposal Out

Ottawa—Proposal to amend the Canadian Copyright Act to enable the Performing Rights Society and other organizations to collect musical royalties from Canadian exhibitors has been dropped, it has been intimated, because of decision to hold general elections in July. Many measures, likely to offend voters, have been thrown into the discard. The copyright bill, sponsored by Secretary of State Fernand Rinfret, had aroused wide opposition. It had received only first reading in the Canadian House of Commons.

Similar copyright proposals have been sidetracked year after year in the Dominion for various reasons.

Pay Tax or Close, Paine Warns Exhibs

Warning to exhibitors and independent producers that they must pay the music license fee demanded by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, has been sounded by John G. Paine, chairman of the Music Publishers' Protective Ass'n. Exhibitors may be forced to close unless they pay the ten per cent seat tax, Paine warns, pointing out that its contracts with the electrics stipulate that the sound films be leased only to wired houses. Prosecution of independent producers who do not pay the license fee is threatened.

Filmfone Abroad

Salt Lake City—Negotiations for increasing the placement of Utah-made reproduction machines of the National Filmfone Corp. of this city in foreign countries were opened recently, it was announced here by E. W. Kelly, president. Shipments have already been made to Genoa, Italy, and Buenos Aires, it is announced.

City Council to Aid Musicians Ousted by Sound

Vancouver—With theatres here and throughout Canada and the United States replacing musicians at a rapid rate, the council and musicians' union are making a stand against mechanical music.

The councilmen declare the remedy is in the hands of ticket buyers, who can express their views through the box office.

Musicians Win

San Francisco — Victory again went to the Musicians' Union in its legal battle against the talkers when the State District Court of Appeals denied a rehearing on its previous ruling that 66 San Francisco theatres, now devoted to sound pictures, must abide by contracts to employ a minimum number of musicians.

New Warner Exchange Dedicated in Chicago

Chicago — About 300 employees and guests of Warner Bros. and subsidiaries attended the dedication of the new Warner exchange building here. The dedication program was presided over by Sam E. Morris, vice-president, who also formally instituted the Chicago Warner Club, which sponsored the dedicatory program. Also in attendance were C. C. Ezell, general sales manager; Gradwell Sears, First National western sales manager; Max Milder, Warner central division sales manager, and H. E. Rosenquest, Vitaphone central division sales manager.

Music Chiefs on Hand

The dedicatory program included addresses by the following: Carl Lesserman, First National; Clarence Parrish, M. Witmark & Sons; Frank Trostler, Brunswick Recording Co.; Walter Donovan, Famous Music Pub. Co.; Harry Rosenquest, Vitaphone; Ward Perry, Remick Music Corp.; C. C. Ezell, Warner; Joe Stool, De Sylva, Brown & Henderson Music Co.; Earle Silverman, Warner; Max Milder, Warner; Gradwell Sears, First National; William Iyman, Vitagraph; S. C. Schultz, Brunswick Recording Co.; Tom Gilliam, First National.

Morris Elected

Sam E. Morris was elected honorary president of the Chicago Warner Club, and Ned E. Depinet of First National, honorary vice-president. Al Blocker was elected sergeant-at-arms of the club.

The new six-story Warner exchange building was opened for the inspection of guests. The local offices of Warner Bros., First National, Vitaphone and Vitagraph were opened during the day.

Coast Film Folk Leave for the East

Hollywood—Jack Warner, Lewis Warner and Robert Crawford go East next week for conferences with Harry Warner on production.

Ramon Novarro goes East for vocal lessons and possible trip abroad.

William Powell leaves soon on vacation trip to Europe.

Joseph M. Schenck leaving within ten days for long stay in New York on United Artists business.

Lillian Roth, Frederic March, and Nancy Carroll to Paramount's eastern studio.

Cut Price Racket At Portland 1st Runs Continues

Portland—Bargain sale [illegible] sions in this man's town. John Hamrick's Blue Mouse is scaled at 5ns at 15 cents top, giving rise to fear that first run pictures will be showing here within 60 days at a five cents top. The Blue Mouse gets 15 cents from 9 A. M. to 1:00, 25 cents up to 6 o'clock and 35 cents thereafter. Children's admission is ten cents anytime.

Vest Pocket Film Device Sponsored by Al Woods

A. H. Woods [illegible] driven him from the stage to the new venture, is to market a pocket film device, called Movie-of-U. For 25 cents the machine produces an animated photo, in which a person may distort his face three ways. The picture is made in six minutes. Sixteen of the machines are to be placed at Coney Island, it is said.

Lonsdale Not Under Long Term Goldwyn Contract

Hollywood—Frederick Lonsdale holds a contract to write one original story for Samuel Goldwyn, and is not under long term contract to that producer, as reported in some quarters. Lonsdale will write Ronald Colman's next, and Goldwyn holds an option on the author's services for two additional stories after completion of the first assignment.

Goetz Supervises

Hollywood—William Goetz has joined Fox as a production supervisor and will handle Don Jose Mojica's next production as his first assignment. Goetz was formerly at First National studios and is a son-in-law of Louis B. Mayer of M-G-M.

Publix Chain in N. E. Up to 147, Katz Announces

Boston—Paramount Publix has 147 theatres in New England, contrasted with 65 a year ago, Sam Katz announced at a regional meeting here. Managers were addressed by A. M. Botsford, director of publicity; Dave Chatkin, George Schaeffer, J. J. Fitzgibbons and M. J. Mullin.

Fire Benefits

Boston — Benefit performances are to be held in Publix theatres in principal New England cities for sufferers in the Nashua fire, Sam Katz wired Gov. Charles F. Tobey of New Hampshire, during the Paramount Publix convention of theatre personnel here. The time and place of the benefits now are being arranged.

Daylight Saving In 11 Cities of Northern Indiana

Indianapolis—Residents of northern Indiana for the most part are retiring an hour earlier than usual, for 11 of the most prominent cities in that section have adopted daylight saving time. South Bend, while not going on the schedule at the time of the others, has signified its intention of doing so immediately.

Popularity of fast time in the state is confined principally to the northern tier of counties, probably because of their proximity to Chicago, which annually begins its days ahead of standard time during the five summer months. In several other cities and towns the adoption of daylight saving was considered, hotly contested by enemies of fast time and as forcibly supported by its proponents.

Industry nearly was unanimous in favor of fast time, although the business and professional men of Plymouth opposed it. At Anderson, the largest industry there, employing more than 7,000 persons, adopted fast time, but the remainder of the city refused to follow.

Elkhart, Plymouth and Mishawaka voted down fast time proposals in their cities by means of the city councils. To the tourist, South Bend and Mishawaka appear to be a single city, because one meets the other, but the clocks in one are an hour ahead of the other.

Prohibited at Indianapolis

Indianapolis is prohibited from operating under a daylight saving plan by an act of the legislature which makes fast time illegal in cities of more than 300,000 population. Valparaiso was preparing a fast time ordinance for this year when it was discovered that an ordinance of last year provided automatic change to fast time each summer. Standard time in most cities will be resumed on Sept. 28. Those cities adopting daylight saving time for the next five months are: South Bend, Michigan City, Valparaiso, Gary, Hammond, Indiana Harbor, Whiting, East Chicago, Crown Point, Kendallville, Fort Wayne and Laporte.

An ordinance now is before the city council at Huntington providing for fast time. The petition was signed by hundreds of names. Last year the city council there voted down the proposition. Despite the fact that Laporte and Michigan City compose four-fifths of the population of that county and both are operating on daylight saving time, the court house clock at Laport continues to operate on standard time "for the benefit of the farmer."

Daylight Saving Gets Trial in Milwaukee

Despite protests on the part of local theatre organization, daylight saving will probably be given a trial here in an unofficial manner. Local newspapers have made daylight saving an issue for the past number of weeks and the general public is apparently in favor of the movement. It will probably go into effect during July and August and a definite schedule is promised within the next two weeks.

Blue Stuff

Topeka, Kan.—Plan of Attorney General William A. Smith for drastic enforcement of "blue" laws throughout the state is regarded as a step in the direction which ultimately will mean repeal of the laws. It is the attorney general's plan to force observance of Sunday closing in all towns of the state, regardless of local sentiment.

Finish of Blue Laws in Indiana Seen in Decision

Indianapolis—Spread of Sunday shows throughout the state is anticipated following decision of the state Supreme Court holding invalid an ordinance attempting to specify an offense against the Sunday closing law. This law will preclude "blue" ordinances, throwing jurisdiction to the state law. The case grew out of the ordinance banning Sunday shows at Crawfordsville. M. Jackson, Strand owner, attacked validity of the ordinance after arrest for alleged violation of it.

Under the state Sunday blue laws, it is rather difficult to secure convictions in this day and age, for the laws are so severe the ordinary jury will not countenance them. They were passed before the Civil War. It has been the custom of cities where Sundays shows were attacked to conveniently pass an ordinance and get convictions.

Daylight Saving Wallops Grosses At Albany Houses

Albany—Daylight saving is causing a drop in attendance here variously estimated at from 20 to 30 per cent. The first show of the evening is taking it on the chin due to fast time and this, coupled with the weather, is making inroads into grosses.

Business is good at the majority of first runs, however, although last week's warm weather nicked grosses by about ten per cent.

Sunday Shows Voted

Brookfield, Mo.—By vote of 5 to 3, Sunday shows have won out here.

4 Towns Vote Sunday Shows

St. Louis—Rushville, Mason City, Vandalia and Prophetsville have voted for Sunday shows.

Fined for Sunday Show

McKinney, Tex.—Fines of $50 each have been levied against H. E. Fulgham and Laney Sexton for operating their theatre on Sunday. They have appealed the decision.

Talkers Licking "Sour Sabbath" In Northwest

Minneapolis—Return of the liberal Sabbath throughout the Northwest is seen as a result of the talker development. Merchants are backing Sunday shows convinced they must have them in order to keep people at home on Sunday. The course is good business, and exhibitors are finding the time ripe to move against "blue" laws.

Throughout Iowa this year there has been a sharp swing to Sunday shows, with many instances of repeal of "Sour Sabbath" measures. Minnesota, too, is feeling the effect of this changed sentiment.

Even in the Dakotas, traditionally "blue," there is strong sentiment for a change, and it is likely that real progress will be made during the year in liberalizing sentiment in those states.

Sunday Shows Voted to Get Films Other Days

Paxton, Ill.—Without a picture house for the last several months this town has voted in favor of Sunday shows. The town's only theatre was closed in February after unsuccessful attempts to make it pay on a six-day week. The theatre will be reopened when and if the village board passes a new ordinance legalizing the Sunday performances. The vote was 710 to 593.

Florida Liberals Win Another Sunday Town

Kissimmee, Fla.—This city staged a hotly contested election, in which the churches fought to kill the movement for Sunday shows, but which resulted in a decided victory for the progressives with 336 votes cast in favor of the proposition and only 182 against it. With this victory there is hardly a city of any size in the state where the Sunday shows are now prohibited.

Demand Referendum on Anti-Sunday Ordinance

Dover, O.—Petitions bearing signatures of 612 leading citizens of this city, asking for a referendum on the anti-Sunday shows ordinance enacted by city council on April 9, has been filed with City Auditor O. L. Youngen. The State, which has been closed for past several months, has been acquired by Marty G. Manthos.

Granville Sunday Shows May Go to Attorney Gen'l

Granville, N. Y.—Whether the board of trustees can get away with its refusal to submit to voters the question of Sunday shows and daylight saving may be tested in appeal of the matter to the attorney general. The board turned thumbs down on Sunday show petition of S. E. Severance, who operates the Pastime.

2 More Sunday Show Towns

Des Moines—Sunday shows have won out in two more Iowa towns at Fontanelle and at Humeston.

Color Far from Technical Perfection; "Much to be Desired," Engineers Hold

S. M. P. E. Committee Working on 70 mm. Standardization for Wide Films

Color has not yet reached a point in technical development where full benefits may be realized, despite the wholesale swing in that direction announced by producers for 1930-1931. This is the opinion outlined in the report of the Progress Committee of the Society of M. P. Engineers which further holds "there is still much to be desired" to improve color processes now in the market.

Discussing technical advances in various branches of the industry, the report states the improvement in sound quality has been marked. It points out that, in the opinion of the committee, production on film wider than 35 mm. has not gone ahead as rapidly as at first predicted, chiefly because of the lack of an agreement on a definite standard for wide frames. Pending an agreement, majority of producers are marking time. As exclusively outlined in Motion Picture News last week, 70 mm. will be accepted as standard by the society's committee now at work with representatives of producers on standardization. The committee has not yet made its report, which is expected within a few days.

Highlights of the report made by the Progress Committee, headed by Glenn E. Matthews, follow:

Increased interest was noted in the past six months in the subject of wide films. Several different widths were proposed, and of these, 70 mm. and 65 appear to have been most favored. A sub-committee of the Standards Committee of this Society held several meetings to encourage the adoption of one width as standard. The personnel of the sub-committee consisted of the leading engineer of the producing organization interested in this problem. A feature picture, "Happy Days," and a newsreel on 70 mm. film, were shown as a regular program, opening March 14 at the Roxy Theatre on a screen 41½ feet by 22 feet. Several other theatres were also equipped to handle this type of film, and at least four feature pictures were known to be in progress.

Definite advances in optical systems, processing methods, and the experience that follows production problems on a large scale, all contributed to a substantial improvement in the quality of color pictures.

Studio, Production Improvements

Two huge sound stages have been completed in Hollywood recently by two producers. One of these comprises a theatre auditorium capable of seating 1500 persons and a section which is also designed as a theatre stage in size, 75 feet deep, 80 feet wide, and 120 feet high. This stage has been designed particularly for the production of lavish spectacles. It is equipped with a steel curtain weighing 65 tons, and each of its 12 floor sections is fitted with a hydraulic lift. A vertical steel track, 65 feet high, permits camera shots in synchronism with the rising stage and curtain.

The increased use made of incandescent lights has necessitated the installation of refrigeration plants in studios in connection with ventilation systems.

A novel feature of the sound studio at Wembly, England, is a tank fitted with a camera booth permitting under water photography. The four new German studios at Newbabelsberg are built as the arms of a cross; all recording and monitoring being done at the center.

A novel lens device for securing wider pictures without the use of wide film is of interest. It consists of two lenses held in a mount which screws onto the front of the camera. A lateral compression of the image is produced so that nearly three times as much image is included in the normal frame. The picture is then expanded to three times normal width on projection.

The added weight of sound-proof housings resulted in the design of stronger tripods. One of these called a "camera dolly," was constructed of telescoping steel parts attached to a triangular, rubber-tired traveling support.

Portable dimmers were devised for use in the Hollywood studio. They were used individually or in connected units of 2 or 3, for sunrise or sunset effects. Each unit handled 20 kilowatts.

A joint committee of the producers' and technicians' branches of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences reported on an investigation of arc lighting in 15 Hollywood studios. Three types of filters were found in use; (a) individual choke coils for each lamp unit; (b) choke coils for each group of lamps; and, (c) the use of large electrolytic capacity across the generator windings. The investigation is being continued with plans for making oscillograph records of the commutator ripple at each studio.

Abadie reported before the cinematographic section of the French Photographic Society on some interesting experiments with gaseous illuminants. Mercury and neon cannot be used effectively in the same tube to give a white light, but when their combined light is supplemented with that from vaporized antimony and arsenic, a good white light is produced for the photography of colored objects. A lamp has been produced which contains neon gas and a cadmium-bismuth alloy at the cathode. After heating, the cadmium is vaporized and its arc given a light of desirable spectral distribution.

Several French studios have commenced sound productions on a large scale, a number of them by the variable area process. Societé Gaumont which until quite recently recorded on the full width of a separate film by the Danish Peterson-Poulson method have adopted fixed density recording in the margin of a separate film. This record is printed subsequently on the border of the film bearing the positive image.

Great interest has been shown in the sound school sponsored by the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences and with the completion of the fifth and sixth sections, more than 900 studio workers will have taken the course. The lectures presented by various authorities before this school have been assembled and published as a Technical Digest.

The Debrie camera has been fitted with a sound-proof housing consisting of a box, containing the motor drive encased under the camera, and a cover on a vertical track which may be lowered or raised quickly by the movement of a hand lever. All controls are accessible from outside the case when it is closed. The merits of 16 different types of camera silencing housings used in Hollywood studios were tested by a joint committee representing the producers and technicians.

Booms for holding the microphone over the actors have undergone material development and several ingenious devices are now available for handling microphones on the set.

Advances in Sound

A modification of the Poulson magnetized wire recording method uses film base impregnated with colloidal particles of an alloy of nickel, cobalt and iron as the magnetically susceptible recording material. The film possesses a slight lavender tint when so treated.

Another novel recording process is that suggested by Madelar which records a groove on the film support by means of a diamond stylus.

Printing machinery was being redesigned rapidly for better quality and more rapid production of sound-on-film prints. One manufacturer of printing equipment brought out a single operation printer and another manufacturer was reported to be working on a new model.

One of several problems connected with the reproduction of sound has been the proper control of sound level in the theatre. Much use and some abuse of fader control has resulted from efforts to correct for volume variations resulting from recording sound at different levels and which were not entirely smoothed out by re-recording. One studio has devised a "squeeze track" for the purpose of adjusting these differences in level. This consists in blocking out part of the sound track by exposing it before development to a negative consisting of a black line of varying width from zero to the full track with. The positive sound track becomes a record of varying width contained between two black lines filling up the remaining space of the track on each side of the track itself, which is in the center of the space.

Equipment for cutting has been developed on a basis of the needs experienced for sound pictures and many of the make-shift devices are giving way to commercial products embodying the necessary features for handling sound films. Three designs of one type of equipment were available for sound film editing: (a) a sound picture synchroniser for use with records on separate films; (b) a disc reproducer; and, (c) an apparatus for use when sound and picture are on the same film.

As a result of a serious studio fire in the east and a laboratory fire on the west coast during 1929, a great deal of pressure was brought to bear on all laboratories to increase their safeguards for fire prevention. Even before the two fires, however, a committee of representatives from all laboratories were appointed by Mr. Will Hays to work with the National Board of Fire Underwriters to re-

The New Age

Motion pictures of living cells of body tissues, made by Dr. Rosenberger at the Rockefeller Institute and shown at the 13th International Physiology Congress, revealed to medical students in one hour, studies which formerly took many days of observation.

Medical pictures can now be taken with objects magnified at least 1,200 times, whereas, 120 times was the highest magnification obtainable two or three years ago.

vise the code of recommended practice for laboratory requirements.

Impending adoption of wide film introduces problems for the film exchanges, since the larger reels will require larger shipping cans, and will cost more to ship because of their increased weight. An average reel of 70 mm. film weighs 34 pounds and rewinding is a man-sized job, requiring care to prevent cinching or tearing of the film.

A new model projector, as well as a new assembly for older models was announced in 1929 which incorporates as a special feature a rear shutter between the lamp house and the gate. Other features of the new model as claimed are: easy and rapid change-over from disc to sound-on-film, and means for maintaining accurate focus and centering of the picture.

The problem of equipping many thousands of theatres for sound reproduction during the comparatively short period of a year and a half has been a serious and gigantic task both from the engineering as well as the economic standpoint.

Films in New Fields

Sound picture projection apparatus is now in active use on trans-Atlantic liners, in a Chicago hotel dining room, and even in railway cars. A successful showing on a Union Pacific trans-continental train was arranged during the fall of 1929. A Delaware corporation has been formed to promote a fleet of specially designed railway coaches as the first unit of a projected nation-wide system of mobile sound theatres to present pictures in small villages. The first theatre for the exclusive showing of sound newsreels opened early in November, 1929, running a continuous show from 10:00 A. M. to midnight.

An audible frequency selector has been designed for use of the projectionist to accentuate, attenuate, or eliminate certain frequencies delivered to the amplifier.

Details have been published on the technical characteristics of all the sound reproducing equipment on the French market. The only French process which is complete from the talking to the production end is that of Gaumont.

A unique generator is being marketed by an Austrian firm located in Vienna. It is known as the Rosenberg crossfield generator. An arc, such as that, in a projector, may be connected directly to the generator and the voltage and current are self regulating. Two of the four commutator brushes are short circuited. When the outer circuit is closed, a magnetic field and an armature field results in the same direction but opposed; the former increasing slowly, the latter rapidly.

A new sound-on-film portable projector equipment by RCA was announced in October, 1929. The projector and sound reproducer is housed in a metal cabinet, 24 inches square and 12 inches wide, mounted on four telescopic legs. Film magazines are located on the art side of the case.

Further details have been made available on the portable sound equipment supplied by Western Electric. The delivery and take-up reels are included on the same shaft inside the projector case. A 60-foot throw is possible giving a picture 7 feet by 8 feet in size.

A continuous projector designed by a Frenchman, M. R. Huc, has several novel aspects to recommend its consideration. Film is passed on a curved track in the form of a part cylinder before a light aperture somewhat higher than that of a single frame. An image is projected onto a mirror in the center of the cylinder and set at an angle of 45 degrees to the light path. The mirror turns at a speed one-half that of the moving film through a slight arc and then returns to the original position, while a shutter cuts off the light momentarily. A stationery image is projected on a screen placed at right angles to the original light source.

Those Clever Japs

Can you imagine a camera capable of shooting 40,000 pictures every second? Japanese inventors have perfected a device which catches that many shots, operating by means of a drive having 180 mirrors, revolving 225 times per second. The camera was designed by the Institute for Physical Research of the University of Tokyo and was first shown at a scientific congress in Tokyo.

The apparatus is said to be invaluable in the medical and engineering fields, where laboratory work necessitates quick lens action.

Square Auditoriums an Advantage

Considerable attention has been given the theatre acoustics problem during the past year. One firm has made an acoustical analysis of over 1,500 theatres and made recommendations for treatment of the auditorium. A lowering of the accepted optimum reverberation time as a function of volume was reported. Theatres with square auditoriums were found in general to have better acoustic properties than long narrow theatres.

Sound motion pictures began to be used for non-theatrical purposes during 1929. The Hotchkiss School in Lakeville, Conn., was reported to be the first school to have sound reproduction facilities installed.

An application of the use of a sound recorded address was made in January, 1930, when a corporation president spoke in eleven different cities on the same evening at the annual President's dinner, through the medium of the sound picture.

Confessions of the defendants in burglary and murder trials were recorded in Philadelphia as a part of an experimental investigation on the value of the sound motion picture in criminal court practice. It is reported that a bureau is to be established for making sound pictures of prisoners so as to have records of their voices, gestures, and mannerisms.

Included in a group of motion pictures shown at the 1929 fall convention of the American College of Surgeons were four sound pictures, three of which were recorded addresses accompanying diagrammatic pictures while the fourth represented an obstetrical operation accompanied by dialogue. The operation was performed by Dr. DeLee, well known Chicago obstetrician and the dialogue was synchronized with the film by a crew of Fox camermen. Dr. DeLee has an elaborate laboratory for motion picture photography in the Lying-In Hospital in Chicago. It is also equipped with an animation department.

Motion pictures of living cells of body tissues were made by Rosenberger working with Carrel at the Rockefeller Institute and shown at the Thirteenth International Physiologists Congress in 1929. Studies requiring days of observation were shown to an audience in half an hour. Fifteen medical films have been prepared in a program under the auspices of the American College of Surgeons, the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America and the Eastman Kodak Company. Subjects made recently deal with acute appendicitis, obstetrics, vestibular function and development of the rabbit's ovum.

Starch of Vienna has made ultra-rapid motion analysis studies of micro-organisms using an Askania High frequency camera. To reduce vibration effect, the camera is attached horizontally to the wall but the microscope may be used either in a horizontal or vertical position. Exposures mostly over 100 per second were used, focussing was done with a green filter interposed, and the arc current reduced to a 5 amperes so as to minimize heating effects on the delicate organisms.

"Industry Alive To Possibilities Of Television"

Preparing for Television

The industry is alive to the possibilities of television and further progress has been made which, although rather slow, is encouraging. Three producers are including reservation of television rights in their contracts. According to estimates by Jenkin about 20,000 amateurs are receiving radio movies which are broadcast from station W3XK, Washington. Other new television stations are WENR, Chicago, operated by the Great Lakes Broadcasting Company, and W2XCR, Jersey City, and W2XCD, Passaic. The last two named stations synchronized radio with the pictures and though the images were said to be hazy, the lip movements were stated to be discernible with the sound.

A new cathode ray tube of receiver giving a picture 4 inches by 5 inches has been described by Zworykin. The method eliminates the high frequency motor previously necessary for synchronization, together with its power amplifier. No moving parts are used. A fluorescent screen aids the eye's persistence of vision and makes possible a reduction of the number of images per second without noticeable flicker. The transmitter is a modified motion picture projector with means for horizontal scanning.

The selection of standards for radio television has been discussed, including picture proportions, number of scanning elements, number of pictures per second, scanning method and direction and phase of current.

A camera capable of taking 40,000 pictures per second by means of a drum having 180 mirrors, revolving 225 times per second was exhibited at a Scientific Congress in Tokyo. The camera was designed by the Institute for Physical Research of the University of Tokyo. Lawrence and Dunning of the University of California have been studying the characteristics of the high voltage spark by means of a camera which has a shutter speed equivalent to the taking of 250,000 pictures per second.

Cinematographic methods were used to time the high speed of the Schneider Cup airplane races held at Calshot, England, in the fall of 1929. A motion picture camera made pictures of the plane as it crossed the start and finish line and also recorded simultaneously the face of a calibrated Veeder counter which was actuated by a timing fork vibrating 10 times per second.

As noted earlier in this report the use of motion pictures in color continues to expand and a number of new processes have appeared although technical descriptions of them have been rather meager. An estimate has been made that 15 per cent of all pictures made in 1930 will be in color.

New U. K. Color Process

Newsreels made by a new color process were released by Pathe in March, 1930. The process is claimed to be equally as rapid in production as black and white prints and to avoid the use of filters and prisms. Pictures of the New Orleans Mardi Gras floats were made and shown in New York the following week.

In the Raycol two-color additive process, demonstrated in England, light entering the camera is divided into two parts by means of a beam splitter and is then caused by a system of rhomboids to form two images one-quarter normal size in opposite quarters of the frame on standard size film, one through an orange filter and the other through a blue-green filter. A twin lens projector with the appropriate filters over the lens superimposes the two positive images on the screen.

The Kodel camera exposes four pictures on each frame of 16 mm. film by a mechanism which introduces an alternate horizontal and vertical movement on a rear projector screen, the images being reflected from a shielded mirror onto the screen. McKay described methods of producing distortion effects by exposing motion pictures through opthalmic prisms and an auxiliary lens.

A non-intermittent amateur projector employs a 12-sided prism in a cylindrical mount which revolves between the aperture and the objective.

A passenger airplane flying from Columbus, Ohio, to Los Angeles was equipped to show motion pictures on 16 mm. film en route. The projector was operated with dry cells and a daylight screen was used.

An unbreakable film was described which consisted of strips of 16 mm. film, 4¾ inches long, scaled between thin pieces of steel which had had holes cut through for the pictures and the film perforations. These strips were projected by stacking them in a projector magazine where an electro-magnet picks up the top strip which is then moved intermittently past a horizontal aperture. A mirror deflects the image along a horizontal axis onto a translucent screen.

A recent survey made by the secretaries of the 32 Film Boards of Trade of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America revealed that there were 22,624 motion picture theatres operating in the United States. About half the total number were wired for sound pictures. There were reported to be 57,743 theatres in the world as shown by a census taken by the Motion Picture Division of the U. S. Department of Commerce. With the increased total for the United States shown in the Board of Trades report, the world total would be 59,867.

It was estimated that a half billion dollars were invested in sound motion picture development during 1928 and 1929. Exports of film increased in 1929 over 1928, 282,000,000 feet being shipped out in 1929 as compared with 222,000,000 feet in 1928.

Pictures made in studios of America companies represent 85 per cent of all film entertainment, although United States producers make less than half of the world's feature product. The yearly payroll of Hollywood producers reaches $100,000,000, averaging $2,000,000 weekly.

Valuable summaries of development in the motion picture industry were published during 1929 in the Encyclopedia Britannica. The subjects treated and the authors were as follows: History, T. Ramsaye; Production, J. L. Lasky; Sets, C. Gibbons; Acting, M. Sills; Direction, C. B. DeMille; Make-Up, L. Chaney; Technology, C. E. K. Mees.

A section of the 1930 Supplement of the New International Encyclopedia deals with motion pictures and was prepared by R. Watts. In the article on Photography in this same publication, G. E. Matthews reviews the growth of Motion Pictures from 1914 to 1929.

New publications were the Journal of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, Journal of the Acoustical Society of America, Projection Engineering Electronics, and Cinematography.

Hollywood—Dorothy Sebastian had just hired a new colored maid, and another maid on the lot was showing her the ropes.

"Ah think Ah'm goin' ta like it out heah. Miss S'bashion seems so nice."

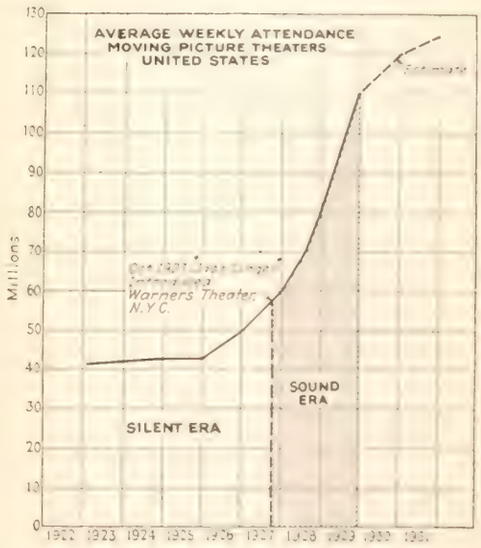
"Say, gal," the other maid said, "you might as well learn right now that while you is talking about it whar anyone kin heah you, des is all nice out heah."

Mayor Demands Right to Okay Theatre Lessee

Boston—Although the residents of West Newton voted 3 to 1 in favor of granting the application of the Kenmore Realty Corp. to construct a theatre there, Mayor Sinclair Weeks, in granting a building permit provisionally, made the following unique stipulations:

"I shall grant a moving-picture theatre license to operate seven days a week, to be exercised on the property at 1300 Washington street, West Newton, provided the following conditions are complied with:

"First, that a lease satisfactory to the Players' Inc., be executed with that organization. Second that the front elevation of the theatre shall be approved by me before erection. Third, that the lessee of the theatre be satisfactory to me, as far as responsibility is concerned. Fourth, that no advertising matter be displayed outside of the theatre except as follows: the name of the play, name or names of principal actors and photographs of the actors in frames. One frame on either side of the entrance, not to exceed in dimensions three feet by five feet, together with the usual electric display signs."



The mayor, however, does not demand the privilege of selecting the pictures to be shown or of fixing the price scale. Before granting the application he demanded that the people of West Newton vote on the question. The new theatre will seat 1,557.

THE

Projectionists' Round Table

By John F. Rider

THE first part of the review of mathematics will be concluded in this, the second lesson.

We concluded the last lesson with a brief discussion of fractions. This subject will be discussed to greater length in this issue.

When a fractional value of a unit amount of voltage is available, whether the reduction or loss is premeditated or it is an undesired state, it may be of interest to learn the amount of voltage which will be available if the same degree of loss exists but the initial value is augmented. In other words if the original voltage is 1 volt and ⅔ is available for use because of some loss, we may be interested to know how much voltage will be available if the original value is increased to 5 volts. Such a solution involves the multiplication of a fraction and a principle of operation is available to govern such procedure. This law is as follows: Multiplying the numerator or dividing the denominator of a fraction by a number multiples that fraction by that number.

Suppose we consider the problem quoted, and multiply the numerator by 5,

$$\frac{2}{3} \times 5 = \frac{10}{3} = 3\frac{1}{3}$$

Hence, if a one-third loss was always taking place for each volt applied and we had an original voltage of 5 volts, 5/3 would be lost, or 1⅔ volts would be lost with 5 volts applied, making available for application, the value shown above. If each volt is divided into 3 parts and we have 5 volts, we have 15 parts. If 5 parts are lost, 10 parts are available. Since each 3 parts is the equivalent of 1 volt, $10/3 = 3\frac{1}{3}$ volts.

Let us now consider the case of where the original voltage is 5 volts and one third is always lost. This means that, according to the previous calculation 10/3 volts are available. Suppose that the original voltage is cut to one volt and the device which causes the one third loss is still present. What will be the available voltage when the original is reduced? It now is necessary to divide the fraction instead of multiply as was carried out before. A new principle is available for this work. This law reads as follows: If the numerator of a fraction is divided by a number or the denominator of a fraction is multipled by a number, that fraction is divided by that number. Suppose that we divide the numerator of the fraction by 5, then

$$\frac{10}{3} \div 5 = \frac{2}{3} \text{ volt}$$

Multiplying the denominator to divide a fraction is of interest when the fraction represents a value less than one. Suppose that the original voltage is one volt and that the loss is such that only 2/5 is available. What will be the available voltage if the original voltage is reduced to one quarter or divided by 4. Now we multiply the denominator by the number in order to divide the fraction, hence

$$\frac{2}{5 \times 4} = \frac{2}{20} = \frac{1}{10}$$

Defines Reciprocals

Reciprocals—Certain electrical formula involve the term reciprocal and the consequent calculation. The definition for the reciprocal of a number is one divided by that number. Suppose that we desire the reciprocal of 10. Such an expression would be

$\frac{1}{10} = .1$. In turn the reciprocal of .1 is $\frac{1}{.1} = 10$

Special mention of the reciprocal is made at this time because the form of computation arises during the discussion of resistances in D.C. circuits and during the discussion of other parts of a sound system.

Decimals—All fractions which have 10, 100, 1000, 10000, etc., for the denominators are known as decimal fractions. Such fractions are $\frac{17}{10}$, $\frac{17}{100}$, $\frac{978}{1000}$, etc. As a means of convenience it is customary to omit the denominator by placing a decimal point in the numerator at such point in the numerator that there shall be as many figures to the right of the decimal point as there are ciphers in the denominator.

Thus $\frac{17}{10}$ is the same as 1.7; $\frac{17}{100}$ is the same as 0.17 and $\frac{978}{1000}$ is the same as 0.978, etc. In some instances a cipher is placed to the left of the decimal point when there is no figure in front of the decimal point, as in 0.17 and 0.978.

Lesson Number Two

In this, the second lesson of John F. Rider's course in sound projection, the first part of the review of mathematics will be concluded. In the first, there was a brief discussion of fractions which is now gone into in greater length.

In the event that there are fewer figures in the numerator than there are ciphers in the denominator, it is necessary to add ciphers to the right of the decimal point between the figures and the decimal point. This is illustrated in the following

$\frac{1400}{100000} = .01400$ and $\frac{4}{1000000} = .000004$ and $\frac{65}{1000} = .065$

The above figures are of importance, at least the mode of expression is of importance in all electrical work, because values are generally expressed as decimals of a quantity rather than fractions. As a matter of fact, certain terms, which shall be described later are ascribed to decimals to indicate fractions of a unit value or multiples of a unit value.

With the decimal point in any one position to indicate the decimal equivalent of a fraction, each place moved to the right multiplies the decimal by ten. Each place moved to the left, divides the decimal by 10.

Fractions and Decimals

Common Fraction to Decimal—The occasion frequently arises when it is necessary for the sake of simplicity to convert a common fraction to its decimal equivalent. This can be done by annexing ciphers to the numerator and dividing by the denominator. The decimal point in the denominator should be so placed that the number of decimal places is equal to the number of ciphers annexed to the numerator. For example:

$\frac{3}{4} = 4)3.000 = .750$ $\quad \frac{1}{6} = 6)1.000 = .166+$ $\quad \frac{5}{8} = 8)5.000 = .625+$

The + sign in the answer signifies that if the division is carried further additional figures will be secured.

Decimal to Common Fraction—To convert a decimal to a common fraction, replace the decimal point in the fraction by a denominator the numeral 1 succeeded by as many ciphers as there are decimal places in the original fraction. Thus

$.875 = \frac{875}{1000}$ $\quad .17 = \frac{17}{100}$ $\quad .0000076 = \frac{76}{10000000}$

Addition and Subtraction of Decimals—Space is not required for this subject in view of the fact that decimals are added and subtracted just as uneven values of dollars and cents are subtracted or added. The decimal point in the answer is placed under the other decimal points.

Multiplication of Decimals—This subject has been found to confuse most people. To multiply decimals, multiply as whole numbers and then mark off in the answer, starting from the extreme right and working left as many decimal places as the sum of the numbers of the places in the factors. For example:

.000056 × .0000025	2.500 × .006
.000056	2.5
× .0000025	× .006
280	.0150
112
.0000000001400

When multiplying a whole number by .1, .01, .001, or .0001, etc., move the decimal point to the left by 1, 2, 3 or 4, etc. places. Multiplying by 10, 100, 1000, 10000, etc., moves the decimal point to the right by 1, 2, 3, 4 etc., places. Dividing a whole number .1, .01, .001, .0001, etc., moves the decimal to the right by 1, 2, 3, 4, etc., places. Dividing by 10, 100, 1000, 10000, etc., moves the decimal point to the left by 1, 2, 3, 4, etc., places.

Percent and Ratios

Percent as Fractions—It is quite common in electrical circuits to refer to fractions as percents with decimal expression of the fraction. Generally speaking the term percent refers to hundreds or 100 as for example 33% means $\frac{33}{100}$, 50% means $\frac{50}{100}$, 89% means $\frac{89}{100}$, etc. Interpreting these fractions into decimals we have .33, .5 and .89 respectively.

Ratio—Ratio is quite important in electrical work, particularly when concerned with the operation of the amplifying system with the adjustment of the gain control, the selection of parts for the amplifying system, the calculation of just how much amplification will be secured under certain conditions, and sundry other such functions in and off an amplifier.

Ratio is an expression stating the relation between two quantities. This relation may be applied to quantity or magnitude. As a matter of interest the term is more complicated than the actual solution. The ratio between two numbers, one number to another, is the quotient of the first number divided by the second. Thus the ratio between 10 to 5, usually expressed 10:5 is $\frac{10}{5}$ or 2.

Essentially a ratio is a fraction, hence the principles which apply to the operation of fractions apply to ratios. It is interesting, however, to note that ratios may be expressed in two ways, with a different answer in each case. We can talk of the ratio of a higher number to a lower number and of the ratio of a lower number to a higher number. The ratio of 10:5 is 2, but the ratio of 5:10 is .5. The latter ratio is the inverse of the former. The exact significance, as a matter of fact the application of the ratio expression, is based entirely upon what is being determined. In electrical circuits it can represent a loss or a gain in the system.

As is evident, there is a definite relation between the two expressions. One quantity is twice as great as the other and the other quantity is equal to one half of the other.

Powers and Roots

A great deal of the work carried out in sound systems involves the use of powers and roots, generally squares of numbers and square roots of numbers. The expression for a square of a number introduces little difficulty since it is a matter of simple multiplication. Square root, however, is a different problem. The men who can use slide rules or other mechanical contrivances developed for mathematical solutions are well situated, but experience shows a great lack of general knowledge relative to the normal method of arriving at the square root quantities of whole or fractional numbers. However, before we enter upon square root, let us devote a small amount of time to the powers of numbers.

Technical journals, in order to conserve space and typesetting, make use of powers instead of writing out the complete numbers. When several numbers are multiplied, these numbers are called factors. The final result is the product. In other words $10 \times 3 = 30$. The numbers 10 and 3 are factors whereas the number 30 is the product. As is evident the number 10 and 3 are different. If however we multiply like numbers such as 10×10, the answer 100 is no longer known as the product. Instead it bears a special appellation. It is known as a power. The number 100 is now a power of 10, and 10 is the base of the power. A complete definition for a power would then state, that a power is a product obtained by using a base a certain number of times as the factor. Thus 10 is used two times as the factor, being multiplied by itself.

Now, it is possible to write that $10 \times 10 \times 10 = 1000$, in which case 1000 is again the power of 10. Instead of repeating the numeral 10 three separate times with the multiplication sign between each whole number, we can designate the number of times the base must be used as a factor. This designation is known as the exponent and is a small figure, to the right of the base and slightly higher than the level, as for example 10^2 signifies that 10 must be multiplied by 10 or 10×10. The expression 10^3 means that 10 must be multiplied three times or the base must be used as a factor three times, as for example $10 \times 10 \times 10$. The exponent of a power is a small number placed to the right of the base and above it, to show how many times the base is used as a factor.

If the base is used two times as the factor, the power is called the second power or the square, and the exponent of the power is a 2. If the base is used three times as the factor, the power is called the third power or the cube and the exponent of the power is a 3. The higher powers have no special names, being designated simply by the exponent, for example $5^9 = 5 \times 5 \times 5 \times 5 \times 5 \times 5 \times 5 \times 5 \times 5 = 1828125$.

If the exponent is a simple number as shown, the multiplication is accomplished as shown. If, however, the exponent of the exponent is preceded by a — sign, as for example 10^{-2}, it means that the power is a decimal, in this case .01 instead of the 100 when the — sign did not precede the exponent.

French—and Tough!

Hollywood — They were producing "Women Everywhere" on location for Fox. An admiral had to make a welcoming speech in French, but the bit player that had been supplied by the casting office for the part was not a good French linguist. Another player had to be secured—but shooting would be delayed half a day by sending to the studio for another player. A poll of the extras and others on location to find one that could speak acceptable French discovered an extra who could rattle off the language in fine style.

He was hustled into the admiral's uniform, and went through the needed scenes in fine style. Later it was discovered that the extra had worked the day before as a roughneck deckhand!

Square Root

The numbers 1, 4, 9, 16, 25, 36, 49, 64, 81 which are the squares of the numbers 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9 respectively should be carefully remembered. Such numbers as these are called perfect squares and they are the only whole numbers less than 100 of which we can find the square roots. The perfect squares become still more scarce as we pass the numbers above 100.

The square root of 49 is 7 but the square root of 56 can neither be expressed as a whole number nor can it be expressed as a decimal exactly. It remains to devise a method by which we can find the square root of such a number to any desired number of decimal places and as accurately as we wish.

It does not matter to the practical man how the conclusion is reached, but it is of great importance to him that the result be compounded quickly and accurately. An attempt is made in the following paragraphs to tell in as simple a manner as possible how to find the root.

Process for the Square Root of a Perfect Square

Example 1. Find $\sqrt{522729}$

Process

      52'27'29 ( 723 Ans.
      49
      ---
142   327
      284
      ----
1443   4329
       4329
       ----

Explanation

First, separate the number into periods of two figures each, beginning at the right, and placing a mark between them. The number of periods thus formed is equal to the number of figures which will be found in the root.

Find the largest perfect square which is equal to, or less than the left hand period, 52. We find the perfect square, 49. Write it under 52 and put its square root 7, to the right as the first figure of the root. Take the difference of 49 from 52 and bring down the next group 27, and unite with the remainder 3, thus obtaining 327.

Take twice 7, the first figure of the root and write it to the left of 327. Obtain the number of times this 14, is contained in 32 and 2 is derived for the second figure of the root. Place this figure 2 in the root and also to the right of 14, making 142. Multiply 142 by 2 and write the product 284 under 327. Subtract these two figures and bring down and unite the next two units, 29 with the remainder 43 thus obtaining 4329. In the above work 327 is called the first remainder, 14 the trial divisor; 142, the true divisor; and 4329, the second remainder.

Next multiply 72 by 2 and write it to the left of 4329 as done in the previous case. Find how many times 144 is contained in 432 which is 3 for the last figure of the root, place this figure 3 in the root and also to the right of 144 making 1443. Multiply this number by 3 and write the product under 4329, the remainder is zero, therefore, 723 is the exact square root of 522,729. In other words 723×723 or 723^2 equals 522,729.

Example 2. Find $\sqrt{6780816}$

Process

      6'78'08'16 (2604 Ans.
      4
      ---
46    278
      276
      ----
5204   20816
       20816
       -----

Explanation

First, separate the number into periods of two figures as illustrated in the first example. We then find the greatest square, 4, in the left hand period, write it down under 6, and place the square root, 2, for the first figure of the root, obtain the difference of 4 from 6, and bring down the next group of figures, 78 and combine it with the 2, making the first remainder 278.

Take twice 2 the first figure of the root and find out how many times it is contained in the first remainder, excepting the right hand figure 8. The number is 6, which ranks as the second figure of the root and also at the right of 4, making it 46. Multiply this number by 6 and subtract the product 276 from the first remainder 278. Bring down and unite the next period to the difference of 2, making the next remainder, 208.

Multiply the root 26, by 2, and bring down the product 52 to the left of 206. Find out the number of times this is contained in 20, which gives zero for the third figure of the root. Place this zero in the root and also to the right of 52 making it 520. Since nothing is gained by multiplying 520 by zero and subtracting it the result which is zero from 208, this process is omitted and the next period 16, is combined with 208 making 20,816 the next remainder.

Multiply the three figures of the root 260 by 2 and place the result 520 to the left of the remainder. This is contained in 2081 four times. Place the 4 as the last figure of the root, and also to the right of 520, making it 5204. Multiply this by 4 and subtract from the remainder. As the difference is zero 2604 is the exact square root of 6,780,816, that is, 2604×2604 equals 6,780,816.

Square Root of a Number Containing a Decimal

Example 1. Find $\sqrt{665.1241}$

Process

Explanation

Here the division into periods is made by beginning at the decimal point and going in both directions. The rest of the work is the same as examples 1 and 2.

The reader should note that the second trial divisor, 50 contained in the first three figures of the second remainder, 4,012 eight times. However, if 8 were used as the root it would give a number larger than 4,012 when the true divisor was multiplied by it

The decimal point in the root is so placed that there are as many whole number figures

High and Low On Music Row

BECAUSE the Los Angeles public library did not contain enough data on the 18th century, Bobby Dolan and Walter O'Keefe, composers of the entire score for "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," made a flying trip to Berkeley, where they found, in the archives of the University of California library, sufficient authentic information on the atmosphere of the 1780's to complete the score. Such titles as "The Pump Song," "Peggy's Leg," "Song of the Town of Bath" and "Duelling Song" are typical of the time and express the mood of the story.

What is rapidly becoming a great favorite with orchestra leaders is "Anchors Aweigh," the spirited song of the Navy, which Robbins Music Corp. is publishing. With a revised modern arrangement of the original score, written by Charles A. Zimmerman, musical director of the U. S. Naval Academy at Annapolis, this number has all the earmarks of becoming a hit.

A strong exponent of truth in advertisement, Sam Serwer, director of music publicity and exploitation for Warner music subsidiaries, has conceived a novel title page for the comedy song, "To the Steins," published by Witmark. Serwer had all the Steins employed in the Warner building affix their John Hancocks—er—beg pardon—their Steins to a large stein (empty) which adorned the title page. Walter Doyle wrote this number.

With one English importation, "I Never Dreamt You'd Fall in Love with Me," selling like the w. k. hotcakes, Santly Brothers have again delved into the catalogue of Campbell-Connelly of London and bought the American rights to "Give Yourself a Pat on the Back," a novelty cheer-up song, and "Ever So Goofey," which they claim was quite a tickler across the big pond.

That warm spell a couple of weeks ago probably was responsible for Walter Donaldson writing "There's a Wah Wah Gal in Agua Caliente," which is every bit as hot a number as "'Tain't No Sin." This number is a welcome addition to the Donaldson, Douglas & Gumble catalogue.

Pat Flaherty, general manager of Red Star Music Co., is enthused over the score contained in "Movietone Follies of 1930," which includes "I'd Love to be a Talking Picture Queen," "Here Comes Emily Brown," "Doing the Derby," "Cheer Up and Smile," "You'll Give In," "I Feel that Certain Feeling Coming On" and "I'm Bashful." "I'm in the Market for You," from the Fox production, "High Society Blues," is fast becoming one of the best sellers.

Mulhall, Carol Featured, but Brendel Tops

Hollywood — Although Fox produced "The Golden Calf" with Sue Carol and Jack Mulhall in the co-featured spots, Fox West Coast Theatres has elevated El Brendel to the lone featured position in advertising the picture this week at Loew's State Theatre. Brendel, who carries the comedy role, gets top billing in the newspaper displays, besides having similar position in special snipes for the regulation 24-sheet lithos posted around Los Angeles.

Enrollment in the Music Defense League, being organized by the American Federation of Musicians to protest against replacement of musicians in theatres, is nearing the 2,500,000 mark, the federation claims. It charges that "industrialists who control canned music in theatres" are trying to banish musicians from theatres in favor of mechanical music.

Hollywood—William Haines will be starred in "Remote Control" for M-G-M, with Mal St. Clair directing. Sam Shipman is adapting.

Talker Publishing Firm

Talkie Picture Publishing Co. has been formed in New York to publish only plays written directly for the screen. "Broken Melody" by M. J. Spivack is the first offering.

Cleary Becomes Broker

Hollywood—Maurice Cleary, husband of Mae McAvoy, has became associated with the local office of Schwabacher & Co., stock brokers.

De Mille Preparing

Hollywood—William de Mille is preparing to direct "The Passion Flower" for M-G-M. Martin Flavin is writing the adaptation and dialogue.

Before the "Mike" In N. Y. Studios

THEIR first Vitaphone Variety, "Taxi Talks" having proved a hit, Spencer Tracy of "The Last Mile" and Katherine Alexander of "Hotel Universe" again journeyed to Flatbush, where they made "The Hard Guy," which is from the pen of Betty Ross. Arthur Hurley directed.

Valli Roberts, four-year-old juvenile who played in "The Hard Guy," seems headed for a bright future. Although cast with such troupers as Tracy and Miss Alexander, she didn't miss a line and even prompted the others who stumbled. The talent is hereditary, her father having been a circus performer of note.

* * *

Taking it for granted that music hath charms, everyone at the Eastern Vitaphone studios had a charming time last week with a schedule calling for four Varieties featuring Ruth Etting, Barbara Newberry, who last week said "I do" with Eddie Foy (not a moving picture), the Yacht Club Boys and Robin, the walking music store. Harold Levy, general director of music at that studio, was busier than the w. k. one-armed paper hanger.

* * *

And talking about music, Murray Roth, director-in-chief of Warner eastern production, warbles every song before it is synchronized, Murray once being among those that write the nation's songs.

* * *

Wallace Sullivan, New York newspaper man, has been added to the writing staff at the eastern Vitaphone studios. He is the author of two recently produced Vitaphone varieties, "The Master Sweeper," starring Chester Conklin, and "Strong Arm," a drama of the death house.

Louis Brock has signed another comedian to an RKO contract to make a series of two-reelers for two years. The comedian is none other than Henry Armetta, who was given his first real break by Raymond Hitchcock.

* * *

Hal Thompson, who scored in the juvenile lead in the Paramount production, "Leave It to Lester," has been rewarded with a similar role opposite Lillian Roth in "Animal Crackers," starring the Four Marx Brothers, now in production at the Paramount New York studio under Victor Heerman's direction.

The Paramount music department has moved back into the building that was originally intended to house the songwriters. Their new quarters are much brighter, larger, and the southern exposure may prove an inspiration to write bigger and better songs.

* * *

The Sharpshooters—no, we're wrong again, the Marxmen, were presented with a private dressing room built on the main stage. Through an error, no doubt, on the part of the carpenters, the d.r. strongly resembles a prison cell with their respective names, Chico, Groucho, Harpo and Zeppo, over the four barred windows. Another remarkable co-incidence seems to be that the printer, instead of printing "Animal Crackers Emporium" was also guilty of mayhem and wrote instead "Animal Crackers Hoosegow."

* * *

Lillian Roth's kid sister, Ann (here's hoping that the printers don't tag an "e" onto the name) has a part in "Animal Crackers" and is rapidly acquiring "the knack."

THE STUDIO SLEUTH.

• Stop Us If We're Wrong •

JOSEPH CAWTHORN has been assigned one of the principal parts in Victor Herbert's "Babes in Toyland," which Radio Pictures will produce on its 1930-31 program. The cast includes Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey, and Dorothy Lee, with Everett Marshall, Metropolitan opera baritone, and Irene Dunne, Broadway musical comedy star, co-featured.

Sally O'Neill and her sister, Molly O'Day, arrived in New York Wednesday to play in RKO vaudeville.

A Dumbbell's Downfall

Dorothy Lee. A motion picture player and very much in demand. She was born in Hollywood. A pretty kid and a fine dancer, she had an idea that she might some day become a picture star. She visited the various studios and could secure nothing but extra work.

One of the studio heads took a liking to the child.

"You'll never get anywhere in pictures, kid," he told her. "You haven't got that certain something that the fans want. Better get the idea out of your noodle."

Dorothy gave up the picture idea and came to New York. After a struggle, she landed with Fred Waring's Band. They gave her $90 a week. The talkies suddenly arrived. Waring's Band went into one of the first. Dorothy Lee went with it—and proved a sensation.

A picture concern grabbed her and signed her for $1,000 a week. With much publicity, they sent her back to Hollywood whence she had come. When she arrived, a gang of studio hirelings were there to greet her for the sake of more publicity. And among them was the ex-studio head who had given her the big advice talk a few years before.

She had returned as a screen star. And he had lost his job.

It Was Inevitable

A thousand gag-men appeared with wise-cracks about yesterday's sky-marvel.

They tell the story of the director who asked a producer if he was going to see the eclipse.

"Maybe I better," replied the executive, "find out when it opens and try to get some seats."

Better Conditions For Extras Being Evolved on Coast

Hollywood—Decided improvement in the working conditions of women and minor picture extras is forecast in current discussions on changes in the regulations of the California Industrial Welfare Commission.

Changes in the state welfare department's rules to improve conditions of the extras, besides clarification of various clauses due to difficulties presented through production of talkers, are being made with coperation of Fred Beetson and other executives of the Producers Association, who initially suggested various amendments for betterment of film extras' working conditions.

Preliminary discussions have been held for several weeks on the suggested changes, amendments and additions to the Welfare Commission's regulations governing extras' employment. Further meetings are being held this week for preparation of final draft, and official announcement on the changes is expected within the next ten days.

Changes Considered

Although unofficial, it is understood that the changes, additions and amendments under consideration include provision for the following betterments:

1. Singers and dancers receiving less than a fixed maximum daily or weekly wage will come under "extra" classification.
2. Provision will be made for maximum number of hours' work before first meal period is allowed by the producer.
3. On weather permitting or cancelled calls, studios will pay full checks if any recording or photographing is done while waiting on partial checks for orders. If no set call-back is received for later date, those on cancelled list receive partial payment of day checks.
4. Time limit for waiting is placed on requested interviews, with producers paying on certain fixed schedule for delays over allotted period.
5. Provision made for payment to women and children for overnight travel to locations.
6. Maximum time a woman or minor extra may work within one day is fixed, besides provision for rest period before studio can call back for another day's work.
7. Hourly payments for overtime will be fixed for those extras on weekly salary basis. Similar regulations for extras on day basis being prepared.
8. Negotiable checks are to be paid upon completion of each day's work for those on day checks.
9. Producers are required to serve meals and hot drinks if extras are employed nights.

It is expected that the new additions to the Industrial Welfare Commission's regulations will greatly improve the conditions of the extras. The changes under consideration have been suggested after long experience with operation with the present rules of the Commission, and have been made to keep up with the progress and changes of the motion picture industry insofar as production is concerned.

Extras' Total on Studio Payrolls Is $10,000,000

Hollywood—Motion picture extras received a total of $10,447,580.37 from the major producing companies on the coast from January, 1926, to April, 1930, inclusive.

These figures were revealed by Fred Beetson, executive vice-president of the Producers Association and in direct charge of the Central Casting Corporation. Exactly 1,186,444 placements were made by the casting office during that period, for an average daily pay check of $8.71.

Central Casting Corporation was established in January, 1926, to centralize the calls for extra talent from all members of the Producers Association. When first launched, total registrations reached the amazing total of 12,000, and an attempt was made to shave this number of applicants down to a figure that would assure the extras available of livable incomes. The list was being reduced through refusals to accept further registrations when the advent of sound made a complete reorganization necessary to include registrations for various languages.

Requirements of dialogue pictures made cross-index classifications imperative, and also jumped the registration list up to 17,541.

Tibbett to Star in "New Moon" for M-G-M

Hollywood—Lawrence Tibbett's second filmusical for M-G-M will be "New Moon," from the operetta by Oscar Hammerstein. Picture will carry original musical score and numbers by Sigmund Romberg. Sylvia Thalberg and Frank Butler are preparing the adaptation, with Charles MacArthur assigned to write the dialogue.

Grace Moore will be co-starred with Tibbett in the production, with direction assigned to Jack Conway, who recently completed Lon Chaney's first talker, "The Unholy Three."

Ann Christy to Sennett

Hollywood—Ann Christy goes over to Sennett Studios to play the leads in three Mack Sennett Comedies. First will be "Good Bye Kiss" with Andy Clyde.

Austin, Tex.—Tele-photophone motion pictures, by which a master picture will be reproduced simultaneously in theatres all over the nation, will eventually replace talkers as well as silents, if the prediction of Col. H. A. Cole, of Dallas, materializes.

Col. Cole, who heads the Texas Theatre Owners' Ass'n, made this prediction at a meeting of central Texas theatre owners in this city last week. How soon the predicted change will take place Col. Cole did not say.

Nebraska Studes Can Picnic On Sundays, Anyway

Lincoln, Neb.—More than 10,000 University of Nebraska students will have to drive 65 miles to Omaha if they want to see a show on Sunday after Havelock, suburban shoptown, is annexed to Lincoln.

Lincoln, long a blue town, has successfully kept its theatres closed on Sunday despite years of protests from thousands of university students. Havelock's two movies appeased the collegians somewhat—but now they're doomed to Sabbath darkness.

Havelock will soon become a part of Lincoln. When annexation is completed, Sunday movies will be out, according to city officials.

"I don't see what can be done," Richard O. Johnson, Havelock city attorney, has said. "The Lincoln ordinance is on the books and no preference will be shown even if Havelock wanted it."

Picnics, the favorite Sunday pastime for the boys and girls, will soon be their only diversion. Gas stations and delicatessen shops (the few left open by the Lincoln city fathers) are preparing for a big season.

The money spent by the university students in Lincoln is directly responsible for most of the town's development, despite the fact that it is the state capital. The week-end trek to Omaha, however, by the collegians who can afford the hop is due to double when the Havelock shows close, according to campus reports.

There are five downtown theatres in Lincoln. Havelock's two theatres are the Joyo, operated by C. F. Frazier, and the Lyric, run by C. T. Guffie.

Independent Buys Product

Cleveland—Independent Pictures, Inc., has purchased the following product for release in Ohio: Five Chesterfield all-talking features with RCA recording on both film and disc, the first to be released being "Ladies in Love," starring Alice Day and Johnny Walker; "After the Fog," all-dialogue with Mary Philbin; "Romance of the West," all-dialogue western feature; "Overland Bound," all-dialogue western with Leo Maloney, Wally Wales, Jack Perrin and Allene Ray; 18 Walt Disney Alice single reel synchronized cartoons; 14 two-reel Kiddy Trouper comedies, featuring children of popular screen and stage stars, and 14 Texas Guinan all dialogue single reel westerns.

U. S. Air Minded, Theatres Sample Minded Nowadays

Tying up theatres for free distribution of manufacturer's samples is one of the new rackets said to be providing a fertile field. The gag is to employ regular solicitors to line up theatres at nothing per to distribute their samples in the theatre. The solicitors are paid either at the rate of so much per house or on a weekly basis. Best houses are being sought in all instances, the manufacturer figuring this gives tone to the product being advertised. And the theatres are going for the gag in a big way, figuring that the samples are box-office bets.

Paramount Branch Head Plugs W. E. Equipment

Dallas—Considerable discussion has been aroused here by plugging of Western Electric equipment by J. B. Dugger, Paramount Publix branch manager, in a letter to exhibitors. The letter cites the new W. E. price scales and emphasizes that "inferior equipment is taboo." Some take the position that the letter is an indication that Paramount is plugging W. E. equipment, but others insist that this is but a personal matter with Dugger, in an effort to improve sound conditions in the territory.

Faller Active

Cleveland—B. Faller, representative of E. E. Fulton & Co., Chicago, is temporarily located in Cleveland, and last week sold two Blizzard cooling machines for the Pearl and Park, Lorain; new drapes and carpets for the Dreamland, Lorain, and a new sound screen for the "Y," Cleveland.

Culver City Grows

Culver City—With an increase in population of 1,011.5 per cent, this film center has recorded the largest percentage of growth in the last ten years. It has grown from 503 in 1920 to 5,088 in 1930.

The Gossip Test

Hollywood knows the answers to these questions. Do you?

Can you name the two hand-kissing gentlemen of the film colony? (Joe Schildkraut and Ivan Lebedeff.)

What famous star recently paid $6,000,000 hush money to quiet a blackmailer he had never heard of? (Maybe Richard Dix will kill me for this—but he didn't want the sordid publicity even if he was guiltless.)

How could the picture, "Men Without Women," have used a woman in the cast and still have been a womanless picture? (Only a physical examination could have kept Julian Eltinge out of the cast. "He" would have added the color.)

What famous actress actually has one brown and one blue eye? (They say that every single picture Colleen Moore makes has to be retouched for that very reason.)

What he-man actor recently pulled an "Alice White" by having his hair blondined? (I hate to tell this one on Grant Withers, but I thought you ought to know.)—Ramsey in Motion Picture Magazine.

"Bad Man" Goes Spanish

Hollywood—First National launched production on its first Spanish version of a talker this week when "El Hombre Malo" got under way. Picture is Spanish talker version of "The Bad Man," and will have Antonio Moreno featured under direction of William McGann.

Hollywood—"The Boudoir Diplomat" will be produced as one of the first pictures on Universal's schedule for next season. Tom Reed wrote the screen adaptation from play by Rudolf Lothar and Frits Gottwald.

Appeal "Blue" Fines

Austin, Tex.—Appeal has been taken on fines of $50 levied against H. E. Fulgham and Laney Sexton, McKinney exhibitors.

Mizner's Cafe Held Up

Hollywood—Although Wilson Mizner delights in considering Hollywood a funny place, things were real serious for the world known adventurer, capitalist, author, etc., last week when a lone bandit held up Mizner's Brown Derby cafe and walked out with $250 from the cash register. Stick-up occurred about 2 A. M., with very few patrons present.

Thompson Out at Albany

Albany—Harry Thompson, who has been manager of the First National exchange for the last year, and who had previously been identified with several other exchanges in Albany, has resigned and has been succeeded by Ben Kalmenson, of Pittsburgh, who has been connected with the local exchange for some time as a salesman.

Change "Bride" Title

Hollywood—United Artists have decided on "Lottery Bride" for definite release title of Arthur Hammerstein's recently completed operetta, produced under name of "Bride 66." Rudolph Friml composed the original music score for the picture, which was directed by Paul Stein.

Gets 7 First Runs

Cleveland—Paramount will have at least seven first-runs on Euclid Ave. during May. At the Allen there will be "The Big Pond," week of May 3; "The Texan," May 10th; "Return of Dr. Fu Manchu," May 24th; "True to the Navy," May 31st. At the State: "Young Eagles," May 3; "Young Man of Manhattan," May 31st. At the Stillman, "Paramount on Parade," following the present run of "Divorcee."

F. N. Alters 3 Titles

Hollywood — First National has made changes in final release titles of three current productions. "Mlle Modiste" will go out as "The Toast of the Legion"; "Under Western Skies" will be released as "Woman Hungry," and "The Main Street Princess" will carry the permanent title of "The Queen of Main Street."

Fire at Port Henry

Albany—In a blaze in the projection room at the Empire at Port Henry, N. Y., 400 persons filed out of the theatre with no confusion. The flames were quickly extinguished by employes. The house is managed by Charles Dery.

The "Smellies"

Scientist has invented an apparatus that will reproduce smells on the movie screen. We hope we never see a newsreel of a trip through a limburger cheese factory.

Whiteman Turns In Week's Worst Gross in L. A.

Los Angeles—Four grand for four days was the low take rolled in by Paul Whiteman's "King of Jazz" in its fourth and closing week at the Fox Criterion, which chalked up 70% for the final short-period performance—the week's big flop. There were plenty of runners-up, however, what with Paramount's "Fu Manchu" rating 94% at the Paramount, 86% for RKO's "He Knew Women" at the RKO, and 77% for the fifth week of "Ingagi," playing the Orpheum.

On the black side, Universal took top money with "All Quiet," grossing $18,372, to a 147% rating, at Fox's Carthay Circle. United Artists' "Bad One" jumped in right behind the "U" vehicle, grossing $19,000, which rates that film 141%.

"Caught Short" was moved from the first-run sector to a second-run house.

But How Jimmy Has Changed

Jimmy Durante once performed at a private party given by the Wanamakers, states Sid Skolsky. And, according to Sid, when the affair was over, Mr. Wanamaker took Jimmy aside, drew a hundred-dollar bill from his pocket and said: "Go buy yourself a hat with this." Jimmy looked at him for a moment and then sorrowfully replied, "But I don't know where to buy a hat that costs a hundred dollars."

'Hell Harbor' in M'p'ls Plays to Lowest Rating

Minneapolis—The State, showing "Hell Harbor," played to the lowest house percentage of the "Big Five," grossing $16,800 for a percentage of 60%. The Minnesota, showing "Light of Western Stars," and the Hennepin Orpheum, offering "Temple Tower," tied with an approximate gross of $16,100 for each house. Both rang the bell at a 70%.

The Pantages garnered a gross of $8,000 on "Around the Corner" to register 80%. The Century, boosting "Rogue Song," grossed the same amount and registered the same percentage.

Smaller houses registered as follows: Lyric, with "Lord Byron of Broadway," 95% or approximate, gross $3,600; Aster, "Wedding Rings," gross $3,000, rating 90%.

Sensation of the week was "Ingagi," bringing large crowds to the Seventh St. This house, definitely in the second-class group, has managed to exert a pull which is felt by every other theatre in the city. "Ingagi," in its second week at this house, took $8,500 to give the house a rating of 90%. The picture will be held over for a third week.

Weather: Mild with several rain storms.

Socko!

Buddy Rogers relates the yarn about the movie star who, while in Manhattan, frequented one of the city's most exclusive hairdressing emporiums. She had an appointment for a wave, but once before she failed to keep her date with the place, a very big one, so it didn't go to any extremes to please her. She finally let out her temperament about the service, squawking madly all over the parlor.

"Lissen, you," growled the woman in charge, "you may be a screen star out in Hollywood, but in here you are just another marcel!"

Tibbett a Wow in Third Week on a Draw of 30 Grand

San Francisco—The past week, while considered fairly good, was not as big as the week before. It would have been much better had not the weather turned cold with a sharp wind.

"Rogue Song" (M-G-M), at the Warfield for three weeks, surprised every one with its gross of $30,000 (rating, 160%), which is more than was done during first two weeks.

"Paramount on Parade" did well at the St. Francis the opening week, with a 110% rating and a $17,500 gross. "The Texan," shown at the California, grossed $16,500, 110% rating.

"Be Yourself" Sags To $18,000 in Chi; 1 Week, Then Out

Chicago—Loop business remains at a disquieting low ebb. No house, with the exceptions of the Castle and the Garrick, climbed above average for the week. "The Rogue Song" (M-G-M) dropped amazingly in its second week, leaving McVickers exactly on the line at about $20,600. "Be Yourself" (U. A.) was also a disappointment at the United Artists, gathering up only $18,000 in its first week, and was replaced by "Hell Harbor" (U. A.)

"Journey's End" (Tiffany), road-showing at the Garrick, was hampered by hot weather in its first few days, but was building at the end of the week in spite of this handicap. Gross for the week was $12,900 (185%). The Castle, loaded with "White Cargo," maintained its sensational pace for the third week, taking $7,200 for a rating of 250%.

Kelly's Vacation

Charlie Murray sailed Thursday for Europe on the Ile de France, announcing that he will celebrate his birthday in Berlin on June 22 and the Fourth of July in Dublin. He will return to Hollywood July 29 to resume the making of two-reel comedies with George Sidney for Universal.

What a Man!

Paul Whiteman and Gladys Hall were discussing women. Paul told Gladys that he thinks they are darlings, but are inclined to frailty. He said, rather wistfully, "I've been married three times. Each of my wives has been a fine woman. Nothing wrong with them. I'm in love with my present wife, but I probably won't have her at this time next year. You see, I'm married to my band," he explained. "And that isn't fair to any woman. A woman is a full-time job," and Paul hasn't "the full time to give—"

Style Films to Be Shown in All Publix Theatres

Practically all Paramount Publix houses, except those under contract, will play the style films in music and color to be supplied by Theatre Service Corp., in the advertising film deal closed with William Johnson. The only advertising these contain will be a credit line for the merchant who sponsors the presentation. Theatre Service will supply also a commercial service type, formerly known as advertising trailers, which will be shown in some houses of the circuit. These will run about 450 feet. Theatre Service has an exclusive contract, and its service will replace others as soon as they expire in various theatres of the circuit.

Pimlico, Bubbling Thermometers in Balto. Ruins B. O.

Baltimore—A mid-summer hot spell, the spring meet at Pimlico, including the running of the Preakness, and the conflict between daylight and Standard time, caused a severe slump in business at the large theatres last week.

The only house which did a 100 per cent business was the Little, with 267 seats, with "Hallelujah," in its second week, the gross being $1,000.

Besides this picture, two others were retained for a second week. "Hold Everything" was continued at the Rivoli and Metropolitan and held up pretty well and "King of Jazz" was hurt by its $1 top run. The latter picture grossed about $3,300, or 50 per cent, for the four days of the second week and an additional Sunday midnight showing.

"Swing High," given its world premiere here at Keith's Sunday midnight show, did a 60 per cent rating on the week to a gross which was estimated at $4,800.

Sunday midnight shows here mean the show starts at 1 A. M., daylight time.

Weather: Clear and hot with thermometer registering up to 96, but it cooled somewhat on Saturday. Opposition: "King of Jazz," in its second week at the Auditorium; "Free and Easy," with the Loew unit, "Days o' Yore," with Wesley Eddy, at Loew's Century; "Roadhouse Nights," with Bert Smith Players in "Shady Lady," at the Hippodrome; "Swing High," at Keith's; "Hallelujah," in its second week at the Little; "Hold Everything," in its second week at the Rivoli and Metropolitan; "Lovin' the Ladies," at the New; "The Vagabond King," at Loew's Stanley; "Montana Moon," at Loew's Valencia and Parkway after one week at Loew's Century. Stage: "Strange Interlude," in its second week at Ford's; Vagabond Players in "Enter Madame," at the Maryland; "Hello Paree," burlesque at Gayety.

And a Shallow Pan

It was on a set at the Fox studio. A young lady visitor approached Edmund Lowe and exclaimed: "Oh, Mr. Lowe, I think you make love divinely on the screen! How do you do it?"

"Easy," drawled Ed. "It's just like making pie. All you need is some crust and a lot of applesauce!"

Omaha Still All Wet; But Grosses End Up at Par

Omaha—Despite a fourth week of intermittent rains, business remained at par at all houses.

Reinforced by Bill Robinson, the black stepper, "Alias French Gertie" (Radio) brought another $15,000 for the Orpheum. The R-K-O house has not fallen below normal for a couple of months.

Maurice Chevalier is becoming a real draw here. Paramount's "The Big Pond" piled up $10,000 for the World in the best week since the house added Publix vaudeville. Stage show was average.

"Hold Everything" (W. B.) held the Paramount to its first par week in a fortnight. The $8,500 gross was good, considering opposition and weather. In three days at the State "Crazy That Way" (Fox) grossed $2,250, against $2,500 for the last half with "Wedding Rings" (F. N.).

Weather: Lots of rain, little sunshine. Opposition: "Hold Everything," Paramount; "The Big Pond," World; "Alias French Gertie," Orpheum; "Crazy That Way," State; "Wedding Rings," State.

"HOLD EVERYTHING" (W. B.)

Cleveland's Only Draw "Divorcee"; Clicks at $25,000

Cleveland—A week of consistently hot weather pulled the first-run averages down considerably here at every theatre except the Stillman, where "The Divorcee" grossed as much as any week since last September. While "The Big Pond" and "Ladies of Leisure" made good showings, the heat seriously affected business. Metropolitan Opera Week also broke into box office receipts.

Weather: Hot all week, with thermometer registering better than 80 every day. Opposition: "Divorcee," Stillman; "The Big Pond," Allen; "Young Eagles," State; "Ladies of Leisure," Hippodrome; "Under a Texas Moon," RKO Palace. Stage: "Deah Old England," with Richard Bennett, Hanna; "The Rivals," all-star cast headed by Mrs. Fiske, Auditorium; "Front Page," Ohio; Metropolitan Opera Company in repertoire, Auditorium.

Providence Hit By Heat; 1st Runs Know It by B. O.

Providence—Weather so hot that it drove city dwellers to the many beaches throughout Rhode Island and played havoc with receipts last week, although downtown theatres did fairly good business for four days. Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday the thermometer hit 90 and over.

Loew's State was fairly strong at $19,200, for 90%, with Lupe Velez in "Hell Harbor." The RKO Victory, too, found Chevalier a good draw in "The Big Pond," clicking for around $9,000. The Majestic with Winnie Lightner in "Hold Everything" was good for around $12,000.

Weather: Hot, clear. Opposition: Bathing, pro wrestling. Films: "The Big Pond," RKO Victory; "Hold Everything," Majestic; "Hell Harbor," Loew's State; "Runaway Bride," RKO Albee.

"All Quiet" Only N. Y. Picture to Survive Heat

New York box office windows felt the evil influence of approaching summer when a record-breaking rise in the old mercury stick sent intake figures down near the zero mark in week which was ideal for outdoor entertainment attractions.

The town's large string of main-stem first runs all took a licking, with but one exception: Universal's "All Quiet on the Western Front" bulged the Central walls, and then turned hundreds away. Third week for this vehicle witnessed a $21,670 gross, plenty high for the 925-seat Central.

Here's the sad tale on the others:

"REDEMPTION" (M-G-M)
CAPITOL (4,700), 35c-50c-75c-$1-$1.50, 7 days. Other attractions: Overture ("Selections from the Ballet"), M-G-M comedy ("Forty Thousand Husbands"), Capitol magazine, Hearst Movietone news, presentation, organ. Gross: $63,[illegible]. Rating: [illegible]

Opinions on Pictures

The Texan

(Paramount—All Talker)

No Excitement Creator

(Reviewed by Sherman Kane)

IT IS difficult to believe that O. Henry, author of "A Double-Dyed Deceiver," from which "The Texan" was adapted, would be enthused by this screen version of his tale of scheming bad men of the old West. Henry was a stickler for surprise endings. Not until you had read the last line of the last paragraph of his stories could you be sure that you had been pulling for the hero, and not a villain in clever disguise. In "The Texan" you know before the picture is well on its way just what its ending will be. And you are not disappointed—that is, of course, unless you are an O. Henry fan and continue to believe to the very last that a surprise awaits you or that Director Cromwell has been pulling his punches, waiting to deliver the knockout blow in some startling, dramatic climax. It never comes; but, then, the picture doesn't have to be sold to O. Henry. And Cooper fans will like it because Cooper is in it.

Cooper, of course, is the Llano Kid, one of those familiar Texas bad men with a price on his head. He is fleeing from Texas after the murder of a card sharp when he encounters the unscrupulous Thacker (Oscar Apfel), by whom he is induced to pose as the son of a wealthy South American widow, whose own child disappeared from home at the age of ten, conveniently bearing no more difficult-to-imitate identification mark than a simple arm tattoo. The conspirators' object is to learn the hiding place of the widow's gold, then make away with it. The widow (Emma Dunn) accepts him, and lavishes considerable maternal affection on his unresponsive person. Her niece, played by Fay Wray, has better success along this line.

Two months elapse, in which the scheming pair, not satisfied with her cash, find a market for the widow's cattle while they await the return of the ship that will carry them back to the States richer by many sacks of gold. On the eve of their flight, the Spanish mother sings a baby's song to her "son," one she had sung to her real son in his infancy. The Kid recognizes it as the song that was on the lips of the card sharp he had murdered in Texas. He likewise remembers that his victim's arm had borne the significant tattoo mark. He must make amends to her for having killed him. The deal is off, he tells Thacker. He is going to remain as the woman's son. Thacker thinks differently. He hires a band of brigands to raid the widow's home and obtain the gold. They are repulsed by the Kid and a Texas sheriff (James Marcus), who has arrived on the incoming boat to claim his prisoner. When the shooting is over, the sheriff departs without his prisoner, convinced that he had reformed, and that the dead Thacker, killed in the fray, may as conveniently be reported as the Llano Kid. The Kid confesses to his "cousin," Consuelo, and is, of course, forgiven.

There is plenty of action and good photography, including some splendid and picturesque settings. Cooper gives a performance that is neither better nor worse than his earlier ones, and whether or not that is enough—or more than enough—depends on whether or not you are a Gary Cooper fan. Emma Dunn, as the mother, handled her role with some distinction. Fay Wray is decorative. Oscar Apfel and James Marcus are Chesterfieldian—they satisfy.

Musical or novelty shorts are needed. Comedy or newsreels will work in well, but less essential.

The Arizona Kid

(Fox—All Talker)

Nice Western; Too Long

(Reviewed by Red Kann)

NOT another "In Old Arizona," by a long shot, although designed as a successor to that splendid attraction. "The Arizona Kid" is a nice western, capably played by Warner Baxter in the title role. It will create no excitement, but will get by without any trouble.

Advertising points not to be overlooked include generous mention of the fact that the picture is a narration of the further adventures of the Cisco Kid, although his first monicker here becomes Arizona. Baxter will be remembered for his work in "In Old Arizona" and, therefore, it becomes good business to stress the fact that here his part is identical with the former.

From a production angle, the picture has considerable to recommend it. In story construction, Ralph Block, who authored it, introduced several clever twists, although it must be said that "The Arizona Kid" follows very religiously in the mould of its predecessor.

The opening shot is a hold-up, with the bandit hero apparently on the job. That's where the first surprise enters, for Baxter is planted in the stage coach and shoots down the attacking cowboy plunderer, which helps to divert suspicion from him.

Baxter's love affair with Mona Maris, dance hall girl, is interrupted by the arrival in the frontier town of Carol Lombard, presumably accompanied by her brother, played by Theodore Von Eltz. Baxter's sudden and quick disappearances finally fasten suspicion upon him, but the sheriff is awaiting pictures of the Kid from Arizona before his suspicions can finally be crystallized.

In the meantime, Baxter falls for the blonde. She, in turn, makes a play for him. Eventually, Baxter's mine, a deserted shaft worked in secret, is raided and his two co-workers killed. Baxter gets the goods on Von Eltz. Mona, at the same time, is successful in extricating the pictures of the Kid from the mail pouch on the incoming stage. Baxter determines to settle with Von Eltz, who by this time is established as the blonde's husband, kills him and makes his escape conveniently down the arroya with Mona at his side.

Miss Lombard does pleasing, if undistinguished, work. Likewise, Mona Maris. Soledad Jiminez, injected for Spanish atmosphere, again carries away a fat comedy part, while, as bartender, Hank Mann comes through for a number of laughs. Alfred Santell's direction is generally good, although he allowed many of his sequences to run to too much footage.

Comedies and cartoons will make a nice balance.

The Big Pond

(Paramount—All Talker)

Chevalier Clicks Again

(Reviewed by Red Kann)

PARAMOUNT likes to describe Maurice Chevalier as one of France's two greatest gifts to America. The other is the Statue of Liberty. Historians may disagree, but the women of the land probably won't. For M. Chevalier has that masculine something that makes the weaker sex grow weaker and box offices wax fatter.

The third in the Frenchman's series has more story body than either "Innocents of Paris" or "The Love Parade." Likewise, it is considerably better in entertainment value than the first and considerably under the quality of the second. And yet, the appeal of "The Big Pond" hits closer to the mob and is more efficiently geared for mass divertissement than "The Love Parade." Lacking the subtleties and the charming daring of the latter, this new opus gives Chevalier less opportunity to sing and more to display his cleverness as a comedian. He doesn't disappoint.

Briefly, the story opens in Venice with Claudette Colbert, daughter of an American chewing gum king, infatuated with Chevalier, Frenchman, by inclination a lover and by profession a guide. The girl's father, in this case George Barbier, decides to take Chevalier home in an effort to find out if he will fit into the American scheme of things. The plan is to dump him into the chewing gum factory, work him until he cracks, thereby showing him up before the girl and breaking the romance.

But Chevalier comes through, accidentally hits upon the idea of treating the gum with liquor flavor, lands himself a contract at a fat salary and finally wins the girl.

By that time, however, he has so thoroughly soaked himself with the accepted idea of American business efficiency that the girl rejects him. But Chevalier, full of American ginger, steals the girl for the fade-out elopement.

The star sings several times. But neither "You Brought a New Kind of Love to Me" nor "Livin' in the Sunlight, Lovin' in the Moonlight" lingers in the memory. Rather it is Chevalier's wholly charming performance, offset very agreeably by Miss Colbert, that makes the picture the entertainment affair it proves to be. The dialogue is bright and the basic situations amusing. Barbier, as the father, will capture laughs from any audience.

There is one short sequence that is a wow. Chevalier's American rival for the girl asks the Frenchman to teach him to love. Chevalier does and is caught demonstrating. The roughest looking taxi driver on record gets a load of what's going on and merely smiles. But it's very, very funny.

Hobart Henley deserves a lot of credit for fashioning the production along its clever lines.

Try a couple of sound acts with this.

True to the Navy

(Paramount—All Talker)

A Sinker

(Reviewed by Walter K. Greene)

AFTER Paramount discovered that "The Fleet's In" was a highly successful picture, decision was reached to produce another story with similar background, and with Clara Bow starred. So they made a sequel—or companion picture—with unfortunate results.

"True to the Navy" is lacking in the spontaneity and entertaining qualities that put "The Fleet's In" over. It's hard to tell just where the fault developed, but one glaring drawback is in the self-consciousness of the players. This includes Clara Bow, Frederic March, and even Harry Green to a certain extent. Their apparent reading of lines without enthusiasm, rather than playing their parts realistically, makes the picture a very weak program offering.

Attempts were made to inject smart comedy situations and lines into the story. They miss sadly in most instances.

With all excess poundage off, Clara Bow looks like the "It" girl of four or five years back. There's all the pep and enthusiasm in the star's portrayal, except the ring of sincerity in her lines. And Clara cannot be blamed, for the same was true of both March and Harry Green—both stage-trained artists who have demonstrated their dialogue ability in previous pictures. Either direction, insufficient rehearsals or poorly written dialogue was responsible.

The story is decidedly light, but this is generally accepted in a broad comedy. Clara is a soda fountain girl in San Diego and is nice to all the sailors to encourage their trade in the store. But she has too many sweethearts and encounters difficulties when the whole fleet drops anchor and pours the boys into the store together.

Then March comes along as the champ gunner and ladies' man of the fleet. Clara falls for him hard and the pair are taken to Tia Juana by Harry Green. Then Green makes a big bet on the coming fleet target practice, putting his dough on March. Naturally, Green has to see that the latter keeps sober. Clara frames March to marry her in a dance hall, but the sailor walks out on her after discovering her perfidy with the other tars.

The gambler Green bet with then takes March in hand to have him beat up so he can not show up for the target contest, but Clara calls in the sailors for a free-for-all to rescue him. Naturally March again wins the fleet championship and discovers Clara's sincerity along the marriage lines in time to clinch.

Many attempts at comedy missed fire, with long lapses of draggy sequences that become decidedly boresome. March worked hard to put over the idea that he was a smart and tough sailor, but showed he was not the type for the part.

"True to the Navy" is a weak program offering, due to hit whatever grosses it lands entirely on the popularity of Clara Bow, who comes back looking like a million. But the picture itself hits a low mark in entertainment.

Snappy shorts needed badly here.

Western Honor

(Syndicate Pictures—Synchronized)

Fair Western

(Reviewed by Robert Hare)

IF YOUR audiences like Westerns they'll probably get a kick out of this synchronized cow opera, but don't stage a plot-guessing contest. They'll all win first prize. It's the old standby of the respected citizen who is a crook at heart and secret leader of a band of desperadoes set upon driving a cattle raiser out of the country and confiscating his property. Our hero, half the size of any of the gunmen, licks 'em all in a fist fight. That may not sound very realistic, but the scrap is a peach. The crooks go to jail, of course, and the hero and heroine clinch at the end, as usual in Westerns, although previously there had not been the slightest indication that they had Cared in a Big Way.

Bob Steele heads the cast and all give stereotyped performances. It's a haphazard production, but it probably will click with the devotees of Westerns. The synchronized score doesn't help much.

Back it up with shorts of the revue type or use on a double feature bill.

The Poor Millionaire

(Biltmore—Silent)

Blah

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

RICHARD TALMADGE is a good stunt man. He surely does plenty of them in this wild story. The picture boasts of little besides Dick's antics, and even some of them seem preposterous. Little regard is given for the big loopholes in the too-thin and obvious plot, the main idea apparently having been to load it up with stunt stuff.

Dick plays a dual role, that of an upright youth who inherits a fortune, and of a twin brother, who is a jailbird and all-around heel. When Dick acquires the estate, he finds it conveniently next door to the home of the girl whose purse he had rescued from a thief. Follows a love affair and the pair are slated to be married, when Dick's brother appears on the scene. The brother had escaped from a prison camp, and has made his way to Dick's home. He knocks out Dick, and exchanges clothes with him. Of course, Dick goes back to the prison camp, but escapes in time to prevent the wedding. And that's that.

The cast supporting Talmadge isn't much, having been selected principally for types. Direction takes plenty for granted, hurdling one inconsistency after another.

Action fans and kids, who will accept old time film formulas may like this.

You'll need at least one more feature and some strong shorts.

The Silent Enemy

(Paramount—Synchronized)

Different, Often Powerful

(Reviewed by Ryl Evans)

NOT the accepted formula in picture entertainment and, because of that, difficult to compute as box-office fodder. "The Silent Enemy" is different and carries the earmarks of novelty. In the showman's scheme, this factor is all-important and the keynote of the advertising and exploitation which should be built up around this unusual production.

Here you have a staged story of a chapter in the lives of the Ojibways, an Indian tribe the remnants of which live in the reaches of Northern Ontario. In subject matter and in pictoral value, the production is successful in veering sharply from the beaten track. It follows that for those who are seeking something apart from sophisticated society dramas, crook mellers and musicals, "The Silent Enemy" will more than adequately fill that requirement.

The narrative vein is slight, but the treatment rich in drama. It concerns the struggle of a small Ojibway tribe against what it calls the silent enemy, or hunger. The search for meat carries the tribe through appalling snow storms to the rim of the Arctic Circle, where a huge herd of caribou solves the need. Into this background, epochal in the lives of the tribesmen, is built the story of the love of Baluk, the hunter for Neewa, daughter of Chief Chetoga, and the jealousy of Dagwan, who abuses his office of medicine man to imperil Baluk's status. His efforts are crowned with success almost at the sacrifice of Baluk's life on a funeral pyre, when the signal fires warn of the approach of the caribou. Baluk is restored to position and confidence and Dagwan sent on the long trail without weapon or food.

The stoicism and calm of the Indian are graphically depicted. The players, all Indians, played themselves—a fortunate fact for the authenticity of the picture. In its 8,000 feet, the life of the tribe is shown, its brave marches through the snows to the barren lands where the game holds forth, and a thriller the likes of which have been rarely filmed, in the frenzied caribou kill.

This sequence has been magnificently filmed and carries all of the indications of danger to cameraman and director. You see thousands of caribou tramping across the screen, then the onslaught of the marauding Indians and the terror of the animals as they rush in all directions to escape the death-dealing spears.

A vicious fight between a mountain lion and a wolverine constitutes another of the highlights.

Impressive and definitely carrying a punch is the departure of Chetoga, the old chieftain, to the mountain, stripped to a loin cloth and protected from the winds only by a fur wrap, there to await a sign from the Great Spirit which will lead his people from want to plenty. The acting of the five principals is primitive and entirely natural. Scenically, the picture is beautiful.

Julian Johnson titled with appreciation. He did a fine job. Massard Mur Zhene composed and arranged the synchronized score. To him considerable credit must go for enhancing the dramatic values of the production.

Sound cartoons a good bet with this.

The Devil's Holiday

(Paramount—All Talker)

Has Punch

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

NANCY CARROLL has a pleasing change in this picture which gives her opportunity to show real acting and comedy ability. She certainly comes through with colors flying in a picture which carries a lot of kick. It's different from the general run and, as such, registers as good entertainment.

However, Ned Sparks comes pretty near to stealing the picture, getting off a lot of wisecracks. His lines afford a comedy relief which aids considerably. Paul Lukas also does outstanding work in the fine cast, which includes Hobart Bosworth, James Kirkwood, Phillips Holmes and Jed Prouty.

"Devil's Holiday" is a picture which will please generally and which will aid greatly to the popularity of Nancy Carroll. The star has what is probably her most important role and demonstrates she has a lot more than the musical films in which she has appeared heretofore give her credit for being.

You can bill this as a revelation to Miss Carroll's fans and a picture which has pathos and comedy in abundance. It's very well directed by Edmund Goulding, who also is responsible for the story.

The story is about a New York gold digger who gets a cut on business she throws to a boy friend. She marries the son of a wealthy wheat farmer for spite, accepts his father's payoff and then finds that she loves the boy and returns.

The Prince of Diamonds

(Columbia—All Talker)

Just Fair

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

THIS is a well cast picture which boasts fair entertainment value. The picture is very well cast and well directed. Aileen Pringle and Ian Keith have the leads and are pretty much the whole picture. The remainder of the cast, however, is good.

There isn't a great deal of story or love interest, the plot following stereotyped lines. The picture lacks comedy relief.

An impoverished English aristocrat and a diamond merchant are rivals in love. When the girl's rascally brother steals a diamond, the aristocrat takes the blame. The girl agrees to marry the diamond merchant to save her fiance from prison. The latter goes to the Orient, where he locates a diamond mine, and returns to gain vengeance.

This is lacking in box office value and will need strong support to get over.

Terribly Stupid

(Reviewed by J. P. Cunningham)

THIS is out completely for houses where sloppy Westerners don't click. In the small neighborhood stands, old man public will have to be plenty good-natured to accept it as entertaining material, so don't fail to have strong support on a double feature bill to satisfy the soreheads. You'll need it.

Bob Custer, formerly featured in FBO Westerns, is starred. He's no better than the others—and they are terrible. Most of the cast are players unfamiliar to us, with the exception of J. P. McGowan, who directed. We are sure Mac had something on his mind other than pictures when he went to work on this one, for he has turned out satisfying programmers.

The photography is in keeping with the general trend of the production. The story—if it may be called such—needed little effort. It concerns a gang of cowboy smugglers and the attempts of Custer to run 'em down. All in all, it's a pretty tame piece of amateurish picture-making.

Book a good cartoon, some newsreel stuff and a topnotch light comedy drama feature with this.

Temple Tower

(Fox—All Talker)

Suffers by Comparison

(Reviewed by Charles F. Hynes)

ALTHOUGH this has good story value, comparisons are inevitable between this new Bulldog Drummond picture, and the one which starred Ronald Colman, to the great disadvantage of this picture. Kenneth MacKenna is Drummond and doesn't measure up to the role. Cyril Chadwick, manages to get some humor into his impossible lines, Henry B. Walthall is a good villain and Marceline Day is an effective heroine. Peter Gawthorne is good as the detective in the case.

"Temple Tower" is not a sequel to Colman's "Bulldog Drummond," so be sure to obviate any such impression, otherwise there'll be a kickback.

The Colman film wound up with Drummond winning the girl in the case, and apparently settling down. This takes the intrepid Drummond on a series of new adventures, new complications and the winning of another girl. Whether audiences will accept it is problematical.

This concerns the efforts of a crook to dispose of jewels received in a famous robbery years before. Walthall is the crook who double-crossed his partner, the latter a strangler who goes about masked and wearing tights, which effectively conceal his identity. Various means are resorted to by the principals to secure possession of the jewels, and Walthall, who has them, employes some effective, if fiendish ruses to protect them.

There is a surprise finish which aids this, when the true identity of the strangler is made known. The director has succeeded in maintaining suspense, even though it is obvious that Drummond is coming through with flying colors.

Try comedies with this.

Soldiers and Women

(Columbia—All Talker)

Splendid Entertainment

(Reviewed by J. P. Cunningham)

CURRENT flood of tropical stories contain but a few vehicles as highly entertaining as "Soldiers and Women," which fits into a top spot in the field of programmers by intelligent handling of cast, direction, story and sound.

Helen Johnson, in the support, runs a neck-and-neck race with Aileen Pringle, who is featured with Grant Withers. And that's not the only player upset. Emmett Corrigan, an old-timer, jumps from the runner-up class in the early reels to a tie with Miss Johnson for first honors in the last two thousand feet. The job was well done by the entire line-up.

In a few places, clarity of voices is not of the best. However, this minor mechanical imperfection will be overlooked. The photography is good, lending correct atmospheric touches to the tropical story, which concerns a circle of U. S. marine officers, stationed at an outpost, and their politics-playing wives who are "bored to death" in the hell-hole tropics. Their capers in love lead to an exciting battle in wits between Miss Johnson, as the wife of Capt. Arnold, and Miss Pringle, in the role of the general's daughter and wife of Col. Ritchie. There's a murder, to cap the climax, but Edward Sloman, in his direction, cleverly injected comedy bits to lighten this dramatic situation.

Snappy musical comedy and a cartoon will give you a well rounded bill.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by Edward Sloman. From the stage play by Paul Hervey Fox and George Tilton. Continuity and dialogue by Dorothy Howell. Editor, Leonard Wheeler. Photographed by Ted Tetzlaff. Running time, 70 minutes. Length, 6,671 feet. Released, April 30.

Bancroft in Tilt With Paramount Over Do-Re-Mi

suiters on the coast seem to figure the latter procedure is Bancroft's real intention.

The player has gone East with the idea of negotiating a new contract with Adolph Zukor. Bancroft is said to figure he can make a better deal with the eastern officials than he can with officials on the coast; and to think he would put them on the anxious seat before his arrival by intimating that he was planning to go into a Broadway stage show.

Bancroft left the coast suddenly, although he was supposed to be recovering from a throat affliction which had left him without a voice. In jumping East, the player did not notify studio officials.

Officials at Paramount-Publix are at a loss in figuring Bancroft's moves. It is stated that there was absolutely no friction between the company and the player, which statement was confirmed several weeks ago by a representative of Bancroft to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Trouble over "Cave Man"

Bancroft was supposedly stricken with a throat affliction two months ago, just as rehearsals were to begin on "The Cave Man." He retired to his beach home, and made a two-day trip to Palm Springs for possible aid in clearing up his illness. Returning home, he denied all visitors, although the company exercised its contract rights by having him examined by a physician.

When the player showed no apparent improvement within a week, Paramount-Publix notified him salary was suspended during his illness. After carrying the cast of "The Cave Man" on half salary for about six weeks, the company finally dismissed them and abandoned the picture. Following this action, Gary Cooper was assigned to the lead in "The Spoilers," which was originally set for Bancroft.

Bancroft's present contract has about four months to go, and suspended time due to illness will have to carry over beyond regular expiration. When he left for the East without informing Paramount of his intentions, the move looked as if the star had some secret peeve against officials here, and he had decided to ignore the coast crowd entirely.

One angle advanced for Bancroft's Eastern trip is that he wishes to consult specialists about his throat affliction. This is considered hardly likely, however, in view of reports which state that he is considering starring in a stage drama.

Paramount Fails to Back Bancroft in Fist Fight

Failure of Paramount Publix to come to the defence of one of its biggest drawing cards in a statement issued by the producer disclaiming any connection with "what looks like cheap publicity appeal connecting George Bancroft with assault charges," is regarded as indicative that the relationship is strained. The incident revolves around injuries sustained by Rutger Bleecker, son of Rutger Bleecker, millionaire commission merchant of 32 Wall Street, New York, at Panchard's, Massapequa, L. I. on the night of April 4, and a summons which brought Bancroft before the Nassau County Grand Jury at Mineola to explain what he knew about the foray.

Bleecker was attacked by two men in the wash room and beaten, suffering a fractured jaw. He is in Dr. Reed's sanitarium at Amityville.

According to Assistant District Attorney Brown, Bleecker alleges he was dancing with his sister and in passing the table where Bancroft and others were sitting, said, in a facetious way:

"George, I think you're lousy."

Later, returning to the Bancroft table, he declared he was joking and apologized.

Some time later, in the wash room, Bleecker was set upon by two men and beaten.

At the court house yesterday Bancroft said he knew nothing of the assault on Bleecker and had no idea of the identity of the men who attacked him.

Bancroft entered the investigation because of statement made by Bleecker that his assailants were from the player's table.

(Transatlantic—Talker—2 reels)

Rates a Booking

A HIGHLY interesting short reel talker descriptive of one of the country's important transportation factors—aviation. Well done from a production standpoint, the reel has only one drawback and that is the obvious plug for Curtiss-Wright air service, for which organization the subject was produced.

The dominating Curtiss-Wright trade-mark should not, however, seriously interfere with its entertainment value, obtained by showing the intricacies of student flying and various types of planes. Will easily get by in the average house. Running time, 36 minutes.

Dramatic feature and a snappy cartoon are just the subjects for this.

Ranchhouse Blues

(Pathe—All Talker)

Entertaining

THIS is billed as a comedy, one of the Rodeo series, but it's hardly that. Abbreviated meller would better describe it. The story is about a cowboy's effort to prevent his employer from selling his ranch, on which the villain has discovered oil. There are a few laughs, some typical old-time western thrills, music and singing. It's a good entertaining subject, but don't spot it where laughs are needed for balance. Running time, 20 minutes.

With comedy feature.

Trade Journal Terms Columbia Stunt "Puffery"

Columbia publicity comes in for kidding in the current issue of "Editor and Publisher," newspaper trade journal. "Print Our Puffs And Boost Circulation" is the caption given the article. The company, so its publicity "puffery" indicates, has gone into the newspaper circulation-building business, the publication observes. The article follows:

"Under the banner line of 'Here's Great Circulation Booster' the first sheet of the sheaf of publicity bore plans for and a 'story' of a contest to select 'Miss Columbia' from America's girlhood. Thirteen 'fan magazines' are listed as sponsors and, if entries are made through one of these, contestants are eligible to compete for Majestic radios to be given by the magazines. Circulation building details are lacking although it is definitely stated that 'Here is one of the best circulation builders for any newspaper, big or small.'

"In the material (only about 27 inches) about this 'great circulation booster' to locate 'Miss America' the name 'Columbia' appears 18 times. Every newspaper, it is decided, will be interested in having a 'native daughter selected' and any newspaper may start its contest at once 'merely by announcing the contest.' Privilege is also extended the press of offering 'their own prizes to find their own choice for 'Miss Columbia' and allow their girl to enter as their entry into the finals."

Labeled Advertising

"Planned, it is stated, as a special number of Columbia News Service, the enlarged version of their regular weekly 'service' contains sheets of 'Fashion Service,' 'Feature Article For Sunday Page,' 'Sunday Page Feature Stories,' 'Feature Cartoon' strip, 'Personal Interviews' and others of similar type.

"The envelop in which the 342 column inches of puffery was contained, carried the ironic and appropriate legend: 'Advertising Matter.'"

B. & K. to Yank Films Skidding In First Week

At the first indication of box office weakness in a picture, henceforth, whether apparent in its first or second week, it will be withdrawn from the Publix-B. & K. Loop "run" houses here, an official of that circuit told Motion Picture News. The picture's gross may be well above the danger line, but it rates no additional time the minute it gives definite indications of weakening, he said.

His explanation of this "pay-or-else" policy is that the number of first-runs available so far exceeds the number of first-run houses in Chicago that unless a feature evidences unusual box office strength it does not warrant a run of more than two weeks, even though it could be held over profitably for one or more weeks.

Will Help Neighborhoods

"Definite strength," he said, "is a requisite, henceforth. If, at the end of one or two weeks, a feature begins to weaken, it will be replaced; regardless of the fact that it might be operated profitably for an additional week or more. Why should we gamble on the extra time when there are more pictures available than there are houses in the Loop in which to play them?"

A reasonable enough explanation, but observers here see more in the B. & K. move than that. They point out that with

Give Vaudeville Acts Once-Over at State-Lake

With the transfer of the Belmont from RKO to Publix management, new RKO vaudeville acts are being given their first "once-over" at the State-Lake here. The exhibition performances follow the last regular Friday night show, and comprise 10 acts of vaudeville. No extra charge is made for the show, and business at the State-Lake is reported to be materially aided by the novelty.

The program differs from the Thursday night "pre-view" performance that Publix-B. & K. is staging at the Oriental, in that the acts are not "try-outs," but are regularly booked rehearsals of standard talent. The Oriental's preview program includes unbooked acts which, if they are well received, may be signed up for other houses of the circuit.

Ashton Stevens, in his Herald-Examiner column, attributes the belief of Johnny Farrell and Gene Sarazen that no one went to the theatre in a rainstorm to be the explanation of their failure to appear at the Chicago Theatre for the first afternoon performance on Monday, the week of their Loop engagement. Not quite so simple, and certainly a less humorous situation, was the real cause, however.

On the afternoon in question, hundreds of Chicago's golf enthusiasts were waiting impatiently for the feature picture to grind to a close, making way for the appearance of their idols. When it had, their impatience increased as the stage show wore on and on—without the assistance of Farrell and Sarazen, the swing and putt team. Eventually, the stage show came to a close and an apologetic m. c. announced that the missing headliners had been detained by a rainstorm but were expected any minute. He asked the orchestra to play. It played for some fifteen minutes while the audience fidgeted or sighed and departed. But no Farrell and no Sarazen showed. Then the lights were turned down without further apology and the show went on.

Hearing of the incident, and sensing, perhaps, some rival circuit's intrigue, or some foul play behind the shuttered windows of a Loop speakie, your correspondent prevailed upon Art Sweet, a bosom pal of the team, to go backstage on the following day and urge the pair to make a clean breast of it. Here is Sarazen's ingenuous explanation:

"Why, nothing happened," he said, a little embarrassed. "Johnny and I were just sitting in the coffee room at the Hotel Sherman talking things over. We got to reminiscing and were having such a swell time about it that we forgot all about our engagement at the Chicago. When we looked at our watches and discovered we were thirty-five minutes late for the stage show, it gave us the surprise of our lives."

Both denied emphatically that they had been waiting for that street car.

Castle Theatre Clicks Big on Chain Orphans

"White Cargo," in its fourth capacity week at the little 300-seat Castle in Chicago's Loop district, calls to mind a succession of recent money-makers which Dick Beck landed after they had been either overlooked or scorned by the big circuits.

The first of the more recent ones was "The Viking" (M-G-M). It was spurned by the first run Loop houses, booked into the Castle, and did four weeks of near-capacity business. Next came "Mysterious Island" (M-G-M) likewise sneered at by the circuits. Beck opened the doors of the Castle to it and it lasted four weeks at an excellent pace. "Hallelujah" (M-G-M) was next. The first run houses wanted it, but were afraid to take a chance on an all-negro cast. The Castle grabbed it for five weeks of capacity business. Tiffany's "High Treason" followed. It was a little too bizarre for the big houses, but it fitted nicely into the scheme of things at the Castle, doing three weeks of exceptional business.

"White Cargo," of course, was not eligible to go into the other Loop spots because of the Hays veto it bears. It looks good for an easy five weeks, with every indication that it will do more than that. It's just one of those things that make the big circuit managers groan; and today the groan is fortissimo, what with business in the Loop running anywhere from five to fifteen thousand below average.

Evanston "Blue" Vote Probe Asked by Jury

A sweeping probe of alleged irregularities in the Evanston election, at which Sunday shows were declared winner by 56 votes, has been recommended by the Cook County Grand Jury. A number of alleged irregularities were discovered, most of them centering in the ward which returned the greatest Sunday show majority. Authenticity of a number of the signatures is being questioned.

The first count of the ballots showed that the Sunday movie issue had been defeated by a small majority. A recount was then demanded, which showed a majority of 56 votes in favor of the Sunday shows. Evidence of acceptance of ballots that, it is charged, were wrongly marked and should not have been counted was presented to the grand jury.

Leo's Legions Gather

About 250 Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer executives and salesmen are here for the company's national sales convention, to be held at the Drake Hotel, May 18 to 21, inclusive.

Considerable exploitation of the gathering is being planned, with a possibility that M-G-M will stage some elaborate entertainment during the meeting to get the best break possible on publicity in the dailies. Described as the first time a producing company has exploited a national convention in this manner.

All business sessions will be "closed," it was said. Louis B. Mayer is expected to be here to preside at some of the meetings.

the exception in the big neighborhood houses, as well as in the Loop, the rapid turnover afforded by the new decision will strengthen houses throughout the entire circuit. Putting the new product into the neighborhoods faster, they declare, will revive prestige and interest for the outlying houses, stimulating trade thereby. The decision is also interpreted as a good-will bid to that large percentage of Chicago movie goers who are continually lamenting the fact that this city never sees a new feature until it is old to half the outside world. The lack of first-run houses in the Loop makes this circumstance unavoidable. If B. & K. can open pictures here at approximately the same time the fan magazines are touting them, the observers feel, it would endear them to those Chicago fans who, by virtue of their fan magazine habit, know whether or not a picture is "new."

Loop House Results

The decision affects the Roosevelt, McVickers and United Artists. Its results were demonstrated noticeably in the treatment accorded "Happy Days" (Fox), which did excellent business in its first week at the Roosevelt, sagged no more than might be expected in its second, but was jerked regardless. A month or six weeks ago it would have been a cinch for another week and possibly more. Not so any more. McVickers demonstrated the situation with "Hot for Paris" (Fox) and "The Rogue Song" (M-G-M). Either one might have been chanced for a third week at a profit, but—why gamble when there are plenty of features with good name draws waiting to go in?

United Artists held "Lummox" (U.A.) for two thin weeks. Then came "Puttin' on the Ritz" (U.A.), which grossed better in both weeks than its predecessor, but went out regardless. The explanation is that B. & K.'s new decision had been made in the meantime. "Be Yourself" (U.A.) replaced it, but lacking the newly acquired power, left at the end of the first week, "Hell Harbor" (U.A.) replacing.

Two Hotels in Chicago Running "Guest Shows"

The Stevens and La Salle hotels (both under same management) now furnish complete picture programs to guests on Sundays. No charge is made for the entertainment, an identification card obtained from the room clerk sufficing for admission.

The regular program includes a feature, newsreel and comedy. Only one performance is given at each hotel, on either Sunday afternoon or evening. At its conclusion at one hotel, the equipment and film is taken to the other for the performance there. Western Electric sound equipment is used and, though there are no restrictions as to whose product shall be used, Universal has furnished the bulk of it to date. Several hundred persons attend the performances every Sunday in designated ballrooms in the hotels.

The hotel management makes no particular effort to exploit the shows, the object being only to furnish additional diversion for its guests.

hands and knees on the floor, apparently laying new carpeting. We stopped in amazement, then coughed politely. The man looked up; that face that looked inquiringly into ours was not, as we had at first believed, Clyde Eckhardt's. Coming upon him later, we told him of the incident and our first interpretation of it. He smiled reminiscently.

"I will never forget," he said, "those first years in the picture business in Chicago. They were thin years of struggle and worry for branch managers. We used to shop around the household departments in The Fair for kitchen tables that would serve as desks. We would indulge in what we feared might be extravagance in selecting a table priced at $3.75. A glass top could be purchased at a glazier's for fifty cents, and the branch manager of that day would be only too happy to take it home with him and scrape it for that smooth office effect before putting it into use."

Which merely reminds us that the movie industry is still waiting for the best Horatio Alger story to be written. KANE.

"Pinks" Cop the Big Money; Advertising Man Pans Copy "Sameness"

Something is wrong with the picture business in the Loop. Grosses in the big houses have been at Lenten levels for the past six weeks, with almost every spot anywhere from $3,000 to $10,000 off. Several have dropped into the red with disturbing frequency. Practically the only money-makers in the six weeks' period have been the "pinks," with the exception of the Congo sensation, "Ingagi," and the present one of Tiffany's, "Journey's End."

Efforts to bolster business have resulted in increased advertising in the dailies, "preview" nights and reduction of time on "run" pictures to get the most out of new name and title draws.

Searching for reasons for the peculiar depression that is current here, local showmen offer several explanations. The first and most obvious is, of course, the effect of depression reported in most lines of business. "Money," they say, "is hard to get, and the economy measures of the individual are down to where they are being felt even in the picture houses."

Others attribute it to the fact that the public is getting "show wise." They not only want something different from the usual fare, but must be sold on it before they will buy. Local theatre advertising comes in for its share of criticism here.

Advertising Needs M.D.

A prominent advertising man in a local agency has offered the opinion that theatre advertising is the worst example of that type of selling in existence.

"There is too much repetition in present day theatre advertising," he said. "There is a sameness about the copy that robs it of interest, authority and selling power. It is too standardized and unimaginative. It has too extravagant verbiage. All of its adjectives are superlative, none of them means anything and they have very little selling force because the public has become accustomed to discounting whatever is written about a show nowadays.

"If, instead of telling their prospects what a superlative cast and story the picture comprises, they would tell something of what the picture contains in simple, forceful, intriguing copy, there would be more buyers for their wares. Showmen are not selling good pictures when they have them, merely because they are using the same old tactics that were in vogue when pictures were a novelty and sold themselves. Theatre advertising needs a doctor."

Another explanation that has been advanced for the poor business situation is that the Loop houses used to draw the trade from the hinterlands because of their luxuriousness. The plowmen made their regular trips to the city just to see the big movie palaces, or were drawn to them just to gawk while here on shopping trips. The big house is no longer a novelty to them.

THEATRE Construction

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—Malco Theatre, Inc., headed by M. A. Lightman, of Memphis, Tenn., plans a new theatre at Second and Main streets in North Little Rock. The plans have been prepared by Thompson, Sanders & Ginocchio. The theatre will seat 1000 and will cost about $100,000.

PLATTSBURG, Mo.—Ralph Stoutimore and Billie Waers are building a 500-seat theatre here.

WEST PLAINS, Mo.—Dean Davis plans to erect a 700-seat theatre.

ROCHESTER—Plans for a new theatre in Hornell, N. Y., are being prepared by Nititos Dipson, Batavia exhibitor.

FULLERTON, Neb.—George W. Luce, formerly of this city, has opened a new theatre, the Delmar, in Morrill.

MOESSEN, Pa.—The Harris Amusement Co. has acquired a site here and will erect a 1,600-seat house at a cost of $300,000.

CENTRALIA, Wash.—Construction of the new $200,000 Fox is under way.

SAN FRANCISCO—Plans are being prepared for a $250,000 theatre on Ocean Ave. It will be erected by Samuel Levin and the architects are Mueller & Pflueger.

BEVERLY HILLS, Cal.—W. Asa Hudson, architect, has been awarded the contract to prepare plans for the Village, which Fox West Coast will build in Westwood Village. It will seat 2,000 and will be of Mediterranean architectural lines.

BEDFORD, O.—Potter-Gabele & Co., of Cleveland, are the architects for the $165,000 theatre to be constructed here.

JACKSON, O.—Plans for the new Jackson, to seat 600, are being drawn by Miller & Reeves of Columbus.

"U" to Star Loff

Hollywood—Jeanette Loff, who sang in "King of Jazz," is being groomed for stardom by Universal, it is said.

Sherman Acts and Directs

Hollywood—Lowell Sherman will play the lead in RKO's "Lawful Larceny" besides directing the talker production. Bebe Daniels will be starred.

Chinese Enjoy Talkers; 2 Get Capacity Houses

Peiping, China—Talkers hurdled the barrier of language here and are proving the same success they have been at Tientsin and Shanghai. The American Y. M. C. A. was first to show talkers here, winning an installation race with a Chinese house. The native and foreign population fill the house daily.

Considerable difficulty was experienced with the installation, as the Chinese electric plants are sadly deteriorated and current so weak it hardly meets the equipment needs. Voices fade away entirely at times.

Fear that the Chinese would not respond to English dialogue is being dispelled with the opposite proving the case, many Chinese enjoying opportunity of hearing English in the hope of learning the language better. Others like the music and other sound, even though they don't understand the lingo. As with silent films, the captions are flashed on a side screen in Chinese, explaining the plan as it progresses.

Quebec Showmen Obtain Censorship Concessions

Montreal—Exhibitors in this territory have won important changes in dealings with the censor board, by enactment of a special order in council.

A revised feature can be sent back, with deleted portions, to the censor board for a second examination. If again rejected, the exchange can apply for a viewing by the whole board on payment of a fee of $5 per 1,000 feet. The decision on this appeal is final but the film can be amended and approved if the exchange gives its consent.

Another important step is that the censors' certificate of approval no longer will appear as a silent insert immediately following the title of a sound or dialogue picture, authorization now being indicated by an official perforated number in the film itself. Thus a feature is no longer disfigured by the censorship trailer.

Winchester, Mass., Turns Thumbs Down on Theatre

Winchester, Mass.—Contention that Winchester cannot support a house of the class which would be required won out and proposal for a theatre here again was rejected in a special referendum, the vote being 1,846 to 1,641 against the granting of a license for a theatre. Since 1914, efforts have been made to secure a theatre in this fashionable Boston suburb.

in the root as there are whole number periods in the number of which the root is extracted, or in other words there is a number for every period, the position of the decimal point can also be ascertained so that there will be as many decimal places in the root as there are decimal periods in the number of which the root is being extracted.

If the decimal part of the number consists of an odd number of figures a zero is added to complete a full period at the right thus, in pointing off 97.45817 into periods it is 97.'45' 81'70.

It is possible by means of the following to solve for the square root of numbers which can be factored into two factors, or in other words into two numerical values, one of which is a perfect square and the other one of the following numbers, 2, 3, 5, 6, or 7. First it is necessary to record the following square roots.

$\sqrt{2} = 1.4142$ $\sqrt{3} = 1.73205$ $\sqrt{5} = 2.23607$ $\sqrt{6} = 2.4494$ $\sqrt{7} = 2.6457$

Suppose that we are called upon to find the square root of 245. This quantity may be factored into 49×5, hence

$\sqrt{245} = \sqrt{49} \times \sqrt{5} = 7 \times 2.236 = 15.652$

Another illustration of the above is as follows: Suppose we are called upon to find the square root of 175. This quantity may be factored into 25×5, hence

$\sqrt{175} = \sqrt{25} \times \sqrt{7} = 5 \times 2.6457 = 13.2285$

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

A National Association of Showmen Meeting in MOTION PICTURE NEWS
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

Congratulations

To the Managers' Round Table Club

By William A. Johnston

SO swift and spirited has been the growth of the Managers' Round Table Club that a second anniversary comes as a distinct surprise. It seems but just the other day that Charles E. Lewis came into my office to discuss the idea.

It was a great idea; that has been proven. Perhaps it has proven greater than we ever imagined; but, certainly, it was born with great hopes and enthusiasm.

The Round Table Club today is the largest and most active association of showmen this business has ever had; and no other association ever had its international representation.

Out here on the Pacific Coast, three thousand miles from headquarters, I find, in every theatre I visit, that the most prominent exhibit on the walls of the manager's office is his framed certificate of membership in the Round Table Club.

When you consider that you will find these same certificates in the theatres of Canada, Europe, Australia, the Far East, South Africa—in fact, in sixty countries other than the United States, where the membership constitutes a small army in itself—that is an organization that each member can be proud of.

And so can the industry be proud of the Club.

Theatres and production today are the two big factors of the business.

But they are highly dependent—one upon another.

The best picture the studios can turn out must look for its reward to the sum total of the individual efforts of the theatre men who show it. They determine its gross; and their success or failure will in turn determine the trend and the resources of production.

The very nucleus of this great box office effort is the Managers' Round Table Club. It is an every week convention of the men who put the picture over. Its ideas are from showmen for showmen; they are the result of intensive, practical, successful showmanship.

Every week the normal grosses of pictures are advanced by the efforts of the Round Table Club. If these increases could be measured in dollars, the total, I am positive, would be amazing.

My sincere congratulations to the Club, its every member, and its efficient chairman.

An Appreciation!

We can really think of no adequate way of expressing our thanks to the thousands of showmen, the world over, who have created and maintained the feeling of friendship and fraternity which exists in the Managers' Round Table Club.

The success of the organization clearly shows that they not only profited by their association but enjoyed it as well, and putting two such important factors together you are bound to find benefit and progress for all concerned.

To those of you who found the club helpful in attaining higher positions and advancing yourselves generally in the show business, we extend our congratulations. To the others, whom we know will do likewise, we offer our best wishes and trust that within the next year they attain their goal.

Don't live a life within your own shell. This is a business where your ideas, merged with the other fellow's, count for greater achievement and success than in any other line of endeavor.

The Modern Musketeers we once dubbed ourselves, and "All For One and One For All" fitted the occasion as a perfect slogan. Let's make it count for more this coming year than ever before.

"Chick" Lewis

Dick Kirschbaum's special cartoon for our Anniversary Edition is worthy of more than passing comment. The subject he portrays is a truthful picturization of the ROUND TABLE CLUB and what it is accomplishing for the show business and showmen. We also take advantage of the occasion to express our thanks to Dick for his fine spirit and co-operation during the past year through putting in many extra hours in order that our pages might carry, at regular intervals, his great series of "Lobby Laffs."

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Making A Dream Come True!

BEING A BRIEF RECITAL OF THE BIRTH AND GROWTH OF THE MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB OF MOTION PICTURE NEWS

WHEN the thought of forming an organization like the Managers' Round Table Club first came into my mind, it was only natural that I could see a great deal of benefit resulting for every showman in the business because it was created on sound principles and not on applesauce.

But we had one great factor on our side in working and putting so much effort into a department such as the Round Table Club represents today. We were catering to the theatre showmen and if the idea was sound then we could well expect the results we have accomplished.

Why?

Because, not only did it meet a much needed phase of theatre men's existence, but its success could only be computed in the returns from those men who were vitally needed to put it across.

No matter how far-fetched one's ideas may be, those ideas alone will not sell any bill of goods if the "buyer" does not become interested. In our case, the showmen all over the world responded in proportion to the effort we were putting into the Club and today we find ourselves faced with the unusual problem of trying to keep pace with the terrific amount of correspondence and contributions we receive every day, week in and week out.

Rapid Growth

From an almost intangible start, covering at the most, between a page and a page and a half, we have constantly grown until we now use every bit of space that the publication can spare for the Club Section.

Why, again?

Because the membership is constantly increasing, not by twos or fours, but by dozens and more. Because, increased membership means increased contributions and correspondence, and if we emphasize the correspondence angle, it's because we would want you to know that what appears on the pages of the Club section each week represents only about fifty per cent of the work necessary in the normal functioning of so important a section of Motion Picture News.

We have prided ourselves, as far as it has been physically possible, in trying to acknowledge with a personal letter, all contributions and mail received. We have endeavored to present every article that appears on the Club pages, not by giving our members and readers a bare, cold statement of what this, that or the other showmen have accomplished, but by telling in an intimate and readable way what they were successful in doing and how those readers may possibly use these same ideas, by reason or remoulding or revamping the original thought, to meet their individual requirements.

Story Treatment

Sometimes we are confronted with two extremes. One: to take a letter of about ten lines and build it up into a story of importance, because the particular stunt or campaign warrants such treatment in our estimation. Second: to take a letter of half a dozen or more pages and boil it down to facts in a brief, yet interesting way.

And so we have kept on and on, each day's mail bringing more and more members and more and more ideas, but all so absorbing and interesting that we have grown to be mighty impatient to get to our desk each morning to see what the mail has to offer.

And why not? Could there be anything more gratifying to the folks here in Club headquarters than to appreciate the thoughtfulness, the fine Club and showmenlike spirit of "All For One And One For All," as displayed by brother managers and members from every conceivable part of the world, by sending us these letters?

In one week you may read about the activities of theatre men in the United States, Canada, Australia, South Africa, India and other places.

What a viewpoint such a variety of ideas must offer to the live-wire manager who is constantly striving to improve his theatre operation, his exploitation and his publicity. But it's typical of what we set out to accomplish and what we are really and truly attaining in a big way.

A Group Triumph

It's no one man's success by any means. To each and every one who enrolled and helped by passing along his ideas through this great clearing House must go the credit and thanks of the Industry as a whole.

What matter the greatness of an idea if it doesn't "click" with the rest of the men? It just won't materialize or grow to any noticeable proportions. Therefor we may well be pardoned for our conceit if we crow a little about this greatest of all organizations in the Industry today.

Big men in the business scouted the theory that we could make a part of Motion Picture News as important as the Managers' Round Table Club, but like good sports, they have conceded the truth that it has really become a tremendous success and, as far as we are concerned, only because the idea and ideals, upon which the structure was erected, were sound and contained good showman-sense.

Favored Everywhere

Circuit heads, divisional managers, and all others controlling either small or large groups of houses, are constantly preaching to their house managers the good to be gained by belonging to and following the activities of our many members each week in the News. They have found that it stimulates interest in the work their managers are doing and gives them a far broader viewpoint on the matter of theatre operation and exploitation than any other means ever attempted or employed. The old saying: "You may lead a horse to water, but you cannot make him drink," certainly applies here. But the average manager, the type of man who strives to get further in the business, needs no unusual coaxing to make reading the Club pages a regular feature of his weekly routine.

In fact, they turn to it first every time the News reaches them. In the Club pages they step out of their immediate surroundings and find themselves seated around an immense table where both the small town manager and the big city managerial brains "swap" stories and talk "shop," but talk it in a language that they all understand. And its just to their liking because it offers a little something different than the regular routine of their jobs, and when they have left the "meeting" of the Club, they have a wider viewpoint and a broader scope in setting out to tackle coming attractions and problems.

Proper Recognition

And last, but certainly not least, they find that their accomplishments have gained them national reputations, and without exploiting the vanity of the members, we give them the much needed stimulus of recognition for their accomplishments on the Club pages, which in many instances places their names before the leaders of the industry and brands their activities as being worth-while and effective

The slogan has gained momentum, the spirit is in the very air we breathe, the desire to help each other and help ourselves has at last become a reality today, while yesterday it was only a dream. Catch hold of that spirit, you boys who still stand on the outside looking in, and you will soon know why the shout of the theatre game, from one end of the world to the other is "All For One And One For All."

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Frank Hill Cashed In With Business On Special Month

And now we present Frank Hill again. Frank, as most of the CLUB members know, is the manager of the Liberty Theatre in Walla Walla, Wash., and from the many showmanlike activities we have recorded on these pages, it's almost unanimously agreed that he knows his stuff.

One of his recent promotions in Walla Walla was a tie-up with some of the most prominent merchants in the town. They got together and agreed to plug a "Come to Walla Walla" month in which efforts were to be centered towards bringing the suburbanites and ruralites to the city. Accordingly a full page ad to that effect was inserted in the newspapers as the first step in the campaign. Special letters, inviting the holders to come to Walla Walla and witness the show at the Liberty were then printed and sent out. The merchants paid for the cost of printing them. On the bottom of the letter Frank got in plenty of plugs on his coming attractions. And by having Leila Hyams sign the letter he got in a plug for "Chasing Rainbows," which he was running at the time of the special month inauguration.

He worked the local merchants in on his special full page co-operative ad for "Chasing Rainbows" and the cut will show you how this as well as the "Come To Town Month" shaped up. Another good angle was obtained through a tie-up with the local newspaper. Frank agreed to furnish the paper with free tickets to the Liberty providing they plugged his show on the classified page. The paper agreed to this and ran special streamers as well as ads on the page to the effect that anyone inserting an ad of one dollar or more was entitled to a free ticket. The stunt worked well for everybody concerned and both the paper and the theatre secured a lot of good-will.

Another tie-up Frank made was with a local automobile dealer, who agreed to furnish cars for a parade. A bunch of the latest models were pressed into service and bannered with copy relating to the picture were driven about the town. And the photo will show you what they looked like. The other photo we are showing is a bunch of kids who are on their way to see the special Saturday morning show that is put on for members of the "Tarzan Club" that Frank inaugurated as a ballyhoo for his new serial. The kids all left at a certain starting point and carrying placards announcing their destination and purpose marched about the town, attracting plenty of attention from everyone on the streets at the time. Incidentally, we'd like to say also that on "Chasing Rainbows" Frank tied up the newspaper on a contest whereby a local dance school agreed to co-operate with both the paper and theatre and give free instruction in a "Rainbow Tap" dance. A coupon was run daily in the paper, during the run of the picture, and plenty of good-will resulted.

So with all these things tucked away, Frank has started to work out some more, and we know that the future will bring in a lot of stunts that will be of great benefit to CLUB members and incidentally, we'd like to remind you again that the majority of the things Frank has passed along will fit any picture you play and it would be well to bear this fact in mind when you are planning your exploitation campaigns.

"WHAT THE ROUND TABLE CLUB HAS DONE FOR ME"

It is with pride that I tell other exhibitors that I am a member of the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB. I have never enjoyed belonging to another organization as I have in being a member of this club. The co-operation that they give you can't be beat; the help that you get both in selling the picture and managing the theatre is of a more benefiting nature than a hundred theatre manager schools. Your problems are their problems and your troubles are their troubles. It is to me like a kid waiting for the theatre to play the next issue of a serial that I wait for the next copy of the NEWS to come in from the mail. Everything that is put in the columns of the ROUND TABLE CLUB is PRACTICAL and nothing is in there that will not help the Advertising Man, the House Manager and the Booking Manager. The House Manager of this day and age must remember that it takes salesmanship to sell and that the theatre is his salesroom and in order to make the greatest number of sales and the greatest return on his investment he must present his wares in a manner that will have an appeal to the amusement buying public. Salesmanship is akin to showmanship. In closing I want to say to all exhibitors that if you don't already belong to the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB don't delay but mail in your application immediately as it will be one thing that you will never regret.

We're Sorry!

Were we ever to attempt one hundred percent representation of our membership in this Anniversary Edition, it would have to run in serial form, and even then it would probably use up the better part of the next six months' pages. So if YOU do not happen to be included in this particular issue, and especially if you contributed to the Anniversary Section, PLEASE bear with us. Subsequent issues will carry much of the material impossible to cram into this one. We know that your spirit of broadmindedness will prevail and we're counting on you all to help us out of this situation. Thank You!

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

YOUR PROBLEMS AND MINE!

J. W. C.'s Problem:

When he took over the management of his present house, he was informed by his predecessor that the newspapers would not co-operate with him on his advertising layouts. Not being well versed in the art of layout, this set him back a bit. He was also limited as to the amount of free publicity he received from the newspaper.

J. W. C.'s Solution:

He got along with them as best he could until Christmas. Then he made a very good decision. He decided to send the men on the paper a present. Forwith a box of cigars was despatched to them. Boxes of candy were given to all of the women employees.

The cost of these gifts was paid for by C. himself. The newspaper people were so surprised and so pleased at his kindness that they sent him a letter of thanks almost immediately on receipt of the candy and cigars.

A day or so later, C. started to shoot in some publicity on the pictures. The paper took it and used it. Now they get plenty of it and they use plenty. As soon as C. got to know the men in the composing room and the advertising department, he found that they were more than glad to co-operate with him in his ad set-ups, especially when they found that the beauty of C.'s ads attracted other advertisers to the papers as soon as they found out that the paper could help them in selling their merchandise.

C. has found, in the short while he has been located at the theatre that the people of the town were more than anxious to help him and would co-operate in every way, providing they knew that the managers operating the local house was what they termed a "square shooter." Whenever C. created a window display he made sure that the house didn't steal the window from the merchant. It was a case of each one being mutually benefited. By gaining the confidence of the merchants in this manner C. today can have almost anything in that town to plug his shows with, and when a theatre man can arrive at that enviable stage he's sure a showman.

It was mighty gratifying to note that, during the publication of these "problems," so many of our members and readers showed their interest by offering suggestions pertaining to the various slants, as set forth from week to week. To the members who furnished us with the "problems," as well as those who helped out with all kinds of solutions, we extend our thanks. The spirit of "All For One and One For All" always wins.

Harry V. Smoots Knew What To Do About This Problem

We can generally depend upon Harry V. Smoots of the Vine and the Memorial Theatres in Mt. Vernon, Ohio, to discover any flaws in his business building campaign.

Until recently Smoots would send his house organ, which contained the program for the entire month to the patrons. The program carried a coupon that could be cut out and brought to the theatre, and entitled the holder to one adult admission at a reduced rate. As a result the person receiving the program would clip the coupon and then throw the card away. So Smoots got busy.

On the next month's program he printed a notice to the effect that only upon presentation of the program would the holder be entitled to the special discount. In this manner he figured that perhaps desiring to see a picture coming at the end of the month the people would hang onto the programs. The special discount was good only on Monday and Friday nights and Smoots felt that his move was a good one, since there was no programs lying about the theatre with the coupons ripped off.

His house organ is made up in the form of a calendar, measuring about 8½ by 7½ inches and printed in black on red with green numerals. In addition to carrying the features the comedies are also listed in the date spaces. Since the theatre is closed on Sundays the space for that day is devoted to coming attractions. The program is well made up and we feel that it carries the message intended, and is no doubt a great help to the persons living on the rural routes.

"Sonny" Shepherd Put Over A Group Of Fine Campaigns

Just before "Sonny" Shepherd former manager of the Grand Theatre in West Palm Beach, Fla., shifted over to his present managerial position at the Lyric in Miami, he turned out a nice campaign on his bill that sold his partons a hundred percent.

Playing "Sally" he tied up with one of the local high schools and put over a popularity contest. He made up one thousand heralds which bore copy on the contest. A space was left on the bottom of the heralds for the insertion of the name of the candidate for honors as well as the signature and address of the nominee. A free pass good for one year was offered as first prize.

The next ten girls received passes good for one week. In addition to winning the title of "Sally" and the one-year pass, the girl having the greatest number of votes was also entitled to bring ten of her friends to the theatre on the opening night. This stunt made a big hit with the teachers as well as the pupils and "Sonny" secured a lot of good-will from it.

Another stunt that was used to good effect was worked on the midnight premiere of the picture. He installed a large horn on top of the roof and through the mike, in his office he broadcast plugs on the picture, breaking up the talk by playing the theme song "over the air." He covered a good many other angles on "Sally" but space will not permit us using them just now as we want to give you a little dope on the way he plugged his short "Fowl Play."

He tied-up with the local baseball field and they painted a sign on the fence to the effect that any ball player making a foul ball that hit the sign was entitled to free tickets to the theatre. The stunt met with immediate favor with both players and parons alike and some valuable publicity was secured.

For a laugh gag on the picture he secured a vacant store window and in it placed a hen, some baby chicks, and a rooster. A sign was placed alongside reading "Fowl Play." And what a load of laughs the stunt brought! In fact, this angle alone did a lot to sell the neighborhood the picture.

We want to thank "Sonny" for shooting this along to us and we are sure that in his new berth at the Lyric he will continue the good work that he did at the Grand.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Here's The Way Ernst M. Lim Sells Shows In Borneo

Since the Managers' Round Table Club is a world-wide organization it is only fitting and proper that our Anniversary pages bear the name of Ernst M. Lim, manager of the Royal Standard Bioscope Theatre in Samarinda, O.K.V. Borneo, in fact, an Anniversary Edition without this theatre being represented wouldn't be so oke.

From the ads we are showing you can get an idea of the way showmen advertise their attractions in the newspapers. As their opportunities for using cuts and mats are very limited, you'll have to agree with us, in view of local conditions that they do turn out a rather nice ad for the houses. It is only once in a while that he gets ahold of a scene mat or two and when he does he tries to put them to the best possible purpose, as you will note in the "Hollywood Revue" ad.

The photo we are reproducing shows a ballyhoo he arranged to plug a new serial he opened with recently. A group of natives were hired to wear trick costumes and parade about the streets of the town. They carried banners announcing the picture. An excellent stunt that he pulled on the film was one used as an advance plug. He announced, two days before the opening, that footprints would be found in the streets on the Friday prior to it. A number of animal footprints, numbering among them them tiger prints, stag and ape prints, were painted on the streets, a woodcut being used for the stencil stamp, and the contestants were supposed to find the right prints and follow them to the end of the trail.

As this was the first time a stunt of this kind had been pulled in the town, nearly everybody was in it, and the picture came in for lots of talk. A pair of tickets to witness all of the episodes of the serial were donated to the persons successfully tracking down the lair of the animal whose prints were on the trail.

So you see, that no matter where a showman is located, if he is a real showman he is going to find some means to plug his shows.

THERE'S GOLD IN EXPLOITING "MATCH-PLAY," EDUCATIONAL- MACK

THE SHORT FEATURE RECORD

The Mack Sennett Special Short Feature Comedy, "Match Play," featuring the British Open Golf Champion, Walter Hagen, and Leo Diegel, American Professional Champ, with the Sennett comedy favorites, Andy Clyde, Marjorie Beebe and Bud Jamison, which was released at the opening of the golf season by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has been eclipsing all records for exploitation on a comedy short feature, and proving most conclusively the value of playing up the spectacular short subject for big added box-office business.

Big first run showmen all over the country have been putting on real feature campaigns on this great short feature, and unanimously report splendid results. Many of them have taken advantage of the extraordinary tie-ups arranged by Educational and outlined in Educational's big press sheet. These include a tie-up with the makers of the Scanlan's Pitch and Putt Rug, which in a number of de luxe houses has been offered as a prize in a putting contest conducted in the theatre lobby or mezzanine, and an arrangement with the manufacturers of Walter Hagen Golf Togs which has been responsible for many fine window displays by dealers in this line of sports underwear, as well as other fine tie-ups.

If you want to know how to make big money out of the little features, read what these showmen did!

Tremendous Drive Put Across in L. A. For United Artists

If a gold medal were awarded for the most dynamic exploitation campaign ever put over on a short feature, the bunch at the United Artists Theatre, Los Angeles, would certainly be among the chief contenders. When "Match Play" was booked into the United Artists Theatre, Max Shane, Publicity Director, as well as Mr. Bledsoe, exploitation man, and Leon Levy, Managing Director, put their heads together, and, bing! a tremendous campaign was created. Despite the fact that Mr. Shane was promoted to the job of handling publicity for the entire West Coast for Publix (congrats, old boy) and Mr. Bledsoe went over to the Paramount, before the campaign was really under way, the show went on, for Andy Harvey and Dave Fred, who replaced Shane and Bledsoe, respectively, know how to "follow through."

Harvey and Fred secured the corner window display in Spalding's Los Angeles shop, than which there is no more natural tie-up. A "freak" driver, three times the size of the regulation club, is compelling the attention of the crowds to the window, which also displays copy and stills on "Match Play" in conjunction with their line of golf merchandise. Alexander & Oviatt, another sporting goods shop, is also using, in its window, a freak club, together with stills on "Match Play."

One of the biggest tie-ups with an individual shop was effected with Tuft-Lyon Arms Company, exclusive dealers in Walter Hagen Clubs in Los Angeles. In addition to giving "Match Play" an entire window, which is illustrated here, they distributed to their customers 2,000 copies of the miniature booklet published for "Educational" by the magazine "Golf Illustrated," in which the principal golf strokes are illustrated by Walter Hagen. Also, 10,000 score cards with "ad" copy on the Hagen golf clubs on one side and with theatre copy at the bottom, were distributed by their outside men at all Los Angeles Golf Clubs. Mr. Williams, their golf pro, is giving free instruction in the lobby from seven to nine each evening. That's what we call getting about three hundred percent co-operation, and then some.

Arrangements have been made for a special golf night at which Willie Hunter, noted golf professional, will appear as guest of honor. Demonstration of fundamentals in golf will be given at the theatre during the afternoon and evening by the Spalding Company's golf pro. A Scanlan Rug is prominently displayed in the theatre lobby, and patrons are invited to try their hand at playing the fascinating game. Two hundred window cards showing Hagen and Diegel in a scene from "Match Play," with theatre copy on the bottom, have been distributed to downtown and neighborhood merchants.

Harvey and Fred ran a special preview for local sports writers, who are co-operating with publicity in their columns. Fourteen one-sheets have been posted in all Y. M. C. A. Branches. On the marquee "Match Play" is being given equal prominence with the feature picture.

An important tie-up was made with the Los Angeles Times which distributed 10,000 throwaways, one side of which carried copy on the United Artists Theatre program, with considerable space devoted to "Match Play," and the other side of which presented a word contest sponsored by the newspaper.

Putting Contest Draws in Atlanta, Big Golf Center

To Manager Robert Hicks of the Paramount Theatre in Atlanta, goes the credit for one of the biggest exploitation stunts ever put over on a short comedy in the South. When "Match Play" played at his theatre, he pulled a fast one when he staged a putting contest right on the mezzanine floor of his beautiful theatre.

The golfers in Atlanta are legion, and when he offered the fine Scanlan Rug absolutely free to the one making the best score for the week, they came in hordes. This was an exploitation stunt of the highest type, and it was handled with finesse and dignity. Even the sign announcing the contest was a fine piece of workmanship, clean-cut and effective.

Robert knows his public. He baited the golfers and comedy lovers with half the advertising space allowed for this program.

Atta boy, Robert! It's the little things in life that count. "Match Play" is a two-reeler, but the results proved it warranted this important campaign.

Smart Showmen Exploit Short Features!

THE SHORT FEATURE GEMS

SENNETT COMEDY, PROVES IT

No Bet Overlooked By McVicker's To Get In Golf Bugs

If you don't all know William Helpin Quigley, of the Advertising Department of Balaban & Katz in Chicago, step right up and meet an exploiteer who is a world-beater. He has a way of rounding up all the biggest spots in town and getting them to co-operate a hundred percent.

When "Match Play," co-starring the golf champs, Walter Hagen and Leo Diegel, was booked into the McVicker's Theatre for a two-weeks' run, he had the whole city of Chicago golf-conscious. Because Mr. Quigley does things in a big way, he secured no less than six windows from the Walgreen Drug Company, three of them being right on State Street, and all of them carrying attractive displays on "Match Play," as well as on their golf balls. The Randolph Street store used, in addition, a counter display.

Mr. Quigley put over a marvelous campaign in the Hub, one of the leading high grade furnishing stores in the Windy City. A display of Walter Hagen merchandise, together with a putting contest, using the Scanlan Pitch and Put Rug, as well as a beautiful window, with blown up stills in color as backgrounds, a display of colored and black and white stills mounted on black cardboard, in the golf department of the shop, and conspicuous notices of the contest and display run with their newspaper golf merchandise advertising; all this was included in the tie-up on "Match Play" with this important shop.

The theatre, too, offered plenty of lure to golfers. The mezzanine floor displayed the Scanlon Pitch and Putt Rug and the lobby displayed life-size cut-outs of Walter Hagen. Mounted still displays proved quite an attraction at the local agency of the Hagen golf equipment manufacturers.

Mr. Quigley didn't miss a trick. He made quite a splash in the displays of the Hub, the Hagen Agency and McVicker's Theatre, with copies of Golfers' Magazine and the American Golfer, both of which carried fine stories on "Match Play." Stickers told where the comedy was playing.

If anyone in Chicago didn't know that "Match Play" was appearing at McVicker's, it was through no fault of Mr. Quigley's. The campaign has been considered such a success, it will be repeated in Balaban & Katz' outlying houses, such as the Riviera, Uptown, Granada, Marbro, Paradise and Tivoli Theatres.

AND ON BROADWAY, TOO!

Undoubtedly the most extensive publicity campaign ever devoted to a short feature comedy by a Broadway theatre is that now being conducted by Vernon Gray, director of publicity for the Rialto Theatre, on behalf of "Match Play," which opens with "The Big Pond" on May 17 for a long run, and is now being publicized in thirty-one windows of the Davega sporting goods stores throughout Greater New York.

Simultaneously with the opening, three stores of the National Shirt Shops chain, prominently located in the Times Square district, arranged special "Match Play" sports-wear windows in which a life-size cutout of Walter Hagen is featured along with scene stills and a theatre credit card.

Extensive newspaper publicity, mailing of special invitations to a large number of golf experts, writers and other authorities, and a number of other features, rounded out a splendid campaign.

Two Corking Window Displays!

This fine window display at the Whitney Sporting Goods Store, tying up with the engagement of "Match Play" at the Aladdin Theatre, Denver, was only part of an extensive exploitation campaign put over by the manager of the theatre, and which created such a demand that the comedy was held ove beyond the original booking time. The cut-out shown was made from Educational's one-sheet poster.

And this "hit-them-behind-the-eyes" display was featured in the window of Appel's store, dealers in Walter Hagen Golf Togs. The Strand Theatre, Louisville, Ky., which effected the tie-up, got behind the comedy in a big way, exploitationally speaking.

They're Doing It Everywhere

Everywhere smart exploiteers are putting over "Match Play" for extra box-office returns. The Newman Theatre in Kansas City and other Publix houses in that territory have displayed the Scanlan rug to big audiences. In Hutchinson, Kan., C. E. Morris, manager of the Midland Theatre, effected a tie-up with the News and Herald for a big city wide golf tournament, with the Scanlan rug and other prizes awarded on the stage of the theatre. Harry S. Dahn put over Canada's biggest newspaper publicity campaign on a short feature comedy for the Capitol Theatre, Montreal. "Match Play" is a big business builder for the summer. Better get on the band wagon.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

"WHY THE MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB APPEALS TO ME"

By HOWARD WAUGH
Fox-New England Theatres

Managing or operating a theatre today is merely another phase of dignified, scientific, intensified merchandising. Instead of drugs, millinery or stock, managers today are selling amusement.

As the line is so diversified—I mean by this that as each new attraction means an out-of-the-ordinary sales angle—the manager must be alert and alive for productive ideas. Certainly, he should know how to lay out an ad, write press material and order paper. This is merely routine. But what else? What if the old brain just won't function? Then, he's a mighty poor merchant if he doesn't get his good ear to the ground, and find out what the other chap in his line has done, or is doing, to bring customers into the "store."

The MOTION PICTURE NEWS through the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB is the only trade medium covering show business today that is not only a clearing house for proven sales helps, but is open freely to all types of managers, chain or independent. For a novice on his first assignment this splendid service is an education. For the seasoned manager, it is an unequalled stimulator.

The "hit-the-spot" editorials particularly appeal to me, and I am sure are a real inspiration to every club member.

AUSTRALIAN SHOWMEN STRUT THEIR STUFF!

It was only a short while ago that we introduced you to our offspring from Australia, the Round Table Club, organized by Mel G. Lawton and featured in the Film Weekly. Now through Mel's hustling, we want to post you up to date on just what the live-wire showmen from this country are doing to sell their shows.

This first illustration we are showing is a novel street ballyhoo, created by Fred Raymond, publicity director for the Star Theatre in Winton, Queensland, as a plug for "The River Pirate." The float was 38 feet long and featured steaming funnels, a captain's bridge, full rigging, machine guns, etc., besides a full crew of "pirates." At night it was electrically lighted and the gleaming port holes and the searchlight on the deck constituted a very effective "flash," that worked up plenty of interest in the production.

We are showing this atmospheric lobby on "Rio Rita," not because we expect you to turn out one like it ("Rita" has played every city town and hamlet in the States by now) but just to give you an idea of how seriously these showmen take their showselling. The lobby, just the way it stands, cost in the neighborhood of two thousand bucks, and it's a certainty that it knocked them silly with the effect it created. This is one of the finest examples of an atmospheric lobby we have seen in some time and is a tribute to Roy Nelson's showmanship at the Capitol Theatre in Melbourne.

And now if you want to do something that will set them laughing and talking here's a stunt used by Freddie Ward,

General Manager of the Regent Theatre in Adelaide. The cakes of ice, as you note from the photo, were placed on top of each other, making a tower. A prize was offered to the person guessing nearest correctly the number of hours the ice would stand without melting. To prevent the water from spilling all over the lobby, the ice was placed on top of a canvas lined wooden tank with a pipe outlet reaching to the corner. As a means of attracting the eye, a color wheel, suspended from the foyer balcony flooded the display with deep steel blues, amber and white shades, to very good results. It would pay you to keep this gag in mind for the summer months as it's safe to say that you'll play a picture you can work it in, and we'd like to offer a suggestion that may appeal to you in connection with this gag. Place a doll, dressed in Eskimo clothes atop the cakes of ice and another one at the foot of the pile with a sign asking "When will they meet?" This little variation may have some sort of drawing power and if you think it will help attract attention, you're welcome to it.

This one used on "Sunny Side Up" is what we call a corking example of showmanship and is the work of Lester Brown, publicity manager for Fox in New Zealand. He arranged to have a man, dressed as a woman, sit in the box used by builders to hoist up steel and stuff, and be hoisted up by the derrick. The stunt was pulled at the noon hour when all of the office workers and others were out on the streets. The man engaged in the construction work, hoisted up the "woman" and when an altitude of several hundred feet had been reached, cards, plugging the picture were thrown down to the persons watching the stunt. Another angle worked on the same picture was the giant banner, which measured eighty-two by three feet, that was strung across a very convenient location on the front of a popular hotel located in the city square. The banner was one of the largest ever used and it attracted plenty of comment from everyone.

In the photo we are showing now you can get an idea of how Dal Cross, manager of the Strand Theatre in Hobart, sells his shows and also how strongly he must pull with the local authorities to get breaks like this. The novel street ballyhoo was used on "Sweetie" and shows the cooperation he secured from the street car company, whose courtesy enabled him to place a large banner on the side of the car, while on the front, he placed a cut-out head of the star of the picture. Both these angles packed a selling power that re-acted strongly in favor of the box-office. And believe us, it isn't the easiest thing in the showman world to get tie-ups with street car companies.

We want to offer our thanks to Lawton and the rest of our Australian members for the very active interest they are showing in our organization and we want them to know that the work they are turning out in their part of the world is a credit to any showman. We are always happy to present any accounts of them on our pages and we know that the future will bring lots more ideas to this one and only "idea exchange."

NOW YOU TELL ONE!

If the Round Table Club were not worthy of YOUR membership—

Then why did three thousand showmen join entirely unsolicited?

Keeping Cool!

By A. C. RALEIGH

Fox Theatres, Olympia, Wash.

At times in very hot weather a rather serious slump in business confronts a theatre without cooling equipment, especially in this day when all the larger theatres are ballyhooing their cool theatres. At the Fox Liberty Theatre in Olympia, for instance, we have no cooling system and a none too good ventilating system, so we had to do something this last summer to cool the house. The air intake is in the paved alley back of the theatre at a height of about four feet from the ground. I found that by running a hose from a tap on the stage and using an ordinary garden spray, throwing a fine spray, with the help of a small boy, we could keep the theatre about seventy degrees on the hottest days. Of course, the spray was not directly into the air shaft but passed it so that the suction pulled the air through the spray. The cost of the small boy was two passes a week. This summer I have arranged to put in a permanent pipe to handle the spray so that it will only be necessary to turn it on and off back stage. The drainage is taken care of by a sewer intake grating in the alley.

Another method that I have used successfully with intakes on the roof is to make a frame covered with coarse, tightly stretched burlap, and drilling pipe with small holes making a spray at the top panel of the burlap, with a valve, admitting the correct amount of water. The area of burlap must be at least three or four times that of the air intake, as you suffer some loss of air in passing through the burlap. Also, if large panels of burlap are necessary, a second spray pipe should be put about half way up on the panels. After a little experimenting, an amount of water can be turned on that will be sufficient to keep the burlap damp with practically no overflow; as the air will absorb the moisture. This principle of cooling air is not new. By this method I have managed to keep temperatures about where I wanted them.

At another theatre in Portland I had what should have been an adequate cooling plant but when I took it over it was in the middle of the summer and I found the business off. The previous manager had advertised his cool theatre in every way, shape and form but it was a long way from being cool. Upon investigation, I found that the air from the theatre vented into the attic and it was absolutely impossible for it to get out, as there was no opening from the attic to the roof. This was soon corrected by the installation of two thirty-six inch ventilators and we were immediately enabled to keep the theatre at almost any desired temperature. Naturally business picked up and within three weeks we broke a summer house record.

In theatres having cooling devices that necessitated the use of ice, I invariably had the ice wagon deliver to the front door, no matter how far the man had to carry it. In one theatre I had a rack built in the compartment between the spray and the entrance to the big theatre ducts. I found that by putting the cakes of ice close together that they froze into one big chunk. Of course, as we used the ice for the pump we chippel it off of this storage. By freezing the cakes together, which is done naturally by the air passing over them, the ice lasts much longer and helps greatly in the cooling.

In another theatre I had a cooling plant but it was not adequate. I found that there was a space in the air shaft about twenty feet long before the shaft reached the fan. This area had a concrete floor and drained to a drainage opening already in place. I piped water into this space and put in ten sprays all shooting at various angles against the air current. This forced the air to pass through about ten feet of spray and practically no water reached the fan. It resulted in the desired amount of coolness on very hot days. Of course, it ran up the water bill but it was only used when the temperature was very high as the regular plant took care of ordinary temperatures.

In almost any theatre, I have found that you have to anticipate your crowd, by having it a little bit cooler than it really should be just before the big rush comes at certain hours of the day. Heated bodies coming in in great numbers will, in a short time, bring the house temperature up mighty fast and my experience has shown that once your temperature gets away from you it is mighty difficult, with the average cooling plant, to bring it back to it proper degree.

No matter how ancient your house may be, or what cooling difficulties you have confronting you, there is always some way of keeping it cool if only to a degree where people are not uncomfortable. A little ingenuity and a slight expense can generally find an answer to the problem.

New York City.

I am writing to compliment you on the activities of the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB Section in MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Anything which brings together good, progressive minds to discuss the problems of an Industry in a constructive way is bound to assist the advancement of that Industry.

Such a medium and such activity is found in your MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB and I am, for my part, pleased with the success you have so far had.

Sincerely,

Sgt. H. J. Smith of Ft. Humphreys Va. Is Army Showman

Here's a situation so unusual that we were debating whether to pass it along on our "problem" page, but since we feel that you would also enjoy reading the good parts of it that we'd publish it as a regular story.

Technical Sergeant H. J. Smith is the Manager of the Engineer Theatre located at the Army post in Fort Humphreys, Va. His theatre caters only to the men enlisted in Uncle Sam's Army and their wives and children. The theatre houses five hundred and fifty-four persons and is a very pretty little place, being built entirely by soldier labor. Restrictions forbid Smith from advertising off the reservation so he is hampered right at the start. Then, there is no newspaper. The only paper medium he uses to get his shows across is by means of mimeographed bulletins. paper for which he provides himself.

Don't develop the impression that these mimeographed bulletins are crude. They are far from that. As a matter of fact we have never seen such nice work done in any form of hand drawn mimeographing. He uses stencils to shape out his copy and we want to say that he does as neat a job as anyone could wish for. And they certainly sell the shows to the soldiers.

A few more stunts he pulled was the imprinting, with stencils, of a number of paper napkins, which were distributed about the mess halls and proved of great value in advertising the attractions. The same idea was used in regards to the flat paper cups which were placed alongside every water fountain at the post. He also imprinted a number of paper bags which were used for the distribution of sugar, etc., and thus found their way right into the homes.

So the point we want to drive home is this: that no matter where a theatre man is or how handicapped he is he will generally find some medium that he can use to sell his shows with. We want to thank Smith for letting us see these and also want him to know that his contributions will always find a hearty welcome awaiting them at CLUB headquarters. And we feel the rest of the CLUB express the same sentiments, Smith.

Miss Jean La Roe Helps J. R. Neth On His Merchandising

A short time ago Columbus, Ohio, was treated to some high powered exploitation when the Neth Theatres, personally operated by J. Real Neth, celebrated the anniversary of three-quarters of a century as show houses.

The real "old-time" house, the Grand, was really the house being feted, but Neth decided to do it up in real showmanlike style, so he brought in the State, Clinton, Eastern and Cameo Theatres. Assisted by the "ace" publicity of Jean La Roe, female publicist for the circuit, he promoted a special section in the Columbus Dispatch that certainly did credit to the theatre. Nearly every prominent merchant in the city was represented on the pages as well as a number of motion picture producing companies. Many other angles were also covered in the campaign and these tended to turn in a record week for the celebration.

On the "Gold Diggers of Broadway" some nice angles were used to exploit the picture. A number of cards, made up in reserved seat ticket size and printed in black and gold, were distrubuted about the town. The cards carried copy on the picture and also offered a reduced rate upon presentation at the box office. This stunt was pulled for the midnight premiere and proved very effective in bringing "stay-ups" into the Grand. Through a tie-up with the Chamber of Commerce, who furnished airplanes for the purpose, cards. Advertising the Chamber's "Gateway Jubilee Week" and the Neth Theatre's attractions were dropped from aloft. A coupon on the herald entitled the holder to a free admission to the theatre if accompanied by one paid admission.

We are showing with this story a sample of the newspaper advertising turned out by Miss La Roe that will give you an illustration of the way the features and the short subjects are plugged. As you will see, it is very simply made up and manages to get across the fact that the show is worth seeing. The special plug in the bottom of the ad on the "Columbus Senators" is a local ball team, whose pictures were taken by the Neth Corporation and shown at the theatre, an angle that, due to plenty of public interest in the team, managed to jack up business a bit higher than usual and also to land some publicity on the short pages of the newspapers.

We want to thank Miss La Roe for shooting these along to us and we hope that in the very near future we will be enabled to pass along some more of the activities of the Neth Theatres and the showmanship of J. Real Neth, who, incidentally, is the gentleman we are picturing at the beginning of this article.

Boucher's Gift Gag Had Town Flocking Into His Theatre

If you recall, a short while ago, we ran an article on Frank Boucher of the Maryland Theatre in Hagerstown, Md., and told you that we expected to pass along some accounts of how he promoted his "Gift Contests" for his theatre out there.

The Gift Nights were run off on every Wednesday and Frank promoted valuable merchandise from the local dealers, which included expensive wrist watches, clocks, a complete men's outfit, and electric radio and an electric refrigerator. In order that you may see how he put the contest over in the newspapers we are reproducing a co-operative ad he ran with the participating dealers. By looking at it closely you can glean just about how many gifts he promoted as each merchandise.

The stunt clicked immediately and the patrons started coming in on the special nights by the hundreds, since it was a rule of the contest that anyone awarded one of the prizes had to be in the theatre on the night of the presentation. A lot of good-will was secured from the stunt and Frank as well as the merchants came in for plenty of word-of-mouth publicity. Being tied-up with "Jubilee Month," the contest helped to put the month over also.

Another thing Frank seems always to be working on is pepping up his kiddie business. And to this end he has now added a new angle. We recorded a while back about the activities of his Kiddie Club and now we learn that he has promoted six pairs of keds (sneakers) from a local dealer. The keds are distributed to six lucky kids every week and Frank has arranged for the presentations to run eight weeks. The dealer presents cards to all members of the kiddie club, which cards in turn are handed in at the door of the theatre. A space is left for name and address and after all the cards have been picked up they are deposited in a box and six names are drawn out.

And did the kids appreciate this gag? They scrambled into the store every minute to get the tickets from the dealer. The stunt not only kept Frank's matinees right up to par but also reacted on the youngsters' parents who no doubt felt that the house was holding their kids' interests at heart.

Thanks, Frank, for keeping us posted on the way your work is clicking down there and we want you to know that we are looking forward with interest to see what this new contest you are promoting is going to be like. So don't keep us in the dark too long, will you?

Emanuel P. Weisner Says:

The MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB has certainly proved its worth as far as the Canadian Western Division is concerned. Every article that has appeared in this magazine has been of invaluable service and the many stunts and exploitations shown by managers in different parts of Canada and the United States have helped considerably in putting over pictures. MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS is something that is really needed to keep the pep and enthusiasm of theatre managers at top speed.

Hats off to the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB. Long may it live.

Fred McLennan Of Ont. Canada Rates Title Of Showman

It seems that no issue would be complete unless we ran a story or two concerning the show selling abilities of some of our Canadian members and it is for this reason that we hasten to tell you what Fred McLennan, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Brockville, Ont., Canada is doing.

He turned out a novelty herald in "Coquette" that had the town paying attention to the attraction. He secured a number of cards in the form of red hearts and imprinted his selling copy on these. Not having been pulled before in the town this angle went over to very good effect and did a lot towards arousing interest in the attraction. The stunt McLennan used, we want to remind you, may be used on almost any picture that you care to use it for.

Incidentally, he is in line for a compliment on the corking work he turned out on his "Love Parade" campaign. He tied-up all the local dealers of prominence in the town and promoted a full page newspaper ad that helped create a lot of interest in the picture. Then he went out and sewed up nearly every bit of available window space and injected a lot of novel and selling angles into his display. He used many more angles on the campaign too but since space will not permit our using them in this number we have endeavored to tell you only of his window displays and newspaper advertising, and we'd like you to know that they certainly did a lot to put the picture across.

Another angle that McLennan seems to have down pretty pat is his house organs. He varies the size, front and lay-out of these weekly. Whenever he wants to use a big one to plug a special picture or something, he sells space on the back page to the local merchants and receives the program almost cost free. Another time he makes up a small black and white one which contains very little copy on the picture but is nevertheless very effective. And still another way he uses is to imprint the back of a herald with the week's program. In this manner he manages to keep the people interested in the attractions and also paying more attention to the house organ by reason of the varied make-ups.

Well, Fred, it's a pleasure to us to see that you are keeping right in step with the rest of the go-getters up in Jack Allan's district and we'd like you to know that we want to hear more from you.

WHITBECK'S ADVERTISING SKILL!

That it requires showmanship brains, in addition to printer's ink, to create fine newspaper advertising is an acknowledged fact and we can pay Frank Whitbeck, of Fox West Coast, no better compliment than to pass along this page of ads as an example of what can be achieved where text, as well as background, counts for so much.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Carlos S. Frias Treated El Paso To Great Campaign

The smiling showman who we are introducing in this article is Carlos S. Frias, manager of the Ellanay Theatre in El Paso, Texas, and since he had included his recent "Vagabond King" campaign as his first contribution we are passing it along in this Anniversary Edition.

He effected a tie-up with the local newspaper that enabled him to secure a couple of ads and a lot of publicity absolutely free. The paper reproduced a photo of the star in the picture and offered cash awards for the person coloring it most beautifully. The only cost to the theatre was five double passes which were used as minor donations. The response to this stunt was so great that extra persons had to be hired to wade through the vast numbers of pictures received.

A special midnight matinee was held and on the afternoon of that day Frias broke with a special double truck newspaper ad that he promoted from a local dealer. The special was well made up and gave the theatre a big plug by means of a four-inch head which ran across the eight columns. The newspapers furnished a lot of stories and pictures free and made sort of a "Vagabond King" special out of it. Two weeks before playdate Frias tied-up with the local Philco radio dealers and arranged that they plug the picture's song hits in their radio broadcasts and this stunt did a lot to get them talking about the picture.

Ten special windows were secured from local radio dealers. Besides this all of the big music stores in the town displayed records and sheet music from the film with cut-out heads and stills from the photoplay enhancing the effect. Fifty automobile tire covers were distributed to car owners and carried all through the engagement of the picture. In addition to this 5,000 special rotogravures were handed out about the town. The whole campaign went over very well and El Paso was treated to one of the finest examples of showmanship it had ever seen.

Richard L. Moss Is Always Pulling Stunts Like These

With Richard L. Moss, manager of the Raymond Theatre in Pasadena, California located so far away it takes a little time for word to reach Club headquarters concerning his work, and we were beginning to wonder whether Dick would be represented in our Anniversary Number, but fortunately luck was with us and we are able to present here some of the showman stunts that characterize his merchandising of every attraction.

On his recent showing of "The Shanghai Lady," he pulled a couple of gags that did a lot to help build up interest in the production. He inserted some excellent teaser ads in the paper and when he felt that sufficient interest had been aroused he broke with his spread, following this up with a special notice in which he claimed that the picture was not for children consumption. This stunt helped him break a house record for two days and good business on the last day. Also in connection with this picture, he placed a cut-out of Mary Nolan, the star, in the lobby with a card asking people to guess who she was. The angle did a lot to arouse interest in the coming attraction and Moss secured some valuable advance publicity.

Through a tie-up with his local newspaper he let the house in for a lot of good-will and free publicity on an "Easter Party." The party was held at the Memorial park and almost every kid in town between the ages of three and twelve was present. The kiddies were sent out on egg hunts and all of the other little stunts that are generally pulled around Easter time. After the games they were given candy eggs and bunnies and souvenirs. As a fitting climax to the festivities, every kid was invited to attend the show at the Raymond. Moss's showmanship was seen in the way he engineered this stunt with the newspaper. Along with the story about the party, the paper ran a coupon, to be clipped by the kiddies and retained. Upon presentation of it at the box office, together with five cents, the kids were admitted to see the show. Space was left on the coupon for name and address and in this manner he secured a mailing list for any kiddie attractions he should happen to show in the future.

On "Hit the Deck" he tied-up with the local Marine Corps and secured a detachment of men. The marines marched to the theatre, posed for pictures at the front of the house and then held a rifle drill on the stage. The picture broke in the local papers and the house was let in for loads of free publicity. Another raft of publicity was secured by him through tying up with the local newspaper and running a Bicycle Parade. The theatre was plugged by a big banner carried by one of the entries in the parade and to top off the affair the awards were made at the theatre. Motion pictures were taken of the parade and show in every theatre in town, and, believe it or not, the house actually received free publicity at the expense of the other showmen in the town.

He gives us a suggestion regarding revival nights that we think merits passing along in case any of the Club have been thinking about running any of the old time features. He ran a trailer on the screen reqeusting suggestions, that also carried an announcement informing the patrons that they could secure blanks from the ushers to write down the picture they wished to see. A box was placed in the lobby and the slips were deposited therein. The revivals were run once a week and according to first hand information from Moss, proved good business getters, especially when they received the proper plugging.

Another angle he used to attract attention to the house was the installation of a loud speaker out front. Various effect records, laughing, yelling, etc., were played through the speaker and gave people the impression that the theatre was a "live" one besides drawing their attention to it. We want to thank Dick for passing these along to us and we know that whenever he engineers some of those stunts he is so capable of doing, that his name will be represented in connection with them on these pages. How about it, Dick?

From the tremendous strides that the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB has spread like wild fire throughout the nation, there is no doubt of its success. The live material which MOTION PICTURE NEWS is furnishing showmen throughout the country, submitted by members of this club, is of great value to each and every one of us, not only as actual exploitation stunts and forms of advertising, but these very stunts act as food for thought in leading to ideas for equal or greater campaigns.

Trusting that you will continue this service to the various theatre managers of this organization, and wishing success to all of the boys of the club, I remain with kindest personal regards,

Yours very truly,
CHAS. A. SMAKWITZ.

SELL YOUR COOLING PLANT!

"COOL" THEATRES

AS SOON as the novelty of the first Spring weather has worn off, we will break out in the dailies with a story of a complete renovation of our cooling plant, detailing numerous newly devised improvements that are being put in, giving us "one of the most modern cooling and ventilating systems in the state." This will be followed a few days later by other items concerning the progress of the renovation, and a final story telling of the completion.

This will all be in advance of our actual warm spell, so we cannot stress too much on the subject of "keep cool," but merely plant the idea that we have completed steps to keep our theatre comfortable in all weather.

We will have started spring cleaning and painting, or redecorating by this time, and will plant several news stories on that, augmenting the favorable impression of our cooling plant stories. The painting and changes in the physical appearance of the house give the patrons something actually visible to the naked eye, and tend to back up both stories, giving us a lasting impression "When Summer Comes."

As the days near, we continue to transform the appearance of the house, inside, gradually working out to the lobby as the first touch of real warm weather starts.

A Marquee Suggestion

Inside the under edge of the marquee, an icicle valance of compo board, painted white on both sides, and covered with metalic snow flitters, gives a cool and inviting appearance to the entire front. If the under side of the marquee has a border of lights, set the valance inside of the lights, thus illuminating the snow effect so it can be seen from a distance, also keeping the inside around the box-office dark, permitting the use of baby spots, fastened up under the marquee, to give cool colors a play on the box-office display frames, etc.

Augmenting the marquee icicle effect, a compo board border is imposed over the top of the lobby frames, transforming the whole lobby scheme into a glistening cool haven that is nothing if not inviting. Cool copy is inscribed across the tops of these border masks, the letters, of course, with snow-capped effect.

Tons of cool fresh air are pouring into the FOX PALACE . . . $60,000 worth of machinery working to keep you cool and comfortable . . . tons of steel turning heat and humidity into summer resort weather . . . come to the PALACE and laugh in the face of the weather man.

Priming the Guns

EFFECTIVE selling of the cooling plant during the hot months is a sure-fire aid to better box-office returns in summer. Conveying the "Cooler Inside" idea is as important almost as the feature being shown.

In the accompanying article, several managers of Fox West Coast offer suggestions for cashing in on coolness in summer.

Suggests Limerick Contest

Whenever a radio program is broadcast from the theatre, or for the theatre, every mention of the theatre name is followed with the slogan, such as: "Fox McDonald, the Coolest Spot in Town;" and, quite often, the theatre name is omitted, using only the slogan.

In line with planting the idea of having "the coolest spot in town," or any such slogan, a limerick contest tie-up with the newspaper is a good bet. Each limerick should contain the theatre name and slogan in some manner, and the limericks can be judged daily, over a period of days or weeks, with the paper running the winning limerick daily. Pass tickets will be all that is necessary, or a merchant tie-up can be made. A co-op page, with the paper lining up Frigidaire dealers and ice plants, ice cream emporiums, etc., can be arranged giving the theatre a banner head for its keep cool campaign. Another idea, with papers that play that way, is to make it a half-page co-op ad, with the rest of the page devoted to news stories and gags about the cooling plant, and the co-opers.

Ice Cream Offers Good Hook-Up

A tie-up with a Dixie Eskimo Pie or similar ice cream bar manufacturer, to give away such bars at special matinees, kiddie shows, Mickey Mouse clubs, etc., is a good hot weather draw, and many other angles can be evolved, such as bannering the delivery trucks, and a special show for all the ice cream employees, to show them how cool the theatre actually is.

This one has whiskers, but is always an appreciated gag, the idea being to give patrons coming in off the hot street a big shot of ice water, which helps cool them off, and is taken as a special service on the part of the theatre. A large cooler, with the ice free for credit given the ice plant, and a white uniformed usher with paper cups, is all that is needed. An embellishment would be to have the cooler in an ice cave effect, under colored lights, a few igloos and scenic background, or as far as one's imagination might be permitted to go.

"HOT" BUSINESS

Ice Cakes Big Aid

In houses not equipped with ice plants, a deal can be arranged with a local plant to provide 100 pound cakes of ice gratis. We use ice in that manner, putting the ice right ahead of our air washer, which cools both the air before it strikes the water, and keeps the water cooler. The ice man gets screen mention, but not about furnishing us ice, as we don't care to spoil the ideas of those who may think we have our own plant. We do manage to keep the house cool, however.

A good gag for a hot day is to tie-up with the ice company and have coins and passes frozen in a large cake of ice. The cake is placed on the sidewalk in front of the theatre, with a card explaining that those present at the time may have the coins and passes after they have melted out. The bottom of the cake should have a picture, 11 x 14 or 8 x 10 still, of the current show, visible to those watching the stunt.

Spray Gives Cooling Effect

A spray of water, shooting straight up from the top of the marquee, and falling in a fine mist on the pavement and possibly the sidewalk, (if the mist is fine enough) is a good cooling bet, giving both a cool atmosphere and the suggestion. We used the steam idea on "Hot For Paris," and have left the spray pipes around the top of the marquee with the idea of turning on the water this summer. The water must be kept in a spray, if it falls over the edge of the marquee many pedestrians would start using the other side of the street or the back of your neck to walk upon.

Decorating the front of the house is important, and the foots, and pit, can be turned into an everglade at little or no expense. Cans of water, concealed in the trough, and in the pit, will serve to keep ferns and sprays of naturals in good condition, and there are always the artificial flowers for those who can afford to buy them.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Staff in White an Ad

One of the best and most inexpensive cool effects is that achieved by dressing all employees in whites just as the heat wave breaks. The whites take blue spots beautifully, and do much to add to the general scheme of coolness within.

To those who have been good and hot (here on earth) and have then been subjected to a loud racket, noise or such disturbance, the thought of softening down the musical numbers by the organist, stage band or orchestra should make a hit. Unless patrons inside the theatre are actually cooled off, and the music strikes up double forte for any length of time, the patrons are bound to squirm in their seats, begin to feel uncomfortable, and finally realize how hot they really are. A few words with the musicians can forestall all this, and in turn, help to cool off the hot customers, along with the plant.

Since all of the new marquees are of neon display, we believe that everyone of these marquees carry red letters to announce the current attractions. It seems that some arrangement could be made with the Neon company whereby blue or green letters could be used instead of red, enhancing the "Keep Cool" idea.

Cold Drinks Offer Tie-Up

Here's an idea that sounds a bit far-fetched, but which could be put over to advantage with the aid of proper promotion.

At present many beverage concerns are concentrating on novel thirst quenchers to meet the demands of summer. A suitable spot could be set aside in an inner theatre foyer, where some enterprising firm could install a nice display and serve cold drinks to patrons of the theatre. The glasses or preferably paper cups used need not be over two or three ounces in capacity.

If a firm were introducing a new drink to the public, no better means of exploitation could be found. The firm would probable be willing to furnish a couple of girl attendants, properly attired, who could serve these drinks to the audience during a special "Keep Cool" intermission. As a rule, a new concern of this kind finds it profitable to do a lot of advertising, both in newspapers and on bill-boards. The theatre could tie up with this display in a prominent manner.

A Frigidaire Co-op

Since Frigidaire does a lot of advertising, a tie-up with them would be profitable. When we were giving away Chevrolet cars in our theatres, through local dealers, they co-operated to the fullest extent. Like the Chevrolet film we showed of the assembling of different parts of a car, we could likewise show a film of the Frigidaire methods of cooling and hooking this up with a reel showing similar methods employed in our theatre. With proper hook-up with Frigidaire one of these Frigidaires could be given away at the theatre in the same manner that we gave away the Chevrolet car. A large Frigidaire could be on display in the lobby with the coils exposed to the air and the Frigidaire hooked up and in operation. The coils would become covered with frost and finally resemble a large snowball. This display could be kept in the lobby during the hot season and would be very effective with blue and green lighting.

Their methods of cooling could be tied up with the methods used in our theatres to cool the air. A lot of possibilities center about this line and many other angles could be worked out in conjunction with this idea.

Girls as Publicity Bets

In houses where the Fanchon & Marco Ideas play, the line girls dressed in bathing suits and busily polishing up the spray apparatus in the air work system, while same being turned on, would make a very effective picture for newspaper publicity.

Where the Frigidaire system of cooling the air is used—the girls could be dressed in furs, mittens, fur caps, etc., while inspecting the cooling plant. A picture of this stunt having the girls a little in the nude for contrast.

Some Thermometer Suggestions

Hang two large thermometers; one in town near heavy sidewalk traffic and the other in the theatre lobby. On the thermometer in town call attention to the prevailing temperature and urge people to come to the Fox Theatre where the thermometer inside the theatre is, say 20 degrees cooler. This of course can be varied according to the maximum and minimum temperatures.

Display a large block of ice, say 200 pounds, in the lobby with a placard alongside worded to the effect that "outside this cake of ice would melt completely away in five hours. Here it will last three days. It is always cool and comfortable at the Fox Theatre." This could be varied according to the town. You might even go to the extreme of putting a cake of ice on the sidewalk in front of the theatre, and one of similar size inside, which would create a crowd to watch the result, and of course the papers would play it up big. You could really make a contest out of it and have some prominent man of the town be the official judge, etc.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

"KEEP IT UP, SOLOMON!"

You can bet the Managers' Round Table Club wants to be among the first to congratulate Sigmund S. ("S. S.") Solomon, popular showman of Youngstown, Ohio, on his new appointment to the position of City Manager of the Paramount-Publix houses in his district.

His new position puts the State, Cameo, and Paramount theatres under his supervision. Solomon was formerly the manager of the Paramount Theatre in the city and we don't doubt but that the excellent work he turned out while at that house did a lot towards securing his present position for him.

He is quite well known to many of the club members, as his activities have been recorded on our pages from time to time, and it needs only a look into the back files to prove our statement when we claim he is one of the finest showmen in his section of the country.

With a couple of more houses to look after, it's safe to prophesy that Youngstown is going to be treated to showmanship of the like they have never seen before, for when a man with Solomon's experience gets set to sell a show in any town and to anybody you can bet that it will be sold. Congratulations, "S. S." And need we say that the pages are going to be full of a lot more new stunts from your district?

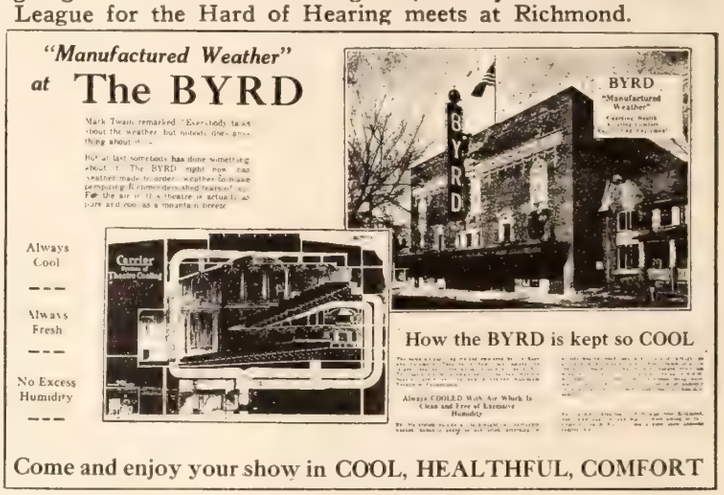
Charles P. Carroll Is Noted For His Fine Publicizing

And now let's all rise and extend a hand to one of New Jersey's "ace" publicity men. The well known and popular Charlie Carroll, director of advertising and publicity for Warner Brothers' Hudson County Theatres who's doing a great job out there.

Charlie is by no means a stranger to the gang since his high powered work has been represented on our pages so many times we've lost track of it. But since this edition is our anniversary number, he has come through with a little personal "dope" on himself and we present it herewith.

Formerly a newspaperman, Charlie forsook the Fourth Estate to become a film salesman and it turned out to be such a racket that in a little while he shook the salesman's dust off his heel and bought his own house. He operated the theatre for some time and then sold out (at a profit), and went to work as a theatre manager for a representative circuit. As he had been in the racket since 1914 it didn't take him long to decide that he wanted a publicity job. So a little later we find him enthroned in the capacity of publicity man and advertising director, working in that capacity for various organizations and then finally hooking up with Warner. The rest is history as Club members know.

And just as conclusive evidence that Charlie is a real go-getter we refer you to the edition of the M.R.T.C. of March 29th for an account of his "Sacred Flame" gag. And his "Take-A-Chance Week" of March 15th. And if those two aren't sufficient you may consult the edition of Dec. 28th, 1929 and the edition of Nov. 23, 1929, and by the time you've looked over those few accounts we are sure that you will agree with us that he has the goods as far as selling shows go.



He has been hitting them high, wide and handsome in his present position and what more can we do than wish him continued success. And incidentally, we have on hand a whole mass of material concerning Charlie's recent work and we are very sorry that the limited space in this issue prohibits the use of it but you can be sure that it will make its appearance in a few weeks and we want to say that there's some corking stuff in it.

Stewart B. Tucker Tells Public All About His House

A couple of more points which show clearly the showman ability of Stewart B. Tucker may be seen by reading this article, which, because of its valuable angles we are including in this special anniversary number of the Managers' Round Table Club.

Since summer is very close at hand we are going to "kill two birds with one stone" and show you how Stewart informs his patrons of his cooling plant. The ad we are reproducing was run in one of the largest papers in Richmond and you will note its value from the make-up. A short while ago we ran a box on cooling plants and explained that Ed. Hiehle had a herald made up which sold his patrons. The herald was imprinted with the photo of the theatre's cooling device, so now if you are contemplating something of the sort, here's your chance to use it. You can do the same thing as Stewart has done and we are sure it will merit the expense.

Another example in modern showmanship was effected by him when he installed earphones in the theatre, for the convenience of those patrons, hard of hearing. This stunt met with immediate approval and boosted good-will 100% for the house. In addition to that, it looks as though the theatre is going to come in for a lot of good publicity when the National League for the Hard of Hearing meets at Richmond.

A while back, he had a special organist playing at the house. The musician was featured in novelty numbers and broadcasts and made a decided hit with the patrons. The engagement afforded Stewart an opportunity to display some fine showmanship and he certainly took advantage of it in many ways. He used another excellent stunt recently when he brought back the "Desert Song" for a Holy Week engagement. This picture broke a record for the house last year and though we don't know how he made out with it at this time we feel that since he knows the city well enough to bring back a picture for a whole week, it must have clicked.

So you see, Stewart is quite some showman. We have had the pleasure in the past of recounting his up-to-the-minute work and we know that the future will bring more developments and present some angles which will be of value to the Club. Keep up your fine work, Stewart.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

La Rose And Joice Prove Themselves Very Fine Showmen

It gives us pleasure at this time to present to the Club a couple of more "ace" showmen in the persons of Joe LaRose, manager of the Fox Theatre in Detroit and J. Maxwell Joice, director of publicity and advertising for the house.

A good deal of talk is occasioned among the residents of Detroit, due to the up-to-the-minute way these showmen are selling their shows. One of their recent activities was the provision of parking space for the vast number of cars arriving nightly at the theatre. The charge, ten cents, was the lowest in the city as the rest of the places demanded a half a buck to park. And with so many cars in Detroit you can figure what a benefit the parking space angle must have been to the house in the way of securing good-will.

And talking about good-will, it is time for us to present an account of the midnight benefit for a slain policeman that the two showmen ran. The tragedy occurred the first week in March and the newspapers played it up a great deal, lauding the policeman for his heroism in performance of duty. On the night of March 17th the theatre gave a midnight show for the benefit of the officer's widow and children. The entire stage and screen show was presented and in addition Jack Dempsey, the Police Glee Club, the Mayor of Detroit, Police Commission and Police Trio were also presented on the stage. As the Detroit Daily sponsored the benefit, the house secured six days of special publicity. A goodly sum of money was derived from the show and presented to the policeman's family, the theatre as a result obtaining a tremendous amount of good-will.

We are showing a photo here of a display Joice arranged for "Happy Days" and we must hand him a little tribute on the very effective showing that it created. He added a lot of "life" to the display by using a couple of wax mannequins in the window. The display, in addition to plugging the picture, also got in a boost for the theme songs.

On "They Learned About Women," some good publicity was secured by inviting the local Detroit Tigers ball team to attend the performance. Besides this, Van and Schenck, stars of the picture, appearing at the time in Cleveland, also sent a wire to the club inviting them. The wire was enlarged and displayed in every Postal Telegraph office in the city.

The layout of ads which accompanies this article will serve to give you some idea on the sort of newspaper advertising done by La Rose and Joice and we want to go on record right now as saying that they are some darn fine examples of selling work. And especially do we want to say something about the novel stunt he used in running one of his ads upside down. This ad is the second one from the left. Though the stunt is not new it is nevertheless sure to click. In this instance a new touch has been added. Under the Fox head an explanatory note states "Don't Phone Us About This Ad—We Know It's Upside Down —And Our Big Stage And Screen Shows Will Turn Detroit Upside Down In The Same Manner." The gag went over like nobody's business and if you want to inject a little novelty in your advertising it will pay you to try it.

You will also notice that he plugs almost every attraction the theatre features, but he does it in such a way that the copy will not appear to be too crowded. In his "Laugh Week" ads, he has injected a "laugh" by putting a little cut into the "O" which forms part of the heading. By looking closely at this lay-out you will notice many other showmanlike touches.

We want to thank La Rose and Joice for passing these along to us and our only regret is that they didn't include a photo of each other along with their contribution. However we hope that they will remedy this in their next letter and give us a little "personal" dope on their careers as well.

The interchange of ideas is an invaluable aid to any theatre manager in planning campaigns on pictures. As many such ideas appear each week in the intelligently edited "Round Table Club" department of the "Motion Picture News," I have always heartily recommended it to my managers.

Another great aid to the managers and publicity men is the new section, "Exploitation Reviews" giving valuable suggestions on selling the latest pictures.

Charlie Brown of Canada Also Joins Our Organization

We want to introduce another Canadian showman to you in the person of Charles Brown, manager of the Regent Theatre in Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, Canada.

Brown is a showman of many years experience, having started in the racket in 1913, entering it cold. He had just arrived in Canada from England, and though he had only sixty-nine cents in his pocket managed to get along until he reached Saskatoon, where he obtained a job in a theatre. It was not so long later that he became a manager. Now he has traveled all over the provinces and handled a good many show houses, with the knowledge he gleaned from his first experiences at the Empress in Saskatoon.

He gives us a couple of experiences he encountered in his showman life. At one time he let go of a portable typewriter in ten feet of snow while traveling to the theatre and at another time was forced to open the house in a blizzard that was raging at the speed of 120 miles an hour. But the point is he well known one that no matter what kind of a day it is, like the letter-carrier, a showman is always on the job.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

"THE ORANGE ORACLE"

Once upon a time a very young and very bucholic singer, illustrator, and manager who thought he knew a lot about show-business subscribed to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and therefrom plucked wisdom and wisecracks and impressive statements for his business associates and the incidental film salesmen who flooded the country and actually sold you film in their best salesmanlike manner. Yes, sir, this baby admitted he knew a lot and probably thrived considerably on his own ego.

Came a time when he sold his personal holdings and entered the freelance manager field with success. This same "hot-shot" even wrote articles in those early days and they were actually accepted and printed in the "Orange Oracle"—the good old "M. P. N."

Time passed, tunes changed, and the young man's salary thrived—sometimes bonuses, sometimes percentages—but with continuous work safety seemed indefinitely assured. Why not? There was a wealth of pictures, plenty of vaudeville, still quite a few worthwhile road shows, and stock. Who should care if a few houses were becoming big circuits and Bill Fox was struggling to expand—and other complications; it was just what the Y. E. (young egotist) had been waiting for, the chain circuit's eventual disintegration, then probably he could grab himself a house, a nice house and settle down with his wife and kiddies to put over that big effort for which he'd been saving that final "big push" which can come only with that great desire of personal achievement.

In the meantime, some punk from New England, by the name of Charles E. Lewis, had taken over the page devoted to "Management" in M. P. N., and of course it wasn't going to amount to much, just another flash in the pan.

BUT SOMEHOW, the darn thing grew and grew and the Y. E. slid in a letter with the feeling of a kid caught between bases in a sand lot game. Well, anyhow, this sap, Lewis, printed his stuff, and slipped him the needle about having always had his name in on the early lists because of his former connections with the sheet, and so the guy from the sticks began to feel himself a regular fellow again and with his name in print occasionally began to have the satisfied feeling of a manager who has just checked up on a profitable week.

BUT CAME THE TALKIES and, boy, with it one whirligig of a year; anything could and did happen. Values changed, big deals prospered, small groups sold out for millions over night. Phoey! what meant the old time show-business traditions with its one grand family idea? Not a thing; managers were worth so much a quart soaking wet and no buyers.

Now, what does this wisecracker Lewis do? Fellahs, whadda you think? Why he plays FOR the manager, opens the doors of the R. T. C. pages and, though it sure must have steadied his circulation, yet what a harbor of refuge in stormy times was the good old R. T. C. to the showboys in the field. A service bureau was inaugurated and many a young comer got a helping hand and good advice when suddenly that ominous "Your Services Are No Longer" notice arrived. All through this flurry the club and the now "CHICK" Lewis kept a level head and a steady hand on the helm and today the ROUND TABLE CLUB is one of the most noteworthy institutions in all show-business. Behind the "one for all" idea lurks a power as yet unexpounded and THIS boob scribbler, growing older and possibly more wise, if not wisecracking, senses a security heretofore unknown in show-business. An institution of managers, for managers, by managers and a reasonable assurance of at least a hint as to where another spot is open and layoff avoided in case of some sudden amalgamations which seem to be the order of the day.

So through the years of steady expansion, conceivable only to careful, thoughtful editorial policy, the MOTION PICTURE NEWS has become the "ORANGE ORACLE" of show-business, and in the two most hectic years in all the history of show-business has achieved the most outstanding and individual place in the show world, has maintained an assured circulation, as well as providing a harbor of mental refuge for thousands of earnest show-boys who would give almost their all to maintain their position of honor and trust in their chosen calling and who, in joining the R. T. C., sense that old time "big family" feeling in the clan cry, "One For All." So now this Mr. Charles E. ("Chick")—call him what you like—Lewis, at the end of his second year becomes no longer "that guy from New England," but a real, regular big-timer, a show-boy and a gentleman, and this voice from the tall timbers stands ready to lead the "Three Cheers" and a Tiger for the same hard-working boy and his editorial associates.

Thanx. G. B. ODLUM.

"G. B." Maybe you didn't think we would run the above story. But here it is. Thanks for all the nice things you say. We're not immune and it gave us quite a "kick" when it first arrived on our desk. I'll be seeing you . . . and it won't be long now.

C. Copperman Had Plenty Of Publicity On Last Campaign

With so many examples of of the work of Charles (Chuck) B. Copperman, manager of the Ohio Theatre in Warren, Ohio, being recorded on these pages, we thought we would have quite a job on hand to pick out something to feature as his anniversary contribution. Fortunately, the breaks were with us.

Chuck ran a contest recently in conjunction with his showing of "The Sky Hawk," and secured plenty of free publicity in the local newspaper. Since this campaign was typical of the work he is always doing we decided nothing would do but that we feature it in this number, and let you see how he boosts business.

By examining the cut reproduced here you will be able to follow the campaign step by step. The stunt was an "Airplane building contest" whereby prizes, donated by local merchants, were given to the best designers and builders of a toy plane. Some of the town's leading merchants donated their merchandise and it included in addition to a silver cup which went as first prize, a suit of clothes, cash and tickets to the theatre. The first column on the left shows the contest coupon that was to be filled out and sent in by the youngsters, and Chuck in this manner had some sort of an idea as to the number of entrants.

As the models of the planes were submitted, they were put on display in the lobby and under the marquee, and, as the photo will show you, a wonderful atmospheric effect for "The Sky Hawk" was created, which, besides dressing up the front, attracted a lot of attention from passersby and passing autoists. The contest went over like nobody's business and the youngsters who had entered were well satisfied. The prizes were given away from the stage and it's a safe bet that business took a jump on the night of the presentation.

Before closing this all too brief article we would like to remind you once more that the stunt Chuck used is not necessarily attached to the one picture. When you play a film with an aviation story you can use the same angles and we are sure that if you follow Chuck's methods carefully you, too, will receive the same results in building up your box office and the good will of the town.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Showmanship Predominates All Of MacLevy's Work

A showman who is certainly making a name for himself is Monty MacLevy, manager of the Lefferts Theatre in Brooklyn, N. Y.

No stranger to his fellow Club members, since his name has been represented on our pages many times in the past in connection with some corking stunts, Monty has just recently been located at the Lefferts and this contribution shows that he is keeping up the fine work he did at the Cross Bays and Ozone Park Theatres in Long Island when he handled those two houses.

When he played "Hit the Deck" he was forced to step out and display a lot of showmanship since the picture was booked in during Lent but then since no real showman worries about conditions, it wasn't surprising to learn that he made a tie-up with the local Junior Naval militia that helped put the picture across. For five days in advance of playdates he had boys stationed in front of the theatre. The complete squad, whose picture we are showing below, was posted at various spots about the front of the house. From three in the afternoon until nine thirty at night two boys marched up and down in front of the house. The patrons were treated to a couple of laughs in the form of the littlest members of the squad trying manfully to master the soldier size rifles. But all in all this angle did loads towards putting the picture across and Monty let the house in for plenty of good-will.

The other photo used in conjunction with this article shows an inside lobby display created by him for "Condemned." The display was painted against a beautiful background of drapes which tended to give it the effect of a stage and concealed spots, playing upon the cut-out of the orchestra leader and the brilliant colorings lent a tone that as far as catching the eye goes, couldn't be beat. When the playdate for the picture rolled around Monty promoted a window from one of the leading dealers in the section and arranged to place the display in the window. And in this manner he managed to put it to a double use.

Pictures, Sound and Then the Smell

HAM AND EGGS ON—AND OFF—BIJOU'S SCREEN

(Rand Daily Mail, Johannesburg)

The audience at the Bijou Theatre last evening received a surprise it did not bargain for.

During the screening of the Wild West talkie, "In Old Arizona," an episode occurs in which a bandit demands ham and eggs from a farmer's wife. Forthwith slices of ham and two eggs are seen and heard sizzling in a pan.

But what the audience did not expect was the appetizing smell of this dish, but this was actually wafted through the theatre as the old woman held her pan over the fire!

It was an excellent "stunt" by the management that took the audience by surprise. It will be repeated at every performance of the film.

"WHY I WILL NEVER BE A DIVISION MANAGER"—AND THE REASON

"ANONYMOUS"

¶ I will never be a division manager because my division will be the most profitable division of any circuit in the country. I will tell you why:

¶ The ace houses in my division will be operated by the most capable managers and publicity men in the business. It will be the ambition of every theatre manager and publicity man in the business to work in my division, because theirs will be the distinction of being the recognized leaders of A-1 theatre operation.

¶ The manager and publicity man in each of these theatres will receive a minimum salary of $200, and the pride of each will be such that they will deliver for me week in and week out, knowing full well that if they don't there will be other managers and publicity men throughout the country just waiting for the chance for some of my men to move over.

¶ I will pay my executives these salaries because they will be hand picked and so will each of their successors. For that reason it will be the ambition of every theatre manager and publicity man in the country to work in my division and from these positions they will graduate into bigger opportunities.

¶ These salaries that I will pay my managers and publicity men will be justifiable for several reasons: First, for their ability and, second, because the investments they are responsible for are worthy of a watchful eye and deserving of expert attention. My managers will be tried, tested and seasoned with sound theatre experience. Men, for instance, like "Rasty" Wright of Grauman's Chinese; John Goring of the New York Criterion; Bill Hartung of Publix Paramount, Seattle; Charlie Pincus of Omaha; Leroy Johnson of J. & V., Seattle; Al Raleigh, somewhere on the Pacific Coast.

¶ Seasoned theatre publicity men of the calibre of Ham Beall, Hollywood; Bill Pine, Chicago; Eddie Hitchcock, New York Paramount; Hardie Meakin, Fox, Washington, D. C.; Bud Gray, Rialto, New York; Dick Mitchell, Los Angeles.

¶ My division will be the most successful because these men will be the most important in it and when occasion warrants I will not hesitate to increase their salaries accordingly. They will live comfortable and work for me with every ounce of energy. They will not fail me because they will constantly be aware of the fact that in no other circuit will they be as happy and as well recompensed for their ability and when they step into another circuit they will be stepping down and they will know it.

¶ I will never be a division manager and have the most successful division in the country because my superiors will say I'm crazy. They will not permit me to pay my men for their ability; the men I know can take any white elephant and put it on the side of the ledger that looks brightest.

¶ My men would operate in this wise. Seasoned managers that they are, theirs would be the complete operation of the front of the house. They would know and do know their schedule backwards. They are smart enough to get more people into their theatres than their houses were intended to accommodate. My publicity men would know their business so well that theirs would be the full responsibility for merchandising. They know their business so well that they would merely confer with their respective managers and not be subservient. Each is an expert in his department and when things go amiss I can point my finger. In other words, there will be no "buck-passing" . . . . . and with this set-up, mine would be the biggest money-making division in the country,—and because of this set-up—I will never be a division manager.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

GOOD-WILL——!

By H. L. LAURENCE
Crescent Amusement Company, Paris, Tenn.

This is my thirty-fourth year in show business. From the time I started in this racket, right up to the present day, one thing have I endeavored to do, and that is—secure the good-will of my patrons. From past experiences I have found that whether your theatre is located in a key city, a small town, a community or just a hamlet, there is nothing so valuable as good-will when a manager wants to sell his shows.

My first move, upon taking over the affairs of a house, has been to gain the confidence of the residents of the place wherein the theatre is located. And to do this, I begin by telling them that my house is trying to present the best in pictures, in the most up-to-date surroundings and midst the most courteous treatment from the janitor to the manager. When they begin to see that I really mean what I say when I inform them that, outside of going to a big city, my shows cannot be duplicated, their confidence grows stronger.

One of the biggest mistakes a manager can make is over-advertising his attractions. As most everybody in this business is aware, a picture can knock them cold in New York and take a house for a loss in Squeedunk. The only way to prevent this happening to you is to know your public. Then you'll have no opportunity to squawk when a million-dollar production flops in your house and a $1.95 piece of film knocks them dead.

It has been my habit, and indeed I consider it my duty, to stand in the lobby before show starting and greet my patrons, nightly. More than two-thirds of them will ask me whether the picture now showing is my kind of picture. I never fail to tell them the truth. Even to the extent of extending them the privilege of exchanging their tickets for the next attraction. No one ever accepts the offer and I never receive kicks. Thus by this simple, honest and frank move, I retain that most valuable of all a house's assets—GOOD-WILL.

George Crockett Is Latest Maine Showman To Join

From up in Maine we enroll another live-wire showman. George A. Crockett is the manager of the New Star Theatre in Dover and with an eighteen year background of experience it looks as though we are going to hear some nice things concerning his work.

As his initial contribution we would like to relate an account of the ballyhoo he used for "Street Girl." He had a boy dressed as a girl pass out throwaway cards, which besides bearing copy on the picture, also carried a notice to the effect that anyone disclosing the identity of the "girl" would be given a week's pass to the theatre. Since nearly every one in town knows the other person a lot of fun was occassioned and the stunt went over very well.

Regarding Crockett's career in the show game he has worked as a pianist, played and coached in Amateur and Professional minstrels and reviews and has worked in nearly every other branch of the business. The New Star is operated by the Graphic Circuit Co. and features an all-talking policy.

we want you to know that we expect you to become a very active member since the rest of your brother members up in Maine are certainly a bunch of hustling go-getters. We extend you a welcome into the Club and feel sure that your association with our organization will be both pleasant and profitable to all. Keep us posted on what you are doing up there now and don't forget our pages are always wide open to record any stunts that will help your fellow members.

"All For One And One For All"

Instead Of Beauty Contest Hickey Ran A "Vacation Trip"

If you are planning to run a bathing beauty contest or a popularity contest in your house at some time this summer, here's a chance to look over another type of contest which does not confine itself to pulchritude and "it" and is more liable to click, due to the fact that anyone can enter it.

The contest is the idea of E. L. Hickey, manager of the Capitol Theatre in York, Pa. By examining the rules you can get a pretty fair idea of the way a "Vacation Trip" campaign is put on. In calling it a "Vacation Trip," Hickey got away from the popularity angle and sold the town on the idea that any girl could win it. And since the winner receive over a million votes you can imagine what an asset the angle was.

1.—50 Votes for each 15 cent ticket.

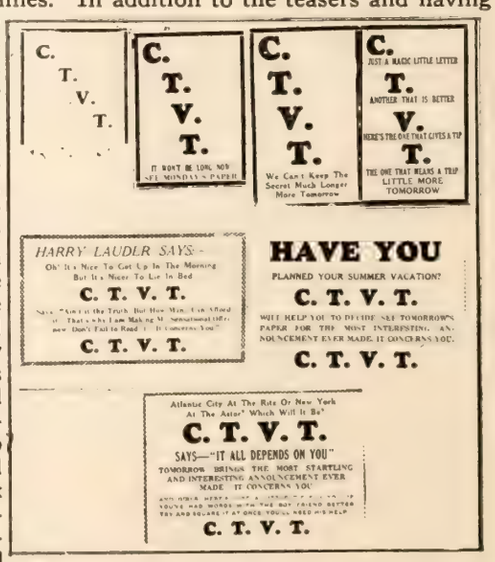
2.—75 Votes for each 30 cent ticket.

3.—100 Votes for each 40 cent ticket.

4.—Votes are to be placed in ballot box in lobby.

5.—Final returns will be tabulated by an established Certified Public Accountant.

6.—All girls over sixteen years of age are eligible.



7.—(a) The contestants receiving the largest number of votes over the period specified, will be our guest the week of September 4th, with a chaperone of her choosing, at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, Atlantic City, N. J., with railroad transportation from York to Atlantic City and return, including drawing room, and a suite of rooms at the hotel and meals, absolutely free.

(b The contestants receiving the second largest number of votes, and a chaperone of her choosing, will be our guest at the Astor Hotel, New York City. The trip to include railroad transportation from York to New York and return; suite of rooms at the hotel; meals and theatre tickets to current successes, the three nights they are in New York, absolutely free.

(c) The contestants receiving the third largest number of votes will receive as her award A SEASAN PASS, GOOD FOR ONE YEAR, to the CAPITOL THEATRE.

In case of ties for any of the prizes the full award will be given to each tying contestant.

We are reproducing a number of the teasers he used so that if you decide to adopt a stunt of this kind you might want to work along similar lines. In addition to the teasers and having at the time of the contest a house cameraman, pictures of the Astor Hotel and Broadway at night were "shot" by the cameraman who was despatched to New York especially for this mission. On the way back he stopped off at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in Atlantic City and obtained shots of the hotel and the boardwalk. Upon his return to York, he and Hickey set to work to shoot the interiors and exteriors of the local merchants stores, which scenes were incorporated in with the special shots and about six hundred feet of film was run off showing the way to get votes, and pictures of the vacation in store for a lucky winner. At the close of the contest, when the winners were chosen, shots were also filmed showing the lucky girls being outfitted by the merchants, and projected at the theatre.

The newspapers gave the trip a big plan, as did the local merchants, whose good-will Hickey secured by filming their stores and giving them a play in the advertising and news stories. You will notice that the cost of running such a contest is comparatively small. For after figuring out how many tickets must have been bought to land over a million votes you've got a profit right there. We want to thank Hickey for passing this stunt along and let him know that we think its a very good angle and will bear plenty of looking into. Let's have some more of your work in the very near future "E. L." and while you are about it, shoot us in a photo and some dope on your experience in show business to date, so that we can give you a real introduction to the rest of the Club.

Denis Callard Represents S. African Type Of Showman

In order to prove that the Managers' Round Table Club is truly a world wide organization another showman from a far off continent hastens to send in his contribution to our Anniversary Number. The showman is Denis G. Callard, manager of the Vaudette Theatre in Krugersdorp, Transvaal, South Africa, and as his work has been represented on our pages before he is no stranger to his fellow Club members.

In order that you may know what he looks like we are running his picture in conjunction with this article and if you look very closely you can probably see how healthy that African sun is, but since we are presenting his work here, we'll have to get down to business and explain the layout of photos we are using in this story.

The photo of the gentleman on the upper left is that of C. E. W. Smith, chief projectionist of the theatre and one of the members of the Club, while the photo below shows a street ballyhoo used in connection with "In Old Arizona." A man, dressed in Mexican costume and mounted on a horse rode about the streets plugging the picture by means of a banner on the horse's flank. For his showing of "Wings" Callard decided that radius was needed so he arranged to have a car visit the outlying towns. He affixed a model of an airplane on the radiator of the auto and this, together with heralds and a banner helped bring the picture to the attention of the residents in other towns.

The other two photos show ballyhoos he arranged for "Red Hair" and "Fast and Furious." For "Red Hair" he had a boy and girl, dressed in red wigs, walk about town. An umbrella carried by the girl and a valise borne by the boy plugged the title and playdates. On "Fast and Furious" two men, dressed in suits made up to resemble rubber tires walked about the streets and attracted plenty of attention.

As Callard is located in a town where exploitation possibilities are a bit limited we feel that he deserves a compliment for the work he turns out on his pictures and one thing we are sure of is that since he knows his town so well and uses the street ballyhoos often, they must certainly do a lot towards boosting up his box-office receipts and when a showman can show results like that what more can he ask for. Right, Denis?

A big idea, launched and developed by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, is the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB. Indeed it is no exaggeration to say that it is the most helpful feature department ever sponsored and put into practical operation by any trade paper or magazine in the history of the motion picture industry. It is an outstanding success, also, and perhaps more particularly as a builder of good will, of friendships, of what might well be called "cameraderie" or the spirit of comradeship; albeit the great majority of the members of the club are unknown to each other except through the "exchanges" in the columns of the NEWS. I am glad and proud of my membership and I believe that every theatre manager and owner in the country should seize the opportunity to affiliate himself with the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB. It is now two years young, and what a splendid record of achievement and progress, of helpful suggestions, ideas and advice to the exhibitor those two short years of its life contain. Long may it live and flourish. Heartiest congratulations on its second anniversary, from

HARRY BROWNING,
Publix Metropolitan Theatre, Boston.

Walter J. Nelson Used A Good One For "Rio Rita" Gag

We'd like to introduce, at this time, a real showman of many years experience, in the person of Walter J. Nelson, publicity man, on the RKO circuit, who is now operating around New England.

We're a bit late in presenting Walter to the rest of the Club but in view of the rushing and hustling around headquarters we're sure he'll pardon our tardiness. He has been in the show game for a goodly number of years and his experience has been wide and varied. Before entering the publicity end, he managed houses for fifteen years, with the New England Theatres Corporation, coming to that company from the circus racket.

Walter informs us that he knows a good many of our Club members, particularly Tom Sario and Ray Averill. So we think it might interest him to know that Ray, according to a recent communication, is knocking them cold out around St. Louis. Incidentally, while this is sort of an introductory send-off we'd like to tell you of a little stunt Walter pulled at one of the houses where he put on a "Rio Rita" campaign. He dressed seven boys up in Mexican costumes and procured seven bicycles from a local dealer. The boys, in single file, each bearing a letter on his back, making up the title, pedalled about the town, plugging the picture. This stunt attracted considerable comment from everyone in the town and was instrumental in successfully selling the show.

Well, there you are Walter, now that you've had a regular "intro" on the pages, let's hear some more accounts of your work from time to time so that we can pass along your doings to the rest of the Club.

"HOW I GET THE MOST VALUE FROM THE MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB"

By WALLACE R. ALLEN
Publix—Florida Division

Everyone realizes the great value of the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB, but these pages can be made priceless by the proper system of keeping all the ideas mentioned.

* * * *

In hunting around for the best method of filing, I hit upon the following: I use four loose-leaf books, each containing classification of selling, namely:

1. Newspapers
2. Exploitation
3. Individual Campaigns
4. Lobbies

* * * *

In the book headed "Newspapers," all ideas pertaining to this subject are to be found—classified page ads, classified page tie-ups, co-operative pages, newspaper contests, institutional ads and stories, newspaper ads, and publicity stories pertaining to individual pictures and stars.

* * * *

In book number two, "Exploitation," are ballyhoo ideas, contests other than newspapers, straight exploitation thoughts, novelty heralds, letters for mailing lists, trailers, window cards, and window tie-ups.

* * * *

In the third book, "Individual Campaigns," you will find such helpful campaigns as:

Blue Ribbon Month
Cooling System Campaigns
Fashion Shows
Theatre Openings and Reopenings
Bridge Teas
School Tie-ups

and all holidays, such as Easter, Christmas, Fourth of July, Thanksgiving and Valentine's Day.

* * * *

In the last book, "Lobbies," are lobbies and miscellaneous ideas, which don't come under any other classification. Included in the lobby ideas are materials, and novel designs.

* * * *

Each week when the NEWS arrives, after reading it through, I go over the pages containing the ROUND TABLE CLUB ideas, and cut out the ideas that are applicable to any picture. In this way it is unnecessary to keep the entire magazine on file, as I have all the valuable material in these loose-leaf books which can be carried from town to town at any time.

* * * *

If at any time I am stuck for some thought, all I have to do is to look up in one of the books under, for instance, "Heralds," and while I may not see the exact thought that I may have, something that I may see in the file will bring to mind the stunt I want to use.

This system is inexpensive; takes little time—just about one hour a week to keep it up; and has been of great benefit to me.

Accorsini Crashed Newspapers With "Young Eagles" Gag

It has been some time since our attention has been called to anybody crashing the newspapers on a "faked" story but we will have to agree that Olinto Accorsini, manager of the Isis Theatre in Lynchburg, Va., sure worked hard to put his house and "Young Eagles" on the front page.

Fortunately for him, after the contest was over the newspaper held no animosity towards the house as the stunt was obviously a frame-up. In order to let you see how he engineered it we are going to try and record it here. He tied up with the Lynchburg Flying Service and a plan was engineered whereby a plane was suddenly "stolen." The matter was reported to the local police and they set out on a hunt for it. The newspaper grabbed onto the gag and featured it on the front pages. At this time he broke with "Young Eagles."

For a few days the papers featured the story and then they discovered that a waiting automobile had picked up the pilot of the supposedly stolen plane. They treated the stunt with a fair amount of grace, though they claimed that the police department had co-operated with the plane company. On the wings of the planes "Young Eagles" had been painted. Now this angle, we would like to state, may or may not be beneficial to showmen. We are not out on the field and since Accorsini thinks that he can pull these stunts and get away with them, he must know his town and paper.

Another angle he used to plug the picture and the stolen plane gag was the distribution of a number of reprints of a telegram purporting to have come from the person who absconded with the plane. Copies of the telegram were sent to the Police Department, City Official, the newspaper and the air-service, and bore the signature of one of the players in the picture. His tie-up with the air company also enabled him to distribute thousands of heralds at the airport, as well as snipe the airport with paper on the picture. The heralds entitled all persons paying for an air trip, to receive free tickets to the theatre.

The entire campaign, as far as getting additional business in the house went, was successful and there seems to be no doubt but that Accorsini certainly had that town "air-minded" for the run of the picture.

Midget Program Is An Angle That Will Be of Great Help

Now for a program novelty, created by Ed. Lewis, formerly manager of the De Witt Theatre in Bayonne, N. J.

Feeling that he had to have a program which his patrons would hang onto Ed went to work and devised a vest pocket house organ, that measured 4½ by 4¼ inches. And when folded in half to make the four-page booklet required to suit his needs it looked even smaller.

The front page carried the regular institutional plugs and the two center pages carried the attractions for the week, with a heading on top of the center pages announcing that the vest pocket and purse programs would be mailed to anyone requesting them. On the last page, besides plugging the coming attractions, Ed carried a little column called "Town Topics" in which he discoursed, three paragraphs full, on the little happenings that he noticed about the town.

The stunt clicked immediately with the patrons of the house and they were all taking programs and putting them away. His "Town Topics" gag also made a big hit with them, since they did not know the identity of the persons mentioned on the back page. If you are looking for a change in the make-up of your house organ and think you'd like to try this, we believe that you would find it quite profitable. We want to thank Ed for passing this along to us and we know that in the future we will present many more live wire ideas from this alert showman.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Murdock Displayed Fine Showmanship In Recent Stunts

One more of our Pennsylvania live-wires whose name has not appeared on the horizon for some time is J. E. Murdock, manager of the Rowland Theatre in Wilkensberg, Pa. But since he hastened his contribution to us he has wiped the slate clean.

On "The Viking" he set to work to sell it to the town by using a corking ballyhoo. Through a tie-up with the local dealer in Viking cars he procured six new models. The dealer furnished drivers for the cars and in addition supplied four viking costumes, complete with spears, helmets and shields. Four men were hired to wear the costumes and they stood on the running boards of the cars. The autos were bannered with appropriate copy and to make sure that attention would be paid to the ballyhoo, Murdock tied a number of bells under them. For a very small sum of money (the hire of the men wearing the costumes) some wonderful publicity was received that completely sold the picture.

Another gag that has become a regular weekly feature at the theatre is the prize donation night. Merchandise, not less than ten dollars in value, is secured from the local merchants and given away from the stage. In return for their co-operation the merchants received a card alongside the display of gifts in the lobby and in addition as he presented the merchandise from the stage of the theatre, Murdock made a speech boosting the town and the local merchants.

Well, after reading this account you must agree with us that in the short time he has been in Wilkinsberg, Murdock has certainly been showing some stuff, and we know it will be continued. So keep that work up "J. E." and we'll guarantee you'll do even better than you did when you were at the Alhambra in Canton.

Some Great Stuff Is Being Turned Out by Bill Adams

All of the excitement created around Brockton, Mass., daily is occasioned by Bill Adams, manager of the Colonial Theatre who, with his staff of up and coming showmen, traverses the entire city selling his shows.

On his recent campaign for "Cohens and Kellys" Bill kicked up quite some dust by the stunts he pulled. He tied up with the local newspaper, one of his best bets in the town, and promoted a laugh contest by offering awards for the best joke submitted concerning an Irishman and a Scotchman named Cohen and Kelly. The replies that came in had the post office working overtime and the picture as a result did a capacity business for its run. Another stunt he ran along with the picture was effected through the Lifesaver Corp,, whereby he distributed a number of thousands of the sample sizes to the town. An usher was pressed into service, wearing the uniform of a Scotch Highlander, and he went about town handing the samples out in pay envelopes which carried appropriate copy.

When he played "Sunny Side Up" he was enabled through a tie-up with the newspaper to effect a "Sunny Smile Up" contest which consisted of having a photograph shot on the street daily by the newspaper camerman. To the person "shot" and designated by an arrow in the picture, a cash consideration was given. It was usually a person having a nice smile. If the winning party happened to be walking alongside of somebody when the picture was snapped, the other person was entitled to free tickets to the theatre. Bill came in for a laugh during the contest when, on the first day, seven men came into his office and each claimed to be the man in the picture. Passes smoothed things out and Bill's claim to the title of showman was again proven.

Along with this article we are showing a picture of Bill and his house staff and though you no doubt will pick that fellow with the million dollar smile out as Bill, we want you to know that you're right. He's got a mustache too, if you can notice it in the cut. And before we close this article let us inform you that the co-operative ad Bill promoted from the local dealers and ran as part of his campaign on "Happy Days" was a fine one. He worked in an unnamed star angle and offered prizes for persons identifying them.

His various stunts once again may we remind you, can be applied to almost any picture and we feel sure that as they have clicked for Bill they will also click for you. We want to thank him for keeping us posted on his work and tell him we expect the mailman or the office boy to lay down a lot of letters postmarked Brockton before long.

Says Eastern Canada!

I want to be one of the many of our members who at this time, our Second Anniversary, are eager to offer their congratulations to the success of what is known as the greatest medium for procuring exploitation ideas, and other matters pertaining to the running of a theatre. And all given GRATIS.

"ALL FOR ONE AND ONE FOR ALL." Yes, indeed, proud of being a member, ever striving to assist a brother manager. Don't get me wrong, not financially, although it is unfortunate that we have to meet these contingencies from time to time. Wandering from the original intention of praising the doings of our club, some weeks ago received a letter from one of the old boys who worked with many Canadian managers some years ago. He had met with misfortune, and proud to say in exactly two days our subscription list for this gentleman had to be closed. We had enough money for our purpose and a real showman was made happy by the efforts of others in assist him over a rocky road. And 100% donating were members, a real instance of "ALL FOR ONE AND ONE FOR ALL."

But to get back to the story. Two years ago in perusing the Motion Picture News, came across a section that looked good. It seemed there was a personality behind it that made one want to get in touch with this personage and see what it was all about. Naturally, being of an inquisitive nature, wrote a letter to this gentleman asking for details. What happened? By return mail had a reply urging me to become a member. But what impressed me so much was the fact of being asked to contribute any exploitation or service ideas to this section. And me, a manager of a small town theatre! Don't get me wrong, boys, I am proud of it. And since then I have found out many times that in every edition of our section there was something worth while knowing; yes, that I had never heard of before and when I attempted to use the material in our locality found it brought returns.

And the main feature of this wonderful section is that at all times information was readily given, wehther it be about a picture, how to render service to the public or an exploitation angle.

Yes, indeed, always proud to be a member, and on this the second anniversary of our wonderful Club, I want to again offer congratulations to all the boys who have made it so popular. You ask who they are? They are YOU and YOU and YOU. "ALL FOR ONE AND ONE FOR ALL."

In closing would like to suggest that in the near future that our section be so successful that a convention will be considered necessary, when we can meet each other personally, both socially and in a business way, and I know if this comes true that it will be a meeting that Producers and Exhibitors will long remember, and prove beneficial to everyone concerned.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

"14 Money-Making Suggestions"

A group of suggestions adaptable to any theatre, whereby you can stimulate added interest in the theatre and receipts.

This is a reproduction of a page which appeared in the issue of July 20, 1929, and because it contains so many worth-while suggestions, we are again calling attention to it. Surely, among these 14 ideas, you will find a thought worthy of your time and showmanship. Why not accept it in just that light and try to capitalize on a few of them? The original group was submitted by Bennett Brandon, formerly active in theatre management around the metropolitan area.

1. DANCE WEEK.—Tieing up with local dance teachers, schools, etc., and offering a different type of dancing each night, possibly with an audience vote as to the best dancer and using the winner of each night's show for a grand finale on the last night. Interpretive Greek, Classic, Ballet, Ballroom, Stage and other types of dancing can be incorporated into this marvelous suggestion.

2. WEEK OF ALL NATIONS.—In which each night could be devoted to playing up the folk dances, in proper costume, of a different country. On this angle you could probably secure the assistance of local school teachers, children committees of your Chamber of Commerce, etc.

3. HISTORICAL WEEK.—In which you could have various groups, in costume and song, presenting historical tableaux and high lights of history.

4. CHORAL WEEK.—Your local community in song with the aid of the various church and glee clubs. A sure winner in any city where singing and choral work is supported.

5. DRAMA WEEK.—In which a different short one-act playlet should be presented by the various dramatic and other organizations.

6. ORATORICAL WEEK.—A new angle, but one that opens up a wide assortment of ideas to stimulate business and get them talking about the theatre. Get the champion orators of the town or community to compete each night in different groups. This could also end up in a grand finale talk-fest with many humorous angles if a wide-awake showman gets behind it.

7. COMPOSERS' WEEK.—Every town in the world has its share of music composers. Some good, some bad and some rotten, but if assembled into a specialty week of this kind you will find that they will bring you money. The "classy" side might be a special prize for the best musical composition rendered.

8. CARTOON WEEK.—Like composers, every town has its share of cartoonists. Work this up to get them on the stage in groups each night to make up charcoal cartoons and sketches. These can be placed in the lobby on display.

9. COMMUNITY SINGING WEEK.—10 or 15 minutes each evening for community singing under the leadership of a different well-known music teacher or choral leader. Many good angles present themselves with this idea if you will sit down and see what you can make out of it.

10. MUSIC WEEK.—This is perhaps one of the best suggestions because it fits into any kind of house anywhere. Music always has its following no matter how highbrow or lowdown the community may be. Presenting a specialty week of music can be elaborated upon to work out a mighty fine and interesting program for every night of the week.

11. NOVELTY WEEK.—Can be juggled around in many different ways. The presentation of magical or other novelty numbers for each night will stir up added interest and if you happen to be playing vaudeville then you can always work out some novelty among the acts on the bill.

12. BAND WEEK.—While not new, this one may have been worked on the basis of a one or two night proposition. Like the Dance Week, it can be used to select the local band that wins the most applause as the most popular and best liked band in the town.

13. SONGS AND DANCES OF YESTERDAY.—Presents many valuable thoughts in connection with such a specialty week. The offering of a different type of dancing of the past years in proper costume and with song numbers typical of the period, would make a mighty fine presentation for any house to stimulate business.

14. FASHION WEEK.—An elaboration of the Fashion Show idea in which you line up a group of modists, instead of just one or two, and present them in the proper manner, surrounded by some song and dance numbers. An effective tie-up idea which will bring much favorable comment from any audience.

This list of "Speciality Weeks" covers a wide range of ideas and they all lend themselves to some sort of local co-operative tie-ups. This in itself makes the suggestions desirable because we all know the great value of local connections in conjunction with the theatre, and this goes for the big cities as well as the smaller towns.

Charlie Brennan Sold Newark, N. J. "Vagabond King"

We've given you so many "Vagabond King" campaigns recently that we believe almost every key city in the country has been represented on these pages. But because Charlie Brennan, manager of the Rialto Theatre in Newark, N. J., turned out so fine a campaign at his house, we held over the account of it for the Anniversary Edition.

In the photos we are reproducing in connection with this article you will be able to get an idea of the effective selling power that his front display had. The exterior and box office were made into the outside and parapet of a medieval castle. Inside, the lobby, simulated the interior of a castle, which blended in with the exterior. Heavy royal scarlet drapes were hung about the walls, and also formed a canopy over the ceiling. The sets, with their archways and life size cut-outs were then built in front of them. Behind these sets, strips of borders and footlights, hidden from view, were placed, with colored lights giving a marvelous effect.

In his display, Charlie covered almost every possible detail, and you'll note that even the admission price cards, lanterns and announcement cards were kept in keeping with the rest of it. The front helped immensely to sell the picture and proved one of the biggest aids in the campaign, which covered many important angles, an account of which we are setting forth now.

Twenty-five thousand paper napkins were imprinted and placed in the leading tearooms, soda fountains and restaurants. Five thousand special book marks were placed in the bookstores through the city. By displaying some marvelous showmanship Charlie secured over two hundred and fifty window displays in prominent sections. To plug the picture on the screen, trailers were run in fourteen neighborhood houses and this did a lot towards working up interest in the coming attraction.

Through a special tie-up over ten thousand souvenier photos of the stars of the picture were distributed free to patrons in one hundred local stores and this stunt let the house and the dealers in for plenty of publicity. The theme songs were plugged over the air and Charlie got in plugs on the playdates. A bridal costume worn by the feminine star in the picture, was placed on display in the window of one of the largest department stores as well as a straight costume.

A special six-page co-operative radio section was run in the Newark Sunday Call, with almost every dealer in the city being represented on the special section. An eight column streamer was run across the top of each page and carried an announcement of the theatre and picture. Through a tie-up with the Philco Radio Company several hundred twenty-four sheet boards were secured in the neighboring vicinity. The company also paid for the printing and distribution of 25,000 rotogravure heralds, which were distributed in the city and the suburban towns.

Many more angles were covered by Charlie in his campaign but since it would take more than this brief space to enumerate them, we have endeavored to present only the highlights in the event that any of the Club members might pick them up, as some of the ideas can be applied to any picture. We want to thank Charlie for passing this along and also for the very active interest he has taken in the Club in the past and we know that he will show that same kind of showmanlike activity in the future.

ORIGINALITY PLUS!

By H. E. WILTON,
Manager Strand Theatre, Hamilton, Ont.

Passing a church the other day I noticed the following bulletin conspicuously posted: "Do not stay away from church because of warm weather. During the summer months brief, bright musical services and short sermons will be featured."

Following this idea, I am quite convinced that short features, plus a varied program of single reel subjects, would stimulate summer theatre business.

Since the advent of talking pictures long features have been much in evidence. With a ten or twelve-reel feature there is not much opportunity for presenting short reel subjects which many patrons prefer.

Variety is the spice of life, and there never was a period in the history of the world when this was more exemplified than the present. Modern youth demands variety and goes shopping to find it. The spirit of youth is contagious and even the fathers and mothers are conspicuous in the parade of those who seek "something different" in order to get relief from the rut of dull routine.

The theatre manager who is awake to box office interests will avoid the rut of sameness. A theatre program that is never varied in its arrangement, no matter how good it may be, becomes tiresome, uninteresting and dull. This applies not only to theatre program but to theatre arrangement. No matter how beautiful the flowers, the carpets, the draperies, or how clean and neat they are maintained, they become commonplace and lose their box office pull if not occasionally changed.

In all lines of business there are a lot of otherwise smart managers who do things in a certain conservative way for no other reason than that it is the rule everywhere to do it that way.

The successful theatre manager is one who gets away from this fogey notion and does things "different" simply because others are not doing it, and thereby creates new interest among his patrons.

If I were a preacher I would not announce my text till I had preached the sermon. Why? Because every other preacher in the world announces it first. It would be "different," something to arouse interest and give the congregation something to talk about, even though they didn't like it.

There is no business in the world where originality counts for so much as that of the theatre. The public of today demands "something different."

This was proven when talkies arrived. Silent houses that were in the "red" all the time have not had a "red" week since and standing room only has been the rule.

The public demanded "something different." They got it in the talkies and flocked to the theatres to see and hear.

It is up to the theatre managers to maintain this new interest by constantly figuring new and "different" program arrangement.

Just because it has been the custom from the days of Adam to open a theatre program with an orchestra overture, is the one best reason why it should be changed. Theatre patrons submit to it because they have been taught to expect it as a permanent unchangeable thing in the same spirit they bow their heads through a ten minute opening prayer in church service.

There is no reason why the opening overture could not be dispensed with and featured later as a break in the regular program. There is no good reason why it could not be dispensed with altogether because most opening overtures are too long and a bore, even though they do exploit the conductor.

Get out of the rut—do it "different" if it is only changing your floral decorations to new positions. Say "Hello" occasionally to a well known patron instead of the usual "Good Evening" or "Good Night."

And I still think summer business would be improved by shorter features and a more varied program of single reel subjects, not forgetting to sell your "cool theatre" and the best way to do that is to see that it IS COOL—not just an announcement to that effect. Don't advertise "The Coolest Theatre in Town" if you haven't got it. The public are not all damn fools.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

SAYS EDDIE!

I'll tell you why I like the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. I like it because it keeps me in touch with a lot of the old gang who have gone hither and yon about the country—the old gang who once were members of the little round table club four or five doors down the alley, behind that big bunch of old crates and garbage cans, or away down in the basement within a nostril throw of the gents' room.

The round table days, say, with Bob Blair in Seattle, with Dick Spier and Bart Wheeler in Portland, with Frank Whitbeck and Jeff Lazarus in Los Angeles, and so on, ad infinitum. It's the back part of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and I read it first. It keeps me in touch with a lot of old cronies. Hardly a week goes by but what it keeps me informed about what Charlie Pincus and Irving Waterstreet are doing in Omaha; how Sam Torgan is making out in Springfield and how Floyd Maxwell in Oregon and Sammy Cohen in Spokane are getting along. Every week, through the ROUND TABLE CLUB, I start in Los Angeles, go up the Coast into Butte, Denver, Kansas City, Buffalo and on to Broadway. It's a weekly Cook's tour and I get a lot of ideas en route. What more is there to say?

Here's How Earl Arnold "Shot" The Kids Of Arlington

You'll perhaps remember the herald we reproduced not so long ago which bore the heading "Let's Shoot The Kiddies." As you know it was the brain-child of Earl Arnold, manager of the Lincoln Theatre in Arlington, N. J., and was part of his kiddie business boosting campaign.

In the photo we are running here you'll get an idea of the way he put the stunt across. The kids were made up to represent a number of the various child stars in comedies to-day. "Snookums," "Buster Brown," "Our Gang," and a couple more were portrayed by kids recruited from the town. In a vacant lot Earl set up his "lot" and photographed the kids in a comedy entitled "Making Movies."

With the neighborhood children being represented you can bet that all of the mamas, papas, and relatives were on hand when work was finished on the production and it was unreeled at the theatre. The whole of Arlington was on hand to view the finished product. And not only that, but while the picture was being "shot" crowds used to gather around the scene and watch the work, and they were there too.

The local newspapers gave the gag a good break and when the city papers in Newark saw it, they, too, picked it up. As a result Earl received a lot of publicity in the Sunday edition of the Newark Evening Call that resulted in some added business for the house. We would like to call your attention to the fact that Earl's stunt can be worked by you too, and if you think your community will like it then the work you put in in planning it will more than show in added box office revenue.

Fred Hinds, Hustling, Keeps Theatre Before the Public

We don't doubt but that many of his fellow Club members, seeing his name in print on our pages have wondered what Fred Hinds, hustling manager of the Colonial Theatre in Watertown, S. D., looks like, so since Fred was thoughtful enough to include his photo along with some of his experiences we decided to pass it along, pronto.

Prior to his entrance into the managerial end of the show business he served as a free lance scenario writer besides hanling a reportorial job on the Minneapolis Tribune. He also worked for a time as an advertising copy writer. In 1915 he went to work handling publicity for the Orpheum Theatre in Minneapolis, later managing the Strand and shifting from there to a position as advertising manager for the F&R Loop Houses.

He publicized various pictures for a large producing company, resigning from that position to supervise advertising for the Southern Enterprises, Inc., in Atlanta, Ga. In 1920 he rejoined F&R and was made advertising manager for the St. Paul houses. One year later he purchased his own theatre in Creco, Ia., and operated it for eight years before he joined Publix at his present position.

With so wide and varied a career it is no wonder that Fred has been turning out some very fine stuff at the Colonial and we feel sure that this brief account will serve to stimulate interest still further in his work, and as we have published a number of his stunts we feel that he is going to continue the active interest he has shown in the past. So let's hear from you again very soon Fred.

Jules S. Wolfe Of Toronto, Canada Also Joins M.R.T.C.

Still another Canadian showman jumps in line with us and from the looks of things it seems that Jules S. Wolfe, manager of the Christie Theatre in Toronto, Ont., Canada, is very active.

Along with this application for membership, Wolfe was thoughtful enough to enclose a copy of his house organ and a novelty herald he used on "The Trespasser." The herald was a corker. It was well made up in brown and white. The front page bore a silhouette of Gloria Swanson with a catch-line underneath "Words Are Useless." The inner pages followed it up with copy "To describe the fact, etc." The copy was well chosen and no doubt did a lot towards selling the picture.

We also want to compliment him on his house organ, carrying four pages and very attractively done in brown and bamboo color on good stock paper. The program carried the attractions for the entire month together with little announcements on the shorts and the program proper. We also note that he has adopted the musical program idea and spotted it on his early evening show.

We want to welcome Mr. Wolfe into the Club and state that we believe we are going to record many good things about him in the near future, and we're sure that you will agree with us that he has gotten off to a good start. So let's hear from you real soon, Jules and in your next letter why not include a photo and a little dope about your career in show business to date?

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Harold A. Kopplin Is An Artist As Well As Showman

A showman who belongs right in the front line along with the rest of the Florida Round Table representatives is Harold A. Kopplin, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Miami, Fla.

Along with a lot of other work, cooling plants and so forth, Harold found time to knock out a whale of a campaign on "Cohens and Kellys in Scotland," that certainly sold the town on the picture. As this was the world premier of the film he set out to do it up fine. If we had enough space we would like to devote a couple of pages to his campaign but at present it is well nigh impossible to give more than a brief resume of the highlights.

He tied-up with the local newspaper and two golf courses with the paper agreeing to give him publicity on the sporting page, for which he, in turn, was to promote two "Cohen and Kelly" miniature golf tournaments, one to be held at the Dallas Park Course and the other at the Plaza. The tournaments were held several days before the opening and were widely advertised. This stunt was followed up by offer of a free pass to the theatre to any golfer on the course making a "hole in one" during the run of the film. The gag created a great deal of talk around the golf courses and the house received a lot of publicity.

We are showing above a sample of some of the art work Harold turns out, all of which is done by him. The piece shows evidence of considerable care and we can tell from the copy that he certainly knows his patrons. He also had a display piece showing wires from the stars in the picture, which he touched up and placed in the lobby to good advantage. His entire campaign, since it was well planned and well executed, went over big and credit is due Harold and his "bunch" at the Capitol for their showmanlike way in putting it across.

Another stunt he uses, credit for which must go to his assistant, Mr. Campbell, is a program he supplies the fight club, in the neighborhood with. The card carries the program of the fights and also the theatre's attractions. The promoters distribute them at the arena and the theatre comes in for some valuable publicity.

We want also to say a couple of words about his newspaper advertising, especially the teaser he ran for "Men Without Women." He had a line which read, "Women of Miami—Do You Know What Men Really Think of You?"—(and in Small Type) "You'll find the answer in Men Without Women." How the women swallowed this one! They flocked in to see the picture. And that brings to mind another one Harold pulled on "Hell's Heroes." He decided to tell the women that the picture was gruesome, so that no complaints would be made to him by dissatisfied patrons. So in the ad he put this: "Women Will Cringe at the Stark, Naked Realism." And it had just the opposite re-action! They flocked in again. Now Harold wants to know how the deuce they can be doped out. But all kidding aside, we want to say that he turns out some very fine samples of newspaper advertising and we feel sure that this medium does a lot to sell the pictures.

Safety Club Organized By Metcalf Met With Approval

Another Ohio showman, in the person of A. E. Metcalf, has enrolled in the Managers' Round Table Club. Metcalf is the manager of Schines Lincoln Theatre in Massilon, Ohio, and is a showman of wide experience.

In his many years in the show game, he has covered a goodly number of angles, which included almost every branch of the business. Way, way back he was advance agent for Markle's Sunny South Floating Theatre, then the biggest show boat on the Mississippi, and secured a lot of training which comes in handy today. After being with the show boat company for a number of years he started operating motion picture and vaudeville theatre's on his own, which business he continued in until he hooked up with the Schine Circuit.

As the photo we are showing will prove, he is certainly very active. This stunt was a tie-up with the local junior police, the newspaper and the police department whereby a "Just Kids Safety Club" was organized, and fortunately this worked in about the time he was playing "Street of Chance" so he tied in the kids with the picture. The newspapers gave the angle a lot of free publicity and ran a couple of front page stories on the benefit of the club.

In addition, the paper published stories setting forth the benefits to be derived from joining the club and printed a number of membership application forms. As a means of obtaining a little more good-will Metcalf made up a number of cards, in the form of applications and added a detachable coupon which carried copy stating that the kiddie holder was entitled to one free admission to the theatre if acompanied by either of his parents. This stunt made a decided hit with the residents of the town and certainly helped the theatre a lot.

This Safety Club idea is an excellent stunt to use and it will fit in very well around vacation time. So if you think that it will be of use to you in your locality, you could start planning now to shoot it about the time school closes. We want to thank Mr. Metcalf for passing this along to us with his membership application and we extend him a hearty welcome into the Club. Fine work, "A. E." and now that you're one of us don't forget your brother members will be mighty interested in learning what else you are doing to sell your shows out there in Massillon.

A. R. NININGER Says:

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Window Displays Created By John V. Ward Are Fine

When anybody tells us that the Canadian members of the Club can certainly arrange attractive window displays, it doesn't take a minute for us to agree with the party. The reason, of course, is to be seen in the accompanying photo, which shows the way John V. Ward, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Niagara Falls, Ont., Canada, sold the town through the windows of local dealers, when he played "The Vagabond Lover."

The whole lay-out was very attractively made-up and if you look closely you will note the life-size cut-out of Rudy Vallee that did a lot to lend "life" to the window. The cut-out was made up in striking colors and stood out like a beacon light. In addition to getting in plugs for the sheet music, Ward also plugged the Vallee records and this move made a big hit with the local dealer. Still scenes from the picture occupied a prominent place in the foreground and their effect was enhanced by the background of combination radio and victrolas the dealer was endeavoring to sell in the display.

Special drapes and rugs were put into service to lend a rich tone to Ward's work and they more than helped to give the display plenty of punch. Since he used everything possible in the window that would help to sell, it is small wonder that the picture clicked for Ward and in addition he had the good-will of the dealer and the request that he put more displays of this calibre in the near future. And being a good showman, there's no question but that Ward will have that window tied-up week after week.

"LAFF OF THE WEEK"

And it's Rhiney Hiehle of the Smoot Amusement Company of Parkersburg, West Va., who claims that he heard it from a brother manager. It seems that his friend had just returned from one of those so unconventional conventions in Montreal and when asked what kind of a place the Canadian city was, the showman replied wistfully, "Well—the hotel had four hundred rooms—with iced beer in every bathroom."

Max Melincoff Had Local Cops Guard Print Of Picture

Though he is now located at the Garde Theatre in New London, Conn., we have come across a couple of stunts that Max Melincoff used while at the Palace in Torrington and we think they have enough "meat" to them to merit passing along to the rest of the Club.

When he played "Sally" Max decided to give the picture an advance plug in the newspapers, so he went to the Chief of Police and requested that a couple of officers be detailed to guard the film when it arrived at the theatre. The photo shows to what good effect Max's live-wire publicity stunt was put. This picture appeared in the Torrington papers on the day the film arrived and in that manner Max had the town talking about it.

He also obtained some more free space in the newspapers by displaying a lot of keen showmanship. He noticed in one of the Hartford papers that Dick Barthlemess was staying in that city. Max got him on the phone and Barthelmess invited him over for an interview. And when he came away Max had a letter, signed by the star, which he used to plug "Son of the Gods" with. The letter was mounted in a one-sheet frame and placed on display in the lobby. This angle helped Max a lot towards selling the picture to the people of the town.

Incidentally, he gives us a little tip that we think should be passed on. "I think," he says, "that every manager should read his local paper from the first to the last page—not missing a thing. He would be surprised at the various items that can be put to use in tying up organizations, civic affairs, etc. Just a simple announcement of some affair might lead to getting loads of newspaper space that one would not ordinarily get." "And," he continued, "It pays to take advantage of every break—and if the breaks don't come—make em!"

Permit me to congratulate you on the second anniversary of the MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB, and it is regrettable that you cannot get all the boys together and celebrate in fitting fashion.

I have followed the growth of the CLUB, and its merits certainly must be far-reaching to have gathered the momentum its membership has in the two short years of its existence.

There is nothing like the mutual exchange of ideas, and in this respect the ROUND TABLE CLUB has no peer in showmanship circles.

I want to wish the CLUB continued success, and to earnestly hope that the coming year will be as productive of ideas and increased membership as the past.

Most sincerely,
HAROLD LLOYD.

Sidney Auerbach Is Proving To Be An Alert Showman

When a new manager takes over a house it is generally some time before he gets the "feel" of things. But this was not the case with Sidney Auerbach, manager of the Broadway Temple in Astoria, L. I., in Paul Binstock's division.

Having been the assistant manager of the house, to which position, incidentally he rose from doorman, Sidney knew the land pretty well, so when he was given an opportunity to demonstrate showmanship in his new position, he started out to prove his worth to Binstock.

As his first move he tied-up a local jewelry store and persuaded the merchant to offer over two hundred dollars worth of merchandise to be donated to winners in a Gift contest. A number of heralds were printed which carried the announcement of the contest, that consisted of identifying a number of movie stars (seventy seven altogether). The contestant was supposed to list as nearly correct as possible the names of the performers and submit the list, together with a twenty-five word letter on "What picture I thought was best at the Broadway Theatre and why I liked it," to Auerbach. All printed matter was paid for by the jeweler.

With this part of his campaign set, Sidney then went out and promoted a full page co-operative newspaper ad from the local dealers. And if you think this was an easy stunt, you don't know his location. The ad and the contest blended in neatly with "Happy Days" and set that picture off to a good start. By examining the cut we are reproducing you can see how he has worked an announcement of the contest into the page. He also tied-up with a radio station and one of the dealers broadcasting over the air, and effected an agreement whereby the contest and the theatre were to be mentioned during the broadcasting period. Though we have only shown you a couple of phases of his campaign here, we feel that it is unnecessary to set forth any more details, since space will not permit us at this time. Sufficient to say though that the contest went over to great success and in fact these couple of stunts alone could probably have swung it, but since we happen to know Sidney's habit for doing things up thoroughly he wasn't satisfied until he had covered every possible angle.

Before we close this little article we want to say a word or two about the lucky number gift night he promoted in conjunction with the Broadway Merchants Association. Ten five-dollar gold pieces were donated to the persons holding corresponding ticket numbers to those called off the stake. Business jumped up on this night and it didn't cost Sidney a cent, as the merchants paid for posters and heralds announcing it. Another little stunt he engineered was the giving away, to women patrons, samples of cleansing cream which he secured from a local dealer. The women were handed a card which stated that upon presentation at the store they would receive the sample. This angle promoted a lot of good-will for both the house and the drugstore. Great stuff, Sid, let's hear more from you.

These Ace Displays Done By Phil Gunn At Holden's House

With so much speed being shown around Earle Holden's vicinity we almost made a mistake and put down Daytona as his address instead of the Fairfax Theatre in Miami, Fla.

The latest account we have on Earle's work concerns part of the advance campaign he put over for "Mamba." He made up a number of window stickers which contained nothing on them but the title of the picture. The stickers were pasted all around the town, on every pole, wall, can, box, and everything they'd adhere to. The second day after the town had been "plastered" up with them everybody was wondering who or what "Mamba" was. Earle followed up this angle with a number of printed cards, also containing the title, and made up in calling card size.

The cards were handed out by persons dressed in every-day clothes. No theatre employees were used for the distribution and everybody in town received one or two of the cards at some time or other. After the cards had been handed out Earle broke in the papers with ten one-half inch "title teasers" which were carried for eighteen days in advance of the playdates. By the time he finished the contest and shot his message home everybody in town had about given up hope of learning the meaning of "Mamba," for since no trailer or anything had been run in the house they were completely mystified. And believe us, the picture sold when Earle revealed the stunt.

We are showing in conjunction with this article, a few of the displays turned out by the artist of the Fairfax, Phil Gunn. And since Earle says that Phil is good, he must be. But in order that you may pass your own opinion on the subject you can look these samples over and in fact there may be one or two ideas there that you would like to use, since it seems to us that the novel starting time placque that he has in the lower left is pretty good.

We want to thank Earle for stopping his very busy activities long enough to let us know what he is doing. And we know Earle is busy getting that house whipped into shape to take care of the summer business that his showmanship is sure to bring in. But don't forget Earle, busy or not, we want to know how you're selling your shows down there.

THE SORE HEAD

New Haven Times

Some people think that life is but
A mess of grief and sorrow;
If nothing troubles them today,
They will fret about tomorrow.

They shut their eyes to all good things,
Which life may have to offer,
And they are crying and lament,
Because they have to suffer.

We all have troubles—rich or poor—
Life would be dull without, I'm sure.
Woes have their place or no man would Appreciate all that is "good."

Hendricks Clicks Once More With His Premiere Openings

A number of issues ago we ran an account of the very fine campaign William L. Hendricks, General Manager of the Capitol Amusement Company in Steubenville, Ohio, put over for his opening night of "Flight." Recently he repeated this success on "Hit the Deck."

He followed much the same line as formerly. Celebrities were invited. The newspaper ran advance stories on the premiere. The radio plugged it. Orchestras broadcasted the hits over the air. The town was treated to an advance campaign that was a wow.

On the night of the opening, special police lines were necessary to hold back the throng that milled about, held in check by ropes. As the local celebrities arrived they said a few words into the radio "mike" which was flung back by loud speakers. Batteries of lights played upon every arrival and newspaper photographers were grouped around taking pictures. From the photo we are showing you will be able to see just how packed the house must have been.

The sailors in the picture are in reality local jazzsters who were hired especially for the occasion, to regale the crowds with song hits from the picture and to greet attendants of the premiere. The radio announcer too was outfitted with a sailor suit in keeping with the picture. The front of the house was atmospherically decorated with pennants, nautical emblems, attractive cut-outs and in fact everything else that went to make up a selling display.

Another angle Hendricks used was a "Hit the Deck" Ball that he promoted at the local ballroom. The sponsors of the dance agreed to feature the name and also to have the orchestra play the theme songs, the titles of which were imprinted on a dance program, furnished by Henderson and bearing a head of Jack Oakie the star.

The whole campaign went over with as complete a success as the first one we recorded a while back. We want to thank Hendricks for keeping us posted on his work and we are sure he will continue the very active interest he is showing in the Club. Incidentally, "W. L.," we managed to inveigle a photo out of Howard Waugh and will run it shortly. And we have Howard's permission too.

Oshrin Arranged A Local Tie-Up Of Benefit To House

Up in the Bronx, or rather we should say, Bronx, New York City, Syd. Oshrin, manager of the Allerton Theatre has been stepping on the gas, giving his sound installation a plug, which accounts for us not hearing from him for a couple of weeks, but we are glad to report that he put his campaign over with a bang, and now he has started to sell his regular shows.

One of the first of his activities was a tie-up with a local laundry whereby the laundry agreed to furnish fifty dollars worth of courtesy prizes for distribution at the theatre. Patrons entering the house were handed a coupon announcing the awards and containing a notice requesting that the holder write name and address, and place in a box in the lobby. A stub at the end of the coupon was held by the patron. On the nights of the awards the numbers were called off from the stage, and persons holding corresponding numbers were entitled to participate in the distribution of the fifty dollars worth of merchandise.

Syd pulled a corking stunt with the laundry by arranging that every woman entering the theatre on the night of the donations, be presented with a ticket entitling her to have a week's laundry done up free. In this manner both he and the laundry secured a lot of good-will, and the many thousand coupons holding the patrons name and address that they secured were put to good use in the mailing list.

We are showing with this article a street ballyhoo that he uses as a regular weekly feature for the house. The truck carries two twenty-four sheets plugging the picture and special attractions and does a lot towards keeping Syd's patrons informed as to what the theatre is playing. These little stunts form a regular part of his business building campaigns and we know that his box-office shows the results much more impressively than we can write it.

William A. Levey Secures Good-Will By Co-Operation

Co-operate! How we've hammered away on that angle. We've run stories showing how valuable co-operation is, what a wonderful advantage it is, and in every possible way we've tried to keep it before you. Only recently we ran a number of problems, encountered by showmen from all over the world, and the main thing in the way they surmounted difficulties was, co-operation.

Perhaps business is fine for you in your town but not so hot for the rest of the merchants. We've seen many a case like it. The theatre had almost the whole business because the residents of the town shopped only for amusement. Suburban merchants are especially hit in this way. And we are going to show you now how a showman lends a helping hand whenever possible.

The cut bearing the heading "Shop Where You Live" is a sample of a newspaper ad run by William A. Levey, manager of the Beacon Theatre in Port Washington, Long Island, N. Y. Bill tied-up with the local Chamber of Commerce and co-operated with them on the campaign. His town is located just a short distance from the city and most of the shopping is done in New York. Sensing this, the Chamber knew that something had to be done, so they went to work on a "Shop Where You Live" week in an endeavor to popularize the local merchants. Windows were especially dressed up, signs posted around the town, notices carried in newspapers and everything else possible was done to make the residents see that they should shop at home. By applying showmanship to the campaign it went over very successfully and the theatre, as well as the town itself, came in for lots of publicity and business building.

The photo we are showing of the smiling gentleman is Bill Levey, manager of the Beacon, who is well known to the Club, since his numerous activities have often been represented on our pages. At the time this "exclusive" photo was taken, Bill, a habitual early riser every since he heard that the early bird catches the worm, is sniffing the cool, clean air of Port Washington (Unsolicited Testimonial) and pleasantly contemplating the arrival, on the 7:20 A. M. train from New York, of Abe Wachter, one of the town's distinguished statesmen, and bosom pal of the editor of the Port Washington News, and himself. We don't know whether you will notice the fir tree, that Bill is standing in front of, since the cut is rather small, but anyway, that tree has been in Bill's possession for a number of years, for the simple reason that he has found it more profitable to hang up a tree than a stocking when Santa came around.

We could go on for quite some time and recount these little anecdotes which form a "smiling" part of "Smiling Bill's career, but then we've more important things to talk about at present, so the story that once made the rounds about him refusing a lucrative position as a piano salesman because he heard that all salesmen carry sample cases, will have to wait.

The other photo shows part of his campaign on "Hit The Deck," where, by tying in the local Junior Naval Division he let the house in for some very valuable publicity. The boys paraded about the main streets of the town, attracting plenty of attention and finally winding up in front of the Beacon, where they were invited in as guests of the management. Inside the theatre they paraded across the stage and treated the patrons to a short exhibition of drilling.

In closing this article we want to bring to your attention again the value of co-operating with your local merchants if you want them to co-operate with you. We are passing along the "Shop Were You Live" stunt in the event that it is just what some of our members have been looking for.

Incidentally, we notice that the little poem "Be A Booster" which we ran in our issue of March 22nd, and which, at this time seems very apropriate has been given space in Bill's local newspaper, occupying a prominent position on the third page. This poem, submitted to us by C. Elmer Nolte, Jr., will be found to come in very handy in any business getting or goodwill building weeks. Another of our members, H. C. Neale, manager of the Princess Theatre in Mayfield, Kentucky thought so much of it that he reprinted it on blotters, and distributed them about the town, by boys and through the mailing list.

We want to thank Bill for keeping us posted on the way he sells his shows and we know that his live-wire hustling is more than seen at the box-office. Let's hear from you again real soon Bill, and give our regards to Abe and Charlie.

Free Radio Stunt Helped To Boost Rice's Business

Choosing a time when business isn't so good, U. K. Rice arranged with the Majestic Radio dealers to stage a show at the Publix-Carolina Theatre, Winston-Salem, N. C.

The lobby housed a new model radio that was to be given away to the holder of the lucky number. This radio was donated by the dealers.

With every ticket purchased during the week, a coupon was issued entitling those persons to a chance on the radio. However, copy on the ballots specifically stated that it was necessary for the holder of the lucky number drawn to be in the theatre at the time of drawing.

The dealers co-operated in every conceivable way—by having representatives at the theatre to explain the inner workings and decided advantages of the Majestic radio as well as co-operative window displays, newspaper ads, and mailing out heralds to a selective mailing list.

Manager Rice states that this radio show was held during a period in which he firmly believes that the theatre would have gone considerably in the red. But it is his personal opinion that the publicity derived from the show was invaluable. The big kick in the campaign was on the drawing night for the radio, on the first day of a new picture.

PAGING MORE "LOBBY LAFFS"

Dick Kirschbaum is again in need of suggestions for the "Lobby Laffs" series, and knowing how popular these cartoons are with our readers, we are broadcasting this request right off the Club pages.

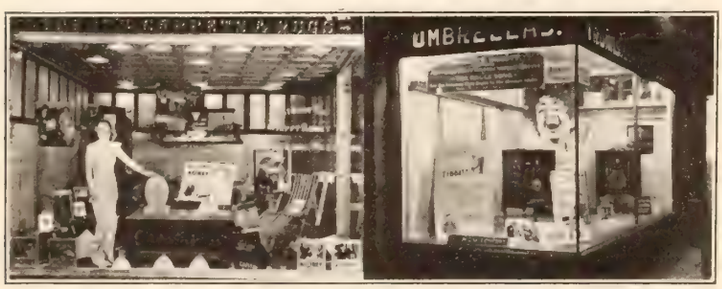
Read Shewell's Ad And You'll Know Why Biz. Is Good



It seems to us that our Anniversary Number wouldn't be our idea of complete if we didn't have a story about George Shewell, exploitation manager of the York Theatres in York, Pa.

Shewell has always been one of our very active contributors and we are sure that his work in the past year has furnished some of the Club members with helpful suggestions. Being well schooled in the art of newspaper advertising and window display make-up, his many fine tie-ups have long been a source of interest.

From time to time we have exhibited various layouts used by this showman and in addition we have also shown many of the window displays he created. His methods of writing copy have always been to appeal to his local patronage and it is this angle that has helped him immensely in merchandising his attractions. Just a short while ago we reproduced a sample of his work in the "Magnafilm" ad he laid out that sold the town completely on the subject he was plugging. To-day we have another sort of ad, that helped bring in kiddie business and sell the picture as well.

In the cut we are reproducing of the newspaper ad you can get an idea of what he is selling. The tie-up was made with a local manufacturer of candy bars and the maker agreed to furnish every kid who entered the theatre for the early morning Saturday show, a free candy bar. To this effect Shewell, incorporated the notice in the ad but what we want to call to your attention is the little box he uses which states "Two Hours Of Freedom For Parents."

This angle probably did more to boost business than anything. Any mother who wanted to shop on Saturday morning, or who had other work to do would be only too glad to have the children cared for, if she knew who was caring for them. Knowing his patrons Shewell was able to put in the notice concerning the welfare of the kids. This reassured the patrons and they felt that the kids should see the show. As for the kids, they were pretty well interested in the candy bar and you can bet if they were looking through the newspaper and came across the ad, they would bring it to their parents' attention. And when the parents read the whole ad and saw the notice about the children it's pretty safe to say that they complied with the kiddies' request that they be permitted to attend the show.

In the photos we are running you will note the excellent displays he arranged in the windows of various dealers in York, for "The Rogue Song" and "Honey." On the first picture he tied-up with a dealer and plugged the picture in the manner you see here. A special cut-out of the head of the star in the picture was placed at an angle in the window that anyone going by would be bound to have their gaze attracted to it. He also persuaded the dealer to buy a couple of books on the picture and in this manner got in a little more publicity. A special thirty by forty card, plugging the male and female star also occupied a prominent place in the lay-out.

Here's the way Shewell plugged a good talking short via special card distributed throughout the community. Get the most out of your short subjects, they're worth it—and then some!

On "Honey" he promoted the window of a dealer in house furnishings and plugged the picture by featuring the star, who was represented by a life-size cut-out. The cut-out was placed alongside a cedar chest. The chest angle was a natural for exploitation as it worked in one of the theme songs "In My Little Hope Chest." By looking closely you will notice that Shewell went to the trouble of making up special cards, upon which to place his stills. The cards carried only the title "Honey" and since his display was built around the theme song you can see what an important move he made by making up these special title plugs.

Both displays did a lot to help boost business on the pictures and we'd like to state that "The Rogue Song" tie-ups were promoted in the window of every dealer in town, since a national tie-up with a well known radio manufacturing company formed part of the picture's campaign. Many other angles were covered on both these pictures but since space will not permit our using them at present, and as most of the members know of Shewell's capable work, we'll have to let his future work show you what else he does in the line of show merchandising.

Fred Johnson Is Still Boosting Biz. By His Peppy Work

When it comes to displaying signs of showmanship you can depend on Fred Johnson, manager of the RKO Drake in Oil City, Pa., to be kicking up a lot of dust.

Through a recent tie-up with a furniture dealer Fred secured a very valuable living room outfit. This outfit was given away in the theatre. Persons entering the theatre, and purchasing a ticket, were handed a coupon which entitled them to a bid on the suite. The one stipulation was that the person holding the corresponding number to one called off the stage, be present in the audience.

The stunt clicked for a milion with Fred's patrons and business began to boom. As soon as he saw the stunt was meeting with favor he decided to run it for three or four weeks and as a result the word of mouth publicity he received on the gag more than made up for the slight cost involved in the engineering and execution of the plan. Another stunt that also helped Fred was the giving away of a radio set, to the same results as the furniture gag.

Since we hadn't heard from Fred for quite a while we had been wondering what happened to him but then, knowing him of old we felt that he was up to some stunt or other. Sure enough he came through with this one and we guess you'll agree with us that as far as getting business is concerned, the stunt has the goods.

J. Ramon Wheeler Says:

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Jack Marpole Is Displaying More 'Ace' Showmanship

All of the hustle and bustle going on around Ogden, Utah, recently has been occasioned by the activity of Jack Marpole, manager of the Paramount Theatre in that city.

Just a little while ago we informed you of his transfer to the Paramount and told you that we expected to pass along some accounts of his work as soon as he got his feet on the ground. Well, at this writing Jack has planted his feet firmly on the old sod. But those feet wont stay in the one place.

One of the first moves in his campaign to boost business was a tie-up with a dairy. The dairy company is the largest in Ogden, serving four thousand or so customers daily. Jack promoted a plan, whereby all of the bottle tops were imprinted with the name of a Paramount star. The customer was supposed to save the tops and when a complete set of ten stars was made up, she, or he, upon presentation of the tops at the dairy would receive free tickets to the theatre. Twenty-five "key" tops are distributed among the 4,000 daily. In this case, since Jack was shortly to play "Vagabond King," the name Dennis King was used. The same stars, with the exception of the key star, are used for three months.

The dairy pays for the bottle tops and the special printing, and also takes space in the newspaper twice weekly, copy for which is written by the theatre. The dairy is given a small display in the lobby. Whenever any special shows are arranged, bottle-hangers are used to plug it and the bottle top gag. The stunt, still in use, is going over with a bang and a great deal of good-will is being secured by both the theatre and the dairy. This is a wonderful stunt to work if you have a large dairy near you and should you wish more dope on the idea we are sure that if you drop Jack a line he'll give it to you.

And now here's another piece of showmanship that's a knock-out. The local newspaper, prior to the end of January, never had an amusement page. Jack set to work to change this. He negotiated a deal with the paper whereby the sheet agreed to feature an amusement page in which the local Publix houses, being the representative houses were to be given so much space weekly. Jack supplies all the art work and occasionally some of the stories. His assistant conducts a column on the paper, under a nom de plume, securing stories from news services.

With his Kiddie business hitting a little low, he decided to jack it up. So on the opening day of his anniversary, which fortunately had just rolled around, he gave a Kiddies Free Birthday Party, putting on a silent western, and comedies. He also promoted free candy from a local dealer. What a turnout. Over two thousand kids tried to cram into 1,900 seats with the result that it became necessary to turn away over five hundred, but the manager of the other Publix house in the town invited the kids to witness his show. The photo will give you a small idea of the crowd of kids trying to get in.

Profiting from his first experience with the kids, Jack decided to organize a Paramount Joy Club, his aim being to run special Saturday morning shows at a reduced rate. Before the performance starts he gets up on the stage and leads them in a songfest to the accompaniment of Clair Anderson's organ manipulation, and also tells them about the shows for the coming week. The Club, from what we know, has been in operation about five weeks, and has grown to tremendous proportions. The organist grew so much in popularity that the name was changed to Clair Anderson's Paramount Joy Club. Incidentally, to say a little about this organist, before Jack hit the house, the town had never had community singing, so he broke in Anderson on the slide gag and the idea has clicked so well that the nightly songfest has become quite an event.

Besides this show selling inside his house, Jack went out and promoted a lot of good-will with his "most courteous pupil" contest, run in the local schools. The classes in each school voted on their most courteous pupil. The school as a whole then voted to determine the most courteous representative of the combined classes. The winners of each school were then judged by a committee of business men, the Superintendent of Schools and other prominent townsmen, and a "Most courteous scholar in Ogden" was chosen. A pair of passes was given for the class winners, a month's pass for the school winners and a three months' pass was awarded for the winner. And what good-will the house secured from teachers and parents. Here's a stunt that it will pay to look into and perhaps you can find a couple of more angles to work into it. At any rate, Jack has a good gag in this, so if you think it will fit your purpose, use it.

Another fine angle he is putting in operation now is a careful driving campaign, which is being sponsored by the Police Department and the theatre. Instead of handing out tickets for violations of the traffic rules the police are endeavoring to promote more careful driving and to this end whenever they come across an especially courteous or careful autoist he or she is presented with a pass to the theatre. The newspapers got behind this stunt and are doing a lot to swing it.

We could probably go on for a couple of pages more and tell you about a million and one things Jack is doing out there, with his imprinted paper napkins, used at soda fountains, his window stickers, car hangers, Joy Club buttons, etc., but since we are nearly always cramped for space we'll just have to cut things short until the future when we know we will have some more showmanlike slants from him to present to you.

Finley Turns Out Special Art Front On Every Picture

O. G. Finley built a special front for the showing of "The Vagabond King" playing at the Victory Theatre, Tampa, Fla.

The outer lobby was fitted up with beaverboard that was painted to give it a rich tone. The construction was so arranged that it allowed two entrances to the theatre. In the pillar between the two entrances the beaverboard was cut out to permit the inserting of panels on which was copy about the picture as well as cuts of King and Jeanette MacDonald.

Over the entrances appeared cut-out heads of the five principal characters in the picture and topping this array of talent was the title of the picture.

Extending all around the marquee was a valance which carried copy, "Dennis King—The Vagabond King—Dennis King."

We have consistently published a group of new members each and every week, but the number has increased with such rapidity that we suddenly found ourselves way behind. We take this opportunity to welcome this large batch of newcomers into the Round Table Club in the Anniversary Edition. Those who were wondering why their names had not appeared sooner will now understand the reason and we know they will feel no resentment because of the unforeseen delay. We are confident that each and every one of them will find their membership in the Club just as interesting and profitable as those who have belonged for the past year or two. If any of our old members recognize the names of former friends on these two pages, we suggest they communicate with them at once and extend the "glad hand."

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Ray S. Nowitzky Has The Right Idea Regarding Charity

Another wonderful asset toward good-will building that presents itself to a theatre manager is the ever present and ever needy benefit performances. Sometimes there's no money involved. Other times there is. It may be a toy matinee, in which toys are distributed to needy kiddies. It may be a vegetable matinee, in which the proceeds are donated to charity organizations for distribution. Or again it may be just a free show that will be more than "just a free show" to the thousands of kiddies who are in the theatre for the entertainment. Such a show did Ray S. Nowitzky give recently.

As most of the CLUB members are aware, Nowitzky is the manager of the State Theatre in Reading, Pa., for the Wilmer and Vincent outfit. He tied-up with the Greater Reading Post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and secured their co-operation towards putting on a free performance for the kiddies supported by various charitable organizations in the city. Over sixteen hundred kids were invited to the show. The photo we are showing with this article gives you a picture of Nowitzky (with his hat off) and the Mayor of Reading, J. Henry Stump. The boy scouts in the front of the picture, in addition to the V. F. W.'s, were used as chaperons to take care of the youngsters.

A special show, chosen to fit the kids, was put on and you can stake your hat that they more than enjoyed the extra treats Notwitzky arranged for them. And before we go any further, may we ask you to keep the "free charity show" point in your mind and whenever you can PUT ONE ON! as it will bring a lot of joy to those kids who are not as fortunate as the majority of the American youngsters. We want to thank Ray for passing this along to us, as we feel it is a point that our members will be glad to have brought to their attention. And what's more, we're sure that action will be taken on it.

Variety Is Always To Be Seen In The Work Of C. Holmes

Here are a couple of stunts put over by our good friend, Conrad Holmes. Those persons particularly adept at picking aces from a deck of cards were giving themselves a treat to see "Street of Chance" playing at the Kettler Theatre, West Palm Beach, Fla.

During the showing of the picture on Monday and Tuesday, a young lady was stationed in the lobby with a deck of cards. A card nearby where she stood stated that persons drawing an ace from the pack of cards would be entitled to free admission on Monday and Tuesday.

This card-pulling stunt was effectively publicized and in fact, it was one of those stunts where everybody seemed to tell everybody else about it. The consequence was that Monday and Tuesday, usually the weak days of the week, did more than satisfactory business.

On "Roadhouse Nights" the lobby front, constructed of beaverboard, was entirely covered in front, allowing entrances on the sides. Across the front was the title of picture and cast with cuts of Helen Morgan and Jimmy Durante appearing just below. Between the two photos of the two characters in the picture was a cut-out where a young lady stood inside. And just underneath this aperture was copy. "Two aces in one roll wins admission." The young lady in the opening was sole judge of whether you won a ticket or not.

These "dice" chances were good for Monday and Tuesday only. And invariably when a person was lucky enough to get a free ticket he or she brought along one or two others who paid the regular admission price.

This lobby stunt stimulated the Monday and Tuesday business to a great extent.

On the sidewalk and even along the curb were beer barrels lettered with the title of picture and play dates.

The entire front presented a wholly different atmosphere than had been seen before and caused much comment which in turn reacted very favorably for the picture.

Mass Reader Interest as Well as "Class"

IN an interview published in the New York Times in September, 1926, Mr. Sidney R. Kent, executive of the Paramount Publix Corporation is quoted as follows:

"He (Kent) said that his company was serving 10,000 accounts, and that 70 per cent of the firm's income was derived from towns with a population of 15,000 or over. 'Hence,' observed Mr. Kent, '30 per cent of our business is derived from 8,800 communities which represents our profit and more. On a big production the average profit is nowhere near 30 per cent.' "

In short, then, profits accrue from the flood of small rentals—the fifty dollar bookings, the twenty-fives and the tens.

The 1,200 accounts of the 10,000 from which 70 per cent of rentals are obtained are comprised mainly of Paramount's own theatres and other large circuits. These houses buy from 52 to 100 pictures a year. And, selling to them, must mainly be done to perhaps a score or more buyers, each one of whom buys for a number of houses. But the remaining 8,800 "profit payers—and more" buy as many as 364 pictures a year and all do their own buying. Consequently, trade paper advertising that reaches these individual buyers and is READ by them is most effective and productive. And here is where the regional papers are of greatest service, for with their intimate contact, through their pages of news that is largely local, the Associated Publications have a strong reader interest, not alone with the "8,800" accounts, but with the other "1,200" as well —mass buying power as well as class!

MACK SENNETT TALKING COMEDIES

with

make us see the funny side of our own pet fads and foibles. And so your patrons not only laugh at them while on the screen, but remember them with a smile afterward.

There's a real idea in every MACK SENNETT Talking Comedy. An idea based on some vital timely subject in our crowded modern lives. Often gently satirical. Always funny.

This timely interest is one of the things that have put MACK SENNETT Talking Comedies into the greatest percentage of possible situations ever achieved by any brand of modern short feature comedies.

What is your favorite hobby? You'll find it kidded pleasantly in some MACK SENNETT Talking Comedy.

Is it golf? "MATCH PLAY" shows Walter Hagen and Leo Diegel as part of the funniest fussy foursome that ever played the links.

Is it bridge? "HE TRUMPED HER ACE" is a delightfully smart comedy on this favorite cause of modern divorce.

Is it flying? "HONEYMOON ZEPPELIN" is one of the most thrilling comedies any producer ever made—and as funny as it is thrilling.

Is it radio? "RADIO KISSES" is another ultra modern farce proving even cupid may have a broken heart.

Is it dieting? "FAT WIVES FOR THIN" will help you to laugh and grow fit even if you are in the midst of an eighteen-day starvation diet.

WE sincerely believe that PARAMOUNT'S 1930-31 ANNOUNCEMENT, contained in the following pages, is the most important from every angle that has ever been made in this business, or will be made this year.

We invite you to read it carefully. The more closely it is studied the more clearly the truth of the above statement will become apparent.

Paramount Pictures

ANNOUNCING

PICTURES FOR THE SEASON OF 1930-31

A PERSONAL STATEMENT BY
ADOLPH ZUKOR
ON NEXT YEAR'S PROSPECT

I am very optimistic about the season of 1930-31 both from the viewpoint of Paramount and of the motion picture industry in general.

I believe that exhibitors who buy pictures intelligently, manage their theatres well and merchant their shows with enthusiasm, can look forward to the most prosperous season in their history.

The progress made in sound during the past year has greatly enhanced the entertainment value of motion pictures. Thousands of new patrons have been attracted. Picture theatre attendance has increased throughout the world. This has been reflected at box offices.

How are we going to hold this larger patronage and increase it still more?

Sound no longer draws on account of its novelty. Further perfection in the quality of sound pictures must be relied upon for further increase in theatre audiences. Better pictures that meet the ever changing demands of the public, and anticipate them. Novelties, new stars. Not better pictures once in a while, but a continuous flow of them.

Paramount offers you this in the Greater New Show World program for 1930-31.

The best minds in Paramount production, distribution and theatres underwrite this group of pictures as the best possible guarantee of week-after-week prosperity in this new and greater show business in which we are all engaged.

I recommend this announcement to your earnest consideration.

Adolph Zukor

PRODUCTIONS READY, SAYS
JESSE L. LASKY
FOR RECORD B. O. BUSINESS

WE believe Paramount proved in the past season our ability to produce great box office successes to meet the changing conditions of the New Show World.

Hits like "The Cocoanuts", "The Mysterious Dr. Fu Manchu", "The Dance of Life", "Fast Company", "The Lady Lies", "Why Bring That Up?", "Welcome Danger" (a Harold Lloyd production), "The Saturday Night Kid", "Sweetie", "The Virginian", "The Mighty", "The Four Feathers", "The Laughing Lady", "The Love Parade", "The Street of Chance", "The Vagabond King", "Sarah and Son", "Honey", "Ladies Love Brutes", "The Light of Western Stars", "Paramount on Parade", "The Big Pond" and "The Texan" are examples.

The cream of our current season's product is still to come between now and August 1st.

Now comes 1930-31—an even Greater New Show World. The public will demand better pictures than ever before. Paramount is prepared.

We have geared up our physical facilities and personnel to the times. Our Hollywood studios have been enlarged to mammoth proportions. Our New York studio, located near the gold mine of Broadway talent is magnificently equipped for both features and shorts.

Such proven showmen as Walter Wanger, general manager of the production department, B. P. Schulberg as general manager of West Coast production and James Cowan as general manager of the New York studio activities, head this producing army.

Paramount today has an array of box office stars that cannot be approached elsewhere.

Established stellar personalities like Richard Arlen, George Bancroft, Clara Bow, Clive Brook, Nancy Carroll, Ruth Chatterton, Maurice Chevalier, Gary Cooper, Dennis King, Harold Lloyd, Marx Brothers, Moran and Mack, Jack Oakie, William Powell and Charles "Buddy" Rogers mean big money everywhere.

Enriching the casts of Paramount Pictures are such sterling talents as Jean Arthur, Mary Astor, Mary Brian, Virginia Bruce, Claudette Colbert (a splendid artiste of star calibre). June Collyer, Betty Compson, Marlene Dietrich (a sensational newcomer about whom the whole industry will soon be talking), Kay Francis, little Mitzi Green, Helen Kane, Jeanette MacDonald, Roberta Robinson, Ginger Rogers, Lillian Roth, Fay Wray;

William Austin, Jack Buchanan, Stuart Erwin, Morgan Farley, Stanley Fields, Skeets Gallagher, Harry Green, Neil Hamilton, Phillips Holmes, Paul Lukas, Fredric March, Cyril Maude, Frank Morgan, Warner Oland, Eugene Pallette, Charles Ruggles, Stanley Smith, Regis Toomey and many others.

Paramount will be ever alert to give you the outstanding headliners of the day from every branch of entertainment. There will be startling announcements along this line soon.

Over a score of the keenest showman-directors in the business are enrolled with Paramount.

The leading producing minds of the legitimate stage, like Schwab and Mandel, are working in Paramount's studios. The dramatic stars of the great Charles Frohman Company, in charge of Gilbert Miller, are available. In the field of radio the Columbia Broadcasting Company is affiliated with Paramount.

Stars of the Publix stage shows will appear on the screen. Following our big name policy for shorts, leading lights of Broadway such as Eddie Cantor will be seen in one- and two-reelers. Paramount Sound News, under Emanuel Cohen, will step still further ahead of the field.

Our staff of music writers is second to none.

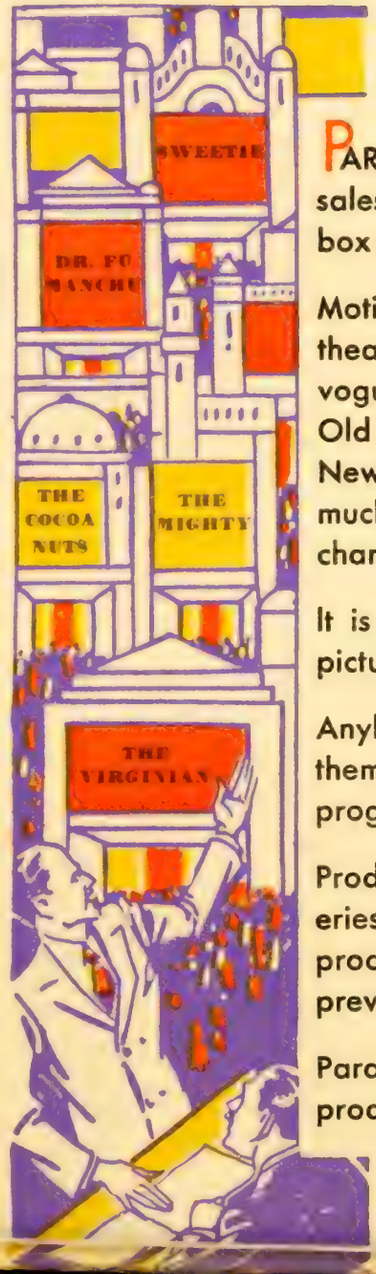
Their compositions, exploited by the Famous Music Corporation, with branches from coast to coast and abroad, mean money at box offices.

Our strong affiliations all over the world assure us the cream of foreign star and producing talent. Paramount is the one truly international institution in the industry.

Our activities in color, the enlarged screen and television guarantee you that Paramount will give you first every new development in motion pictures.

I am not going to dwell here upon the individual productions in our 1930-31 program. In the subsequent pages of this book they speak for themselves. Let me merely say that the line-up at present does not represent at all completely the great productions which we will offer you for next year. Many of those described will be further strengthened and revised, with an eye to mightier box office drawing power. New productions will be announced. This is a rapidly changing business today. The public acquires new tastes over night. We will meet perfectly new demands of these changing times as they arise.

Backed by the mighty resources and trade mark of Paramount, our producing organization as outlined above is today working at top speed to place upon screens the finest quality money product this business has ever known—the Greater New Show World Program of 1930-31.



Jesse L Lasky

IMPORTANT STATEMENT BY

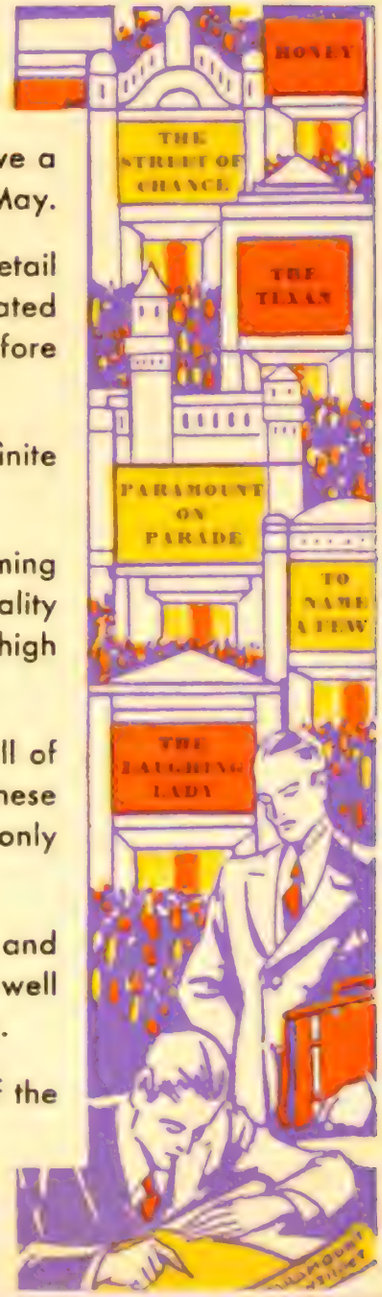
S. R. KENT

ON 1930-31 SALES POLICY

PARAMOUNT believes that with the changed conditions in the industry a modification in the sales policy followed in the past must now be made in the interest of greater quality at the box office.

Motion pictures are today a style business. Productions must be made to the current taste of theatre patrons, tastes which change rapidly and often. One month, backstage pictures are in vogue; the next month, this same type of production loses its popularity in favor of Westerns. Old line stars who seemed firmly entrenched only a few months previous pass into the discard. New favorites, like Oakie and Chevalier, appear almost overnight. Sound brings these changes much more quickly than did silent pictures. Sound is here to stay, in our opinion, and these changes in tastes will continue.

It is therefore impossible today for a producer in May to announce in every detail a group of pictures to be released during an entire year and hope to give theatres 100% hits.



Anybody who attempts in these changing times to hogtie a picture production department, force them to lay down the full details of a season's product months in advance and then stick to this program to the letter, is doing the worst possible service to theatre box offices.

Production must be left free to give you the advantage of changes in public tastes, new discoveries in sound, changes in star popularity. New faces and voices are continually coming to the fore; production must not be forced to deny them to your screens because of casts announced months previously.

Paramount owns an important group of theatres that must be protected with fine, up-to-date product at all times. This is in turn a protection for you.

PARAMOUNT WILL MEET CHANGING DEMANDS OF THEATRE AUDIENCES

IT'S more important to you as an exhibitor to get a new picture that's hot than to receive a picture after its style has passed, merely because a company announced it the previous May.

For the reasons above, we do not attempt in this announcement to describe in definite detail the entire program of pictures which we expect to release during 1930-31. We have eliminated all pictures which might look good on paper now but which might pass out of public taste before release date. We do not intend to produce such pictures.

This announcement becomes a part of any exhibition contract only insofar as it covers definite pictures announced by us at this time. It includes:

1. A large number of productions definitely to be released by Paramount during the coming season. Details are given. In many cases the picture is completed or in production. In quality and quantity the line-up must certainly impress the thinking showman with the extremely high merit of 1930-31 Paramount Pictures.

These pictures you will get if you buy Paramount now. Additional pictures will be made. All of them will meet the high quality standards of those announced. Some of them may top these standards. Interesting announcements will come later. But for the present we describe only what are now certain.

2. We offer you a list of definite stars, the biggest box office personalities in this business, and the number of pictures which each will make during the coming season. Each star has a well known box office value. We list starring pictures only where these have been finally chosen.

We further give you a list of important players of known value who will form the bulk of the casts of Paramount 1930-31 productions. They also are a guarantee of drawing power.

PARAMOUNT PRODUCT AND TRADE MARK BEST 1930-31 BUY, SAYS MR. KENT

PARAMOUNT will release a minimum of 65 pictures in the coming season. On the basis of Paramount's reputation as leader of this business, our excellent record of the past two years in sound, the information supplied on specific productions and stars in this announcement and our guarantee of 100% timely product rounding out the program, we invite you to make certain of having Paramount in the coming season by buying and reserving playing time now.

If you prefer to buy now only the portion of the product announced and take a chance on securing the remainder as it is finished, we are willing to negotiate on that basis.

We firmly believe that the pictures described in this book constitute by far the strongest line-up which Paramount or any other company has ever offered. We call attention particularly to their variety and obvious box office strength. Drama, comedy, musical comedy, outdoor productions, Westerns, the public's favorite stars — everything is here. Sound has largely divorced the children of the country from picture theatres; we give you the opportunity to rekindle their enthusiasm for movies and bring them back to you as customers with kid classics like "Tom Sawyer", "Skippy" and "Huckleberry Finn".

We are announcing what you will agree is the first complete, showman-like program of quality shorts ever offered to theatres. This program was formulated only after months of research through our own theatre organization into the public's and exhibitors' tastes in one- and two-reelers. You can sit down now and book a definite number per week and know they'll arrive as scheduled and will be quality assets to your shows.

Nothing vital to your success has been forgotten by Paramount in putting together the Greater New Show World Group. We believe these pictures and our manner of selling them are the best guarantee of your prosperity in 1930-31 that you could possibly buy.

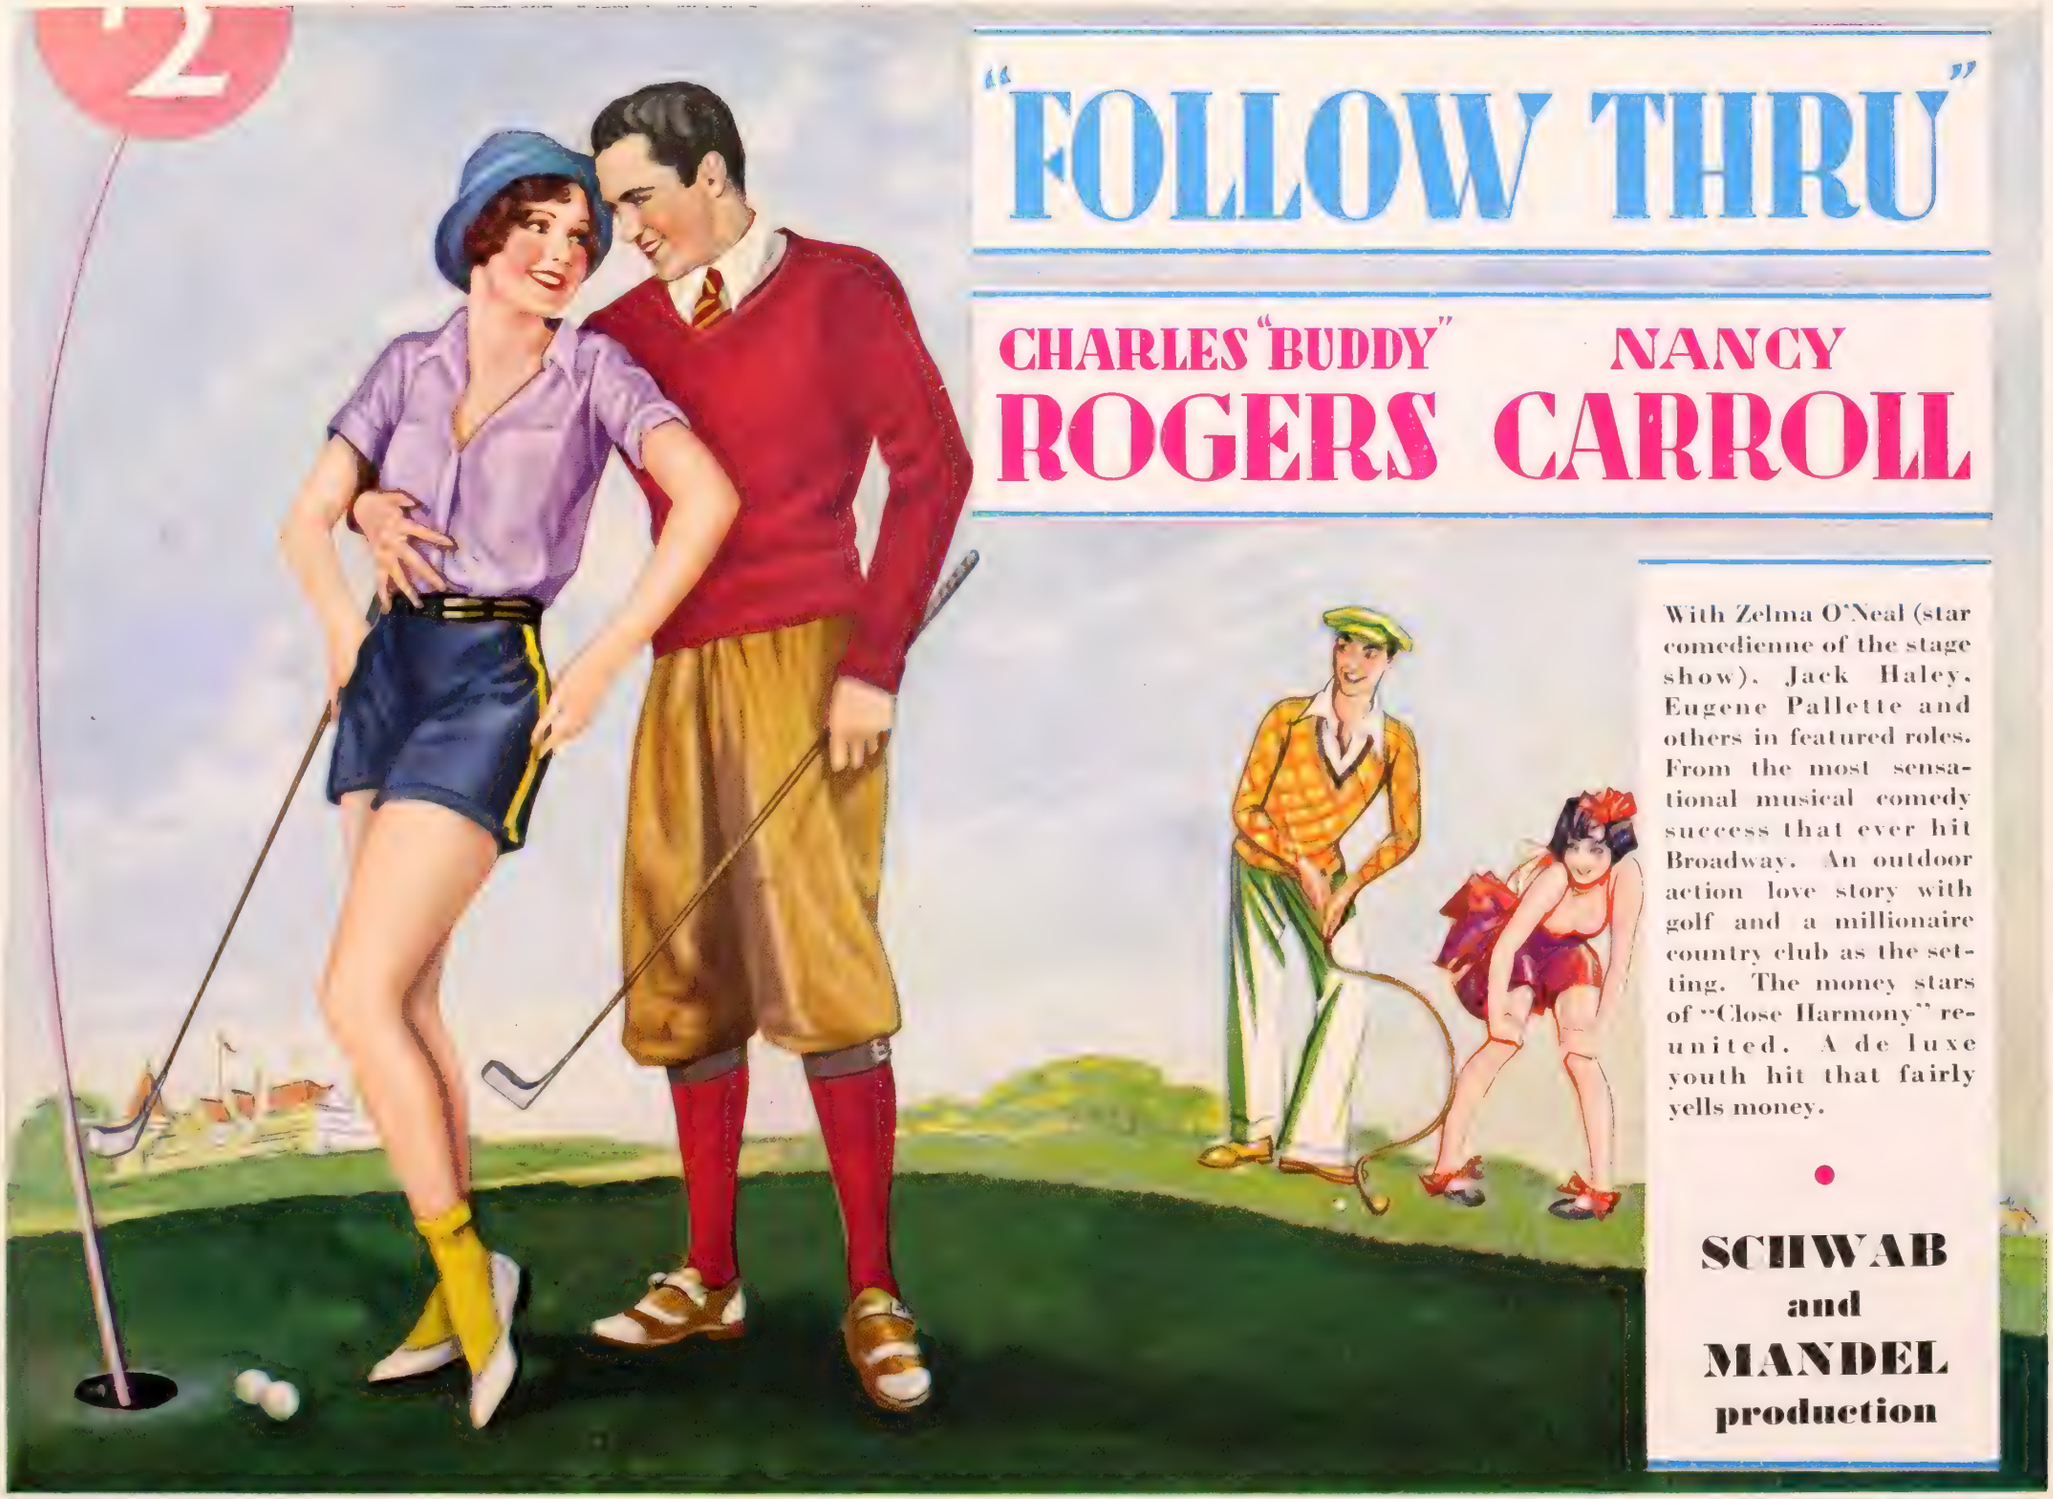
"ANYBODY'S WAR"
MORAN AND MACK
The famous blackface stage, radio and phonograph record stars who wowed screen audiences from coast to coast with their first Paramount comedy, "Why Bring That Up?"
Now back again with double the laughs and screen following. Adapted from Charlie Mack's own best selling book, "Two Black Crows in the A.E.F." With Neil Hamilton and Joan Peers making love among the grins. Directed by Richard Wallace.

GARY COOPER in an EDWIN CAREWE production

"THE SPOILERS"

Can you imagine a finer vehicle for Gary Cooper than "The Spoilers"? Rex Beach's dynamic drama of the great outdoors. Now you see the greatest fight scene in entertainment history as it should be fought! Now you hear this famous he-man masterpiece of the Alaska gold rush in all of its strength and splendor.

Gary Cooper as the brawny giant who battles the despoilers of the Yukon and conquers them. With two beautiful women — one bad, one good — fighting for his heart.



The entire world of outdoor talking pictures will take a mighty leap forward with the release of "The Spoilers."

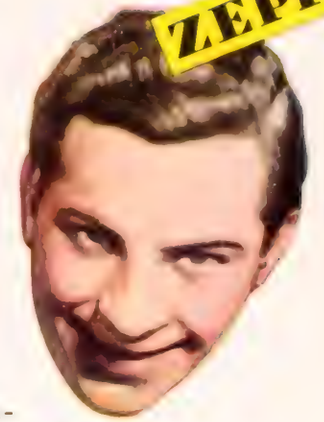
and a strong cast

by Rex Beach

"FOLLOW THRU"

CHARLES "BUDDY" ROGERS

NANCY CARROLL



With Zelma O'Neal (star comedienne of the stage show), Jack Haley, Eugene Pallette and others in featured roles. From the most sensational musical comedy success that ever hit Broadway. An outdoor action love story with golf and a millionaire country club as the setting. The money stars of "Close Harmony" reunited. A de luxe youth hit that fairly yells money.

SCHWAB and MANDEL production

THE MARX BROTHERS

STARS OF "THE COCOANUTS"

They're back again! Cocoanuttier and funnier than ever. This time in the enlarged screen adaptation of the show that brought them their most sensational stage success. You know what "The Cocoanuts" did at box offices everywhere. The public's hungry to see and hear this quartet of super-clowns again!

From the musical comedy hit by George S. Kaufman and Morrie Ryskind. Directed by Victor Heerman

"Animal Crackers"

LOVE under the warm Riviera moon. A beautiful woman running away on her bridal night. A handsome millionaire masquerading as a hairdresser. Their fates at stake on the spinning wheel of fortune.

"MONTE CARLO"

A lavish musical romance with a cast including

JEANETTE MacDONALD
JACK BUCHANAN, ZASU PITTS
and others. The lovely heroine of "The Love Parade" and "The Vagabond King". The famous hero of the Broadway musical success, "Wake Up and Dream". United under the direction of Lubitsch, maker of masterpieces.

Gambling in Hearts ..Lilting Music. Gay Adventure ..The Playground of the Rich

AN ERNST LUBITSCH PRODUCTION

CHEVALIER AS A MILLIONAIRE WAITER

The Big Personality Man in his biggest role. From the stage hit by C.M.S. McLellan and Ivan Caryll. Waiter by day, rich lover of society belles by night. Singing, spreading sunshine in the one and only Chevalier manner.

LUDWIG BERGER production

MAURICE CHEVALIER IN "THE LITTLE CAFE"

WEALTH AND BEAUTY VS. THE LAW!

"I love you—but you have flaunted society and you must pay!"

CLAUDETTE COLBERT
FREDRIC MARCH
and an exceptional cast

If there's one surefire dramatic attraction in this announcement, "Manslaughter" is it! The gripping story of a young woman so beautiful, so rich, that she thinks the world was created for her pleasure—and almost proves it. Until fate dynamites her selfishness, strips her of her power, throws her into prison! And she falls in love with the man who jailed her!

With the lovely heroine of "The Lady Lies," "The Big Pond" and "Young Man of Manhattan." Fighting and loving the hero of "Sarah and Son." Directed by George Abbott. From the famous Saturday Evening Post serial and novel by Alice Duer Miller.

"MANSLAUGHTER"

GREATEST OF ALL OUTDOORS ACTION HITS!
EVER since sound moved outdoors you've been waiting for the all-talking "Covered Wagon". Here it is! With the star of "The Virginian". Produced by the company that made "The Covered Wagon" and with the hit of that famous classic, Ernest Torrence, in an important role. Written by the most famous of Western novelists.

"TOM SAWYER"

MARK TWAIN'S IMMORTAL CLASSIC OF BOYDOM

WITH

JUNIOR DURKIN

NOW you get the children back into your theatres with a rush! Everybody from six to sixty will want to see and hear this marvelous all-talking version of Mark Twain's age-old popular "Tom Sawyer". With the new and greater Jackie Coogan, ideal for the role, making his talking debut. With Junior Durkin, amazing boy star of the stage play "Courage", as Jackie's pal, "Huckleberry Finn".

FOLLOWED BY THE FAMOUS SEQUEL TO "TOM SAWYER"

"HUCKLEBERRY FINN"

Paramount produced clean-ups for theatres in the silent versions of "Tom Sawyer" and "Huckleberry Finn". Now with bigger and better productions, perfect casts and the added magic of talk, box office records are bound to tumble!

Everybody wants to HEAR the fascinating story of "Huck" and "Tom" and "Becky" and the gang and the "Duke" and the rest of the immortal characters. Life on the old Mississippi of steamboatin' days. "Huck" a runaway on a raft. The rescue of "Jim", the slave. "Huck" attending his own "funeral". All of the unforgettable Mark Twain lore.

The Mark Twain classics in talk are sure to mop upon the screen. So is "Skippy", Paramount's other great kid production in this group. But aside from the assured success of these individual pictures, here's another important point to think about:

Talking pictures have largely divorced the child part of your audiences from your theatres. They think talking pictures are over their heads. The three productions named above, aimed at kids as well as grown-ups, will bring the children back to you. So will Paramount's fine Western action pictures. Once back, they'll stay!

CHARLES "BUDDY" ROGERS

"HEADS UP"

VICTOR MOORE and special cast

BUDDY ROGERS topping "Safety in Numbers" and his other successes in the musical comedy that enjoyed one of the longest S. R. O. runs on Broadway. Victor Moore in the role that had all New York roaring its head off. An absorbing story of a handsome young naval officer foiling a yacht-full of rum runners and winning a beautiful society girl. Sprightly tunes. Clever comedy. Breezy romance. From the Aarons and Freedley production.

"MOROCCO"

with GARY COOPER

and the flaming new sensation of the screen

MARLENE DIETRICH

A JOSEF VON STERNBERG PRODUCTION

Gary Cooper as the dashing, handsome private of the French Foreign Legion who risks everything for a luscious dance hall beauty. His most romantic role to date.

Tempestuous, exotic Marlene Dietrich, destined to be the great screen discovery of 1930, in her American debut in the "Beau Geste" of the Greater New Show World.

WINE, WIVES AND WAR!

A startling drama on a hitherto untouched subject—the beautiful, mysterious ladies who hovered just behind the battle lines. And of one lady in particular who, with a husband in the ranks, infatuated a mighty General—for a purpose. From the smashingly successful stage hit by Lajos Zilahy. With the star of "Abraham Lincoln" the "Trampas" of "The Virginian," in his greatest role.

FAY WRAY

SCREEN fans today cry for action all-talkers in sweeping outdoor settings and packed with adventure and excitement.

You can give it to them in this astoundingly unique story—and a spine-tingling dash of mystery besides.

A reckless young adventurer, deep-sea diver for precious pearls in the South Seas. A beautiful girl stowaway on his ship with him and his roughneck crew. A remote tropical island. Marvelous undersea shots of pearl divers at work. Fierce natives capture and burn the ship. Carry away the girl. From the sea emerges the hero in a diving suit—and the natives, awed, hail him as a god! Worship him while he fights suffocation. Then the miraculous escape with the girl.

From John Russell's virile mystery-love-thriller.

"DANCING MOTHERS"

Directed by
EDMUND GOULDING

Now the production genius who wrote and directed "The Trespasser" and "The Devil's Holiday" offers you his greatest dramatic effort! A big special cast will be selected from among Paramount's powerful box office names to portray this story of the reckless rich. From the stage success by Mr. Goulding and Edgar Selwyn.

When parents play, do the children pay? The answer is hurled at you with the force of a thunderbolt in this drama of a daring, courageous daughter of today. Victim of wealthy parents having their last fling at life. Fighting for her home and her own soul. A sensational drama powerful as "Sarah and Son". And laid in the gayest of settings.

DARING DAUGHTERS!

FLIRTING FATHERS!

Greatest of Outdoor Romances!

If you know show business, you've long had in mind that the famous "Rose of the Rancho" would make the greatest of all action thrillers. The play that David Belasco counted his biggest success, that enthralled all America!

Now it comes to you — with music and entirely in TECHNICOLOR. With Gary Cooper as the gallant cavalry officer who battled a whole battalion of bad men for the heart of a luscious Spanish senorita.

Breathlessly beautiful settings. Stirring action. Inspiring music. Color, beauty, reckless youth. With Rosita Moreno, the well known Shubert prima donna. Lillian Roth and Nino Martini, greatest of tenors.

WILLIAM POWELL

as Philo Vance

EUGENE PALLETTE as the dumb but very funny Detective Sergeant Heath, E. H. Calvert as the polished District Attorney. The same absorbing trio who helped make "Canary Murder Case", "Greene Murder Case" and "Benson Murder Case" such outstanding box office hits. Now you see and hear them in the most different and spine-tingling thriller of the whole series.

"SKIPPY"

SPECIAL EXTRA ATTRACTION . .

THE star and director of "The Love Parade" will join talents again in a de luxe special for Paramount in 1930-31. The subject will be of an ultra modern type.

Sparkling with the one and only Chevalier personality — his refreshing fun, warm love-making, catchy songs. Produced with all the lavish glamor, clever touches and expert polish for which Lubitsch is famous.

No two names in filmdom are better guarantees of S. R. O. than Chevalier-Lubitsch.

New York's most famous lover hurled from a hotel window into the Gay White Way at midnight!

WILLIAM POWELL IN HIS MOST EXCITING ROLE! . . .

For women, he is the most dangerous and fascinating man in New York. Suave, handsome, nimble-tongued, an accomplished lover. Nobody knows whence he comes or where he gets his millions. Yet society welcomes him like a conquering hero and society's wealthiest and most beautiful women are at his feet! A score of irate husbands and thwarted rivals plot to kill him. The startling climax rocks New York!

William Powell in a role more thrilling than "Street of Chance".

"LADIES MAN"

From Rupert Hughes' sensational Cosmopolitan Magazine serial and novel. With a cast worthy of its excellence!

Florenz Ziegfeld's

"KID BOOTS"

with

JACK OAKIE

FORE! Make way for a mighty blaze of Oakie sunshine in one of the biggest, peppiest, funniest productions in which the Big Roar Boy has ever appeared. Watch for Jack as the wise-cracking caddy master in Ziegfeld's famous show of golf, grins and girls. The ace attraction that ran over a year on Broadway and toured the U. S. for another with never an empty seat.

In "Kid Boots" you get two of the nation's crazes united — golf and Oakie! A well-known male favorite and a feminine player of prominence will enact the romantic leads. With Happy Jack helping them through the bunkers of love. Produced in a lavish country club setting.

"LET'S GO NATIVE"

starring

JACK OAKIE
JEANETTE MacDONALD

With James Hall, Skeets Gallagher, Eugene Pallette, Kay Francis, William Austin and others.

Here's the logical successor to the long string of musical comedy clean-ups that have made Paramount supreme in this type of entertainment. Enough stars for three big shows. Directed by the man who made "The Sophomore".

A gay band of Broadwayites invade a South Sea isle and outhoola the natives. At least three great songs that the whole world will be whistling. More fun than a circus.

EAST vs. WEST in "RODEO ROMANCE"

"Sweetie" goes West in search of adventure. Handsome Dick, the daredevil cowboy, falls in love with this society beauty. Amid rodeos, round-ups and wild western adventures their love is tested by fire and emerges triumphant. It can't fail but be a clean-up!

NANCY CARROLL
RICHARD ARLEN

in Mary Roberts Rinehart's popular Saturday Evening Post serial and novel. Two favorite stars in an ideal outdoor love story.

NANCY CARROLL

FREDRIC MARCH

FOLLOWING her amazing dramatic success in "The Devil's Holiday", Miss Carroll was chosen as the heroine of "Laughter", one of the most prized and most powerful roles in Paramount's entire line-up. Fredric March, leading man in "Sarah and Son" and "Manslaughter", will have the chief male part.

INNOCENT—but trapped by her past! Able to save herself by betraying the real guilty one—but swayed by a blind, unreasoning loyalty. What does this beautiful ex-Follies wife do, while the gods of chance laugh with sardonic glee and the law rushes to fasten scandal upon her? A drama of intimate headlines screaming with emotions. Story by Douglas Doty and H. D'Abbadie D'Arrast.

"THE SILENT ENEMY"

A Natural Drama... Real and Startling as "Chang" and produced in America!

Here's stark realism in talk and sound. Actually photographed in the frozen white wilderness of the Great Canadian North. By a band of intrepid adventurers who lived, and fought to live, with a tribe of Indians on a perilous 500-mile hunt to stave off starvation. A warm love story between a handsome Indian brave and a pretty maid.

ABurdenChanlerProduction.Story by W. Douglas Burden. Scenario by Richard Carver. Directed by H. P. Carver. Music by Massard Kur Zhene.

W. DOUGLAS BURDEN, well known New York society youth who wrote "The Silent Enemy" and spent a year in the wilds filming it.

PARAMOUNT CAPTURES ONE OF THE DRAMATIC PRIZES OF THE CENTURY!

"THE ROYAL FAMILY"

WITH FREDRIC MARCH AND A BIG SPECIAL CAST

FROM the S. R. O. stage triumph by George S. Kaufman (author of "The Cocoanuts", "Animal Crackers" and "June Moon") and Edna Ferber (author of "Show Boat" and "Cimarron"). A capacity hit for over a year on Broadway. A smash on the road. Reaching the full glory of its sparkling comedy and poignant drama as a Paramount New Show World super-show. With Fredric March, who rose to fame in this play on the stage, heading the cast.

NOT a costume play of royalty, but the brilliant, intimate exposé of a famous and fascinating American family of today. Ruling millions of Americans with their genius and charm. Their lives a series of explosive headlines; their loves as sensational as their wild, reckless personalities. Racing through a gamut of emotions, from roaring humor to the tenderest of pathos. If you saw the stage play, you talked about it for weeks!

NATION-WIDE STAGE SMASH . . . SURE-FIRE SCREEN HIT!

FOR over a year "Honeymoon Lane" packed 'em in on Broadway. And followed this with a record-breaking tour of the country from coast to coast. Its warm, wholesome story of the youth who won over great odds and brought his girl from temptation to "the little white house at the end of Honeymoon Lane," captivated America! Now you get it, better and more appealing than ever, with its original star.

EDDIE DOWLING IN "HONEYMOON LANE"

Book, lyrics and music by Eddie Dowling and James F. Hanley. A Sono-Art Production. Presented by O. E. Goebel and George W. Weeks.

GEORGE BANCROFT

In Two Strong Dramas

Now at the very pinnacle of his fame, George Bancroft comes to you in the two most powerful vehicles he has ever made.

Variety's annual poll reveals him the greatest drawing card on the screen today. Exhibitors and the public will confirm this impartial and carefully proven verdict.

When he-men stars and red meat drama became the vogue in the New Show World, Bancroft leaped to the front. In his line he has no rivals today—and his line supremely pleases.

A great voice, a great actor, a mighty box office magnet. Complete details of his 1930-31 starring pictures will soon be announced.

Proving first in "The Wolf of Wall Street" that he was admirably suited to the talkies, Bancroft won fresh laurels in "Thunderbolt", "The Mighty" and "Ladies Love Brutes". He is now on his way to even greater fame.

Clara Bow — slim, trim and radiant with more fire and "It" personality than ever — is out to make 1930-31 her greatest year. Her singing voice, revealed in "Paramount on Parade", and more startling new talents increase her appeal many fold.

CLARA BOW

In Four Flashing Hits

The "It" Girl, the Redheaded Riot, the Brooklyn Bonfire—whatever you call her, Clara Bow remains the most sensational feminine star bet on the screen today.

"True to the Navy" and "Paramount on Parade" reveal the new and better Clara you'll get in a quartet of Bownanzas for the coming season. The first one is practically set and full details will be given soon.

Exceptionally strong casts and star directors will be assigned to Clara. Her pictures will be in the big special class and entitled to extended run preferred playing time.

Clara's fan mail of 20,000 letters a month, biggest in Hollywood, is due for another rise!

CHARLES "BUDDY" ROGERS

Star in Three Hits

The first: "MOLINOFF" (new title coming). The tale of a millionaire who could cook as well as he could love, went broke and got a job as chef to a wealthy family. With amusing complications-including songs and a band.
